Profoundly mentally handicapped people are very severely disabled, usually as a result of a congenital handicap, brain damage at birth or impaired development before birth. They have poor co-ordination and are often immobile, cannot feed, wash, dress or toilet themselves, are often incontinent, sometimes doubly incontinent, frequently have severe loss of hearing or sight, and do not have full powers of speech. In some cases they suffer acute epilepsy, taking multiple fits in rapid succession.

Profoundly mentally handicapped people therefore need constant round-the-clock care and attention to fulfil their most basic needs. They are totally dependent on those who look after them. That total dependency must never be forgotten. The degree of care that they need makes them different from other handicapped groups in society. There are roughly 5,000 people in Scotland in that category. A cause of great concern is that accurate figures cannot be obtained, which makes it difficult to plan community care programmes.

How then are the profoundly mentally handicapped cared for at the moment? Most of them are cared for at home where, in their natural environment, they are given all the tender, loving care that their parents so selflessly offer. It is generally agreed by parents, carers, the medical profession and, indeed, the Government, that the best care for this group is given when they are living at home in their neighbourhood communities.

But the parents of profoundly mentally handicapped people need support to help them to fulfil the task which, after all, demands all the time, energy and love that they can give. They also need a sign to reassure them that their children can exist and be happy without them in another environment which will also give them love and care.

Recent years have seen an increase in respite care facilities and in the provision of support services which are so vital in allowing parents to renew the great resources of strength that their everyday routine demands. Indeed, such back-up services have proved to be a godsend to such families, offering them the lifeline that they so desperately seek.

I have witnessed the excellent work done in the area of respite care because one such project, Mitre house, is in my constituency of Glasgow, Pollok. Such facilities give parents a breathing space in which to enjoy such luxuries as taking a holiday, going to a wedding, taking their other children out for the day or attending hospital, all in the knowledge that their profoundly mentally handicapped children are safe and happy.

I have also seen the great benefits that day care facilities can bring to profoundly mentally handicapped people and their families. It is to the credit of Strathclyde regional council that it has increased the number of day care places from zero in 1976 to 200 last year. I have also seen the increase in independence, albeit it in a limited way, that creating specific places for the profoundly mentally handicapped in Strathclyde's adult training centres, such as the one in Priesthill in my constituency, can bring to this group and the accompanying relief that it gives to their families.

But those services, admirable as they are, only tinker with the problem because they are not wide enough to resolve it. The demand for services is far greater than their supply. That is in no way a criticism of the local authorities, health boards or voluntary organisations, because they all do a magnificent job within the limits of their resources. It is rather a plea for additional resources to be given to them to allow them to continue and expand their work.

There are still too many profoundly mentally handicapped people in institutions. Department of Health and Social Security allowances and day care facilities are insufficient and there are not enough community-based back-up services.

The various sectors have combined in recent years to overcome many of those problems. A typical example is the co-operation that exists between regional councils and the voluntary sector in providing residential accommodation in small locally based units. But such co-operation needs funding. Financial support must be given to provide the necessary day care facilities and to top up DHSS allowances.

The health boards are finding it difficult to cope with the demand for community-based specialist services such as speech therapy and physiotherapy. That is due to the general underfunding of the National Health Service, but it is a particularly tragic result since those services are so vital to the needs of the profoundly mentally handicapped and their families.

The Scottish Office statement of January 1987 acknowledged the need for additional local government resources, but it made no commitment to increase resources specifically for the profoundly mentally handicapped. Rather, the Government are waiting until they see the outcome of the Griffiths report for England and Wales.

Scotland's profoundly mentally handicapped cannot wait. Their plight is urgent and desperate. It is the plight of people who cannot speak for themselves. Therefore, it is our duty to plead on their behalf. With the urgency and desperation of that plea in mind, I would consequently ask the House to consider the following proposals.

First, I ask the Government to review their method of collecting information relating to the definition of being profoundly mentally handicapped. That would allow more accurate figures to be obtained, and, as a result, would allow the caring agencies to plan their community care programmes more accurately.

Secondly, I ask for the immediate release of money to local authorities to help them provide care for this group and respite care for their families. I further ask that the health board be given enough funds to allow it to meet the demands for community-based specialist services.

Thirdly, I hope that the Government will seriously consider the suggestion of Strathclyde regional council that the pitifully small DHSS residential care allowances be augmented with special rates for the profoundly mentally handicapped. Alternatively, if the Government decide to pass the full financial cost to local authorities, I ask that assurances be given that those authorities will receive the necessary funding to allow them to meet the needs of the profoundly mentally handicapped.

The way forward lies in the continued co-operation that already exists among the sectors that care for the profoundly mentally handicapped. I have already testified to the good work being done by three sectors in Strathclyde. It is echoed by similar provision being made by local authorities, health boards and voluntary organisations in other parts of Scotland. All these agencies need money to maintain existing services and to develop the new programmes of care that are so desperately needed.

I have already said that the profoundly mentally handicapped cannot speak for themselves. They do not form a powerful pressure group in today's rush-hour society, but their needs are constant, urgent and basic. Their silence is a plea for human understanding and dignity. It is a silence that compels us as a caring, Christian society to listen, to act and to give them the best that we have to offer. So I ask the House to hear the pleas of the profoundly mentally handicapped and I ask the Government to release sufficient funds to allow the continuation and expansion of the services that are so vital to the needs of these people and their families.

10.12 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Michael Forsyth): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) for raising what is clearly a most important subject. His considerable experience in local government in Strathclyde before entering this House has clearly stood him in good stead in pursuing this matter with such vigour and obvious conviction, and I congratulate him on securing this debate and on his contribution to it.

It is difficult to be precise about the numbers of people who suffer from mental handicap. At one extreme, the handicap may be so slight as to be almost undetectable to others in daily living; at the other extreme there are those who are profoundly mentally handicapped—the group which we are talking about tonight.

It is a cruel fact that people with such handicaps have severe problems, which include difficulty in communicating their wishes and feelings to those who would like to help them. For that reason, they have to rely on other people to act on their behalf, to protect their rights and promote their welfare. The hon. Gentleman makes a plea on their behalf for human dignity and understanding. I am sure no one would dissent from that and I can assure him and this House that, as a Government, we are very much alive to the needs of this group. I hope that I can make that clear tonight.

On the health side, services for the mentally handicapped were of course identified in " Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties" as being in the highest category of priority for the provision of services, and we have made clear to health boards and local authorities the emphasis that the Government wish to be placed on that priority group. It is only right that we should all do what we can to redress the balance in favour of handicapped people, and I have listened carefully to the hon. Gentleman's plea for additional funds.

We have backed up our commitment with real increases in the money available. Since 1979, gross expenditure on the NHS in Scotland has grown by about 28 per cent. in real terms. In 1979, it was £1,053 million. This year it is estimated to be £2,334 million, an increase of more than 120 per cent. in cash terms. It is a similar story for local authority expenditure on social work services, and I shall turn to that later. The profoundly mentally handicapped are receiving benefits from these increases. The hon. Gentleman has acknowledged this, but, if I may say so, in a rather negative way.

Some profoundly mentally handicapped people have particular medical problems which require that they are cared for in specialist mental handicap or general hospitals for most of the time. Others live in residential schools that specialise in education appropriate to their needs. Many profoundly mentally handicapped people live at home all their lives and are cared for by their parents with help from a number of statutory and voluntary agencies.

The hon. Gentleman laid great stress on respite care, and was right to do so. I am pleased that hospitals have also increasingly been providing respite care. Such facilities are now available in most mental handicap hospitals, as well as psychiatric and geriatric hospitals and units, and in units for the younger physically handicapped and in a number of general hospitals. This recognises that it is of the utmost importance that relatives and other carers get a break from the burdens of constant care. Profoundly mentally handicapped people living at home will be supported by the primary care health services and community mental handicap nurses.

We have long recognised a need to move towards less reliance on the long-stay institutions and the evidence is that, even for those with the most severe form of handicap, less and less is hospital seen as the best solution. The numbers of mentally handicapped people in hospital have been decreasing steadily in recent years, from 6,678 in 1979 to 5,459 in 1986. That most welcome trend is due to considerable work in the hospitals to assess, train and discharge patients and to the provision of community facilities both for former patients and for those who, not so long ago, might have been admitted to hospital. The joint planning and support finance arrangements are also making a significant contribution in the controlled move towards greater community care. However, it is important to stress that community care is not the panacea for all ills. Great care is needed to avoid discharging people from hospital before proper facilities are available for them in the community.

For some, the specialist facilities of hospital will remain the most appropriate form of care and we accept that conditions in hospitals must be improved. We have committed substantial sums to achieve that in recent years. For example, at Lennox Castle two new 12-bed intensive care wards, when fully commissioned within the next few months, will allow for the provision of care and treatment on a concentrated basis for groups of mentally handicapped people including those with profound mental handicap. Since 1979, we have provided in excess of 2,000 new and replacement mental handicap and mental illness beds, at a cost of over £60 million.

Nowhere is that provision more evident than in two of Scotland's largest mental handicap hospitals. At Lennox Castle, against a falling patient population, the Greater Glasgow health board last year opened four new 30-bed wards to replace unsatisfactory accommodation, at a cost of £2·5 million with a 20 per cent. increase in nursing staff. At the Royal Scottish national hospital over the past two years, the Government have provided the Forth Valley health board with capital resources of £2 million to carry out significant improvements in the fabric of the buildings, once more against the background of a falling patient population. Around 300 of the population live in new or upgraded accommodation, providing higher amenities and more privacy. Further improvements are under way. The health board has been successful in recruiting around 140 nurses—an increase of 25 per cent. and there have been a number of other staffing improvements at the hospital. The Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland, which had been critical of conditions at both these hospitals, has now publicly acknowledged the improvements which have been made.

The improving levels of care and services which profoundly mentally handicapped people are receiving in hospital or otherwise under the NHS are only part of the story. Happily, many handicapped people are able to remain in the familiar surroundings of their own homes. The hon. Gentleman has paid tribute to those carers and I too have the greatest admiration for the dedication of families and other carers in looking after seriously handicapped people.

In looking at the care of the mentally handicapped in the community, perhaps I could turn first to education. Though not mentioned in detail by the hon. Gentleman it has long been recognised that even profoundly mentally handicapped children are capable of benefiting from education.

It is clearly important that special needs should be discovered and addressed as early in the child's life as possible. Education authorities may therefore start making appropriate provision for a handicapped child, even when he or she is below school age. A contribution in helping to identify such children whose difficulties may not always be immediately apparent will commonly be made by doctors, health visitors and social workers. That is typical of the co-operative and collaborative effort that is encompassed throughout community care.

There were, at the last count, 1,070 profoundly intellectually impaired children or young persons at school, of whom 808 attend special schools. That represents just over 10 per cent. of those children recorded as having special educational needs. The money provided for special education needs in 1987-88 amounted to £59·5 million. Next year it will be increased substantially, by some 18·5 per cent., to £70 million.

While many parents of profoundly mentally handicapped children may wish to have their children living with them at home once they leave school, there will be some for whom that will not be possible. In the past, admission to hospital has been the only available choice in most cases, but the position has changed in recent years as the "Balance of Care" study published a year ago shows.

The move towards care in the community is being brought about in a number of different ways. Local authorities themselves are devoting a larger proportion of their budgets to services for the mentally handicapped—5·5 per cent. in 1979-80 as against 7·8 per cent. in 1986-87 — but the budgets themselves are larger, as overall resources which we have made available have grown substantially in the past eight years. The planning figure for social work current expenditure in 1988-89 is 36 per cent. greater in real terms than in 1979-80 and 5·5 per cent. above authorities' own budgets for social work services in 1987-88.

Although there has been a substantial move away from the provision of fully staffed residential accommodation for those who are mildly or moderately mentally handicapped, some residential facilities are still being developed on a more traditional model. Those are undoubtedly serving a purpose for more severely mentally handicapped persons by allowing them to sustain their lives in the community in an environment which is fully supportive of their needs.

However, it is in the expanding field of day care that significant strides are being made in the development of community services for the care of mentally handicapped people. Day care, as well as allowing some respite, can provide much- needed scope for mentally handicapped people to develop skills and gain a sense of achievement in a variety of activities. In 1986, local authorities provided 6,542 day care places as against 4,387 in 1979, an increase of some 50 per cent. The voluntary sector also makes a valuable contribution as the hon. Gentleman said, providing a further 450 places.

Local authorities have increased the amount of residential provision for mentally handicapped persons which they make at their own hand, from 594 places in March 1979 to 865 places in 1986. There has also been a marked increase in the amount of accommodation provided by the voluntary sector. The number of places in voluntary establishments registered by the local authority has increased from 493 to 712 in the same period, but the range of accommodation which can meet needs extends to group homes and a variety of supported accommodation, including many schemes provided by housing associations. Together they make a sizeable contribution to housing in the community for the handicapped with over 460 units as at December 1987.

Mr. Brian Wilson (Cunninghame, North): If the Minister is so concerned—I am sure he is—about the care of the mentally handicapped, can he tell us why he and his colleagues insist that the mentally handicapped should pay the poll tax? Does he not think that it runs contrary to the philosophy he is espousing? It has been confirmed in written answers to me that as soon as the mentally handicapped are released into care in the community they will be liable for the poll tax. How on earth can that be justified? Will it not be a severe deterrent to people who are trying to rehabilitate the mentally handicapped in the community to find that they will be hammered by the poll tax on top of everything else?

Mr. Forsyth: I regret having given way to the hon. Gentleman. He will know that the proposed community charge is subject to a rebate scheme. He will also know that the severely mentally handicapped are exempt from the community charge. It is another example of the hon. Gentleman's attacks on the community charge, which seem to be based on a lack of information about what we propose.

Mr. Wilson rose——

Mr. Forsyth: I will not give way to the hon. Gentleman again.

Not all the schemes to which I referred are designed to cater for the profoundly mentally handicapped, and there is still a need for additional residential accommodation. In that connection, I welcome the opening recently of a number of voluntary sector establishments. For example, the Fred Martin project for multiple and profoundly handicapped people is an inter-agency venture run by Barnardo's which has enabled some 16 people to be removed from hospital and accommodated in ordinary domestic-sized premises. Another, run by the Scottish Society for Autistic Children, is Balmyre house in Alloa —a residential hostel providing 24 places for young adults suffering from autism.

I very much agree with the positive things that have been said by the hon. Member for Pollock tonight about respite care. It is an area of growing interest in social work, not just for the mentally handicapped but for the whole range of clients whose care is provided in their own homes or elsewhere in the community. The role of residential accommodation in meeting respite care needs is recognised and the voluntary sector has a major role, as witnessed by such organisations as Crossroads, in the care of the physically handicapped.

While the main funding responsibility for local social work services rests with local authorities, developments in respite care have been made possible in some cases such as Mitre house run by the archdiocese of Glasgow to which the hon. Member for Pollock referred, with financial support from the Government through the urban programme.

Other bodies have been helped through a special programme of grants recently provided by us. Of the various projects which received grant aid for three years through the care in the community initiative commenced in 1985, four were for the mentally handicapped. Over the three years, the projects will have received some £165,000. In practical terms they have brought short-term respite care to 15 families in Dunfermline; helped extend day care in Skye; provided the opportunity for mentally handicapped people in Glasgow to live away from their families for short periods; and helped a number of people in Edinburgh into supported accommodation.

I should also mention the action taken within the past few weeks to help another five projects get under way by offering capital grants totalling about £150,000. Much of this relates to the cost of converting and fitting out accommodation. Some of the projects will provide residential accommodation in the community, and others —the hon. Gentleman will be delighted to hear this— will provide respite care facilities.

We have had an interesting and, I hope, useful debate this evening on this important area of the National Health Service and local authority activity. We have heard also of provision outwith these areas by families and the voluntary sector. It is to the hon. Gentleman's credit that he has chosen to highlight the needs of these disadvantaged people and their carers. In my response, while I was, perhaps, not able entirely to satisfy the hon.

[Mr. Forsyth]

Gentleman's questions, I hope that I have demonstrated that care and services for the profoundly mentally handicapped are generally being provided at an appropriate level, and that where improvements can be made these are being addressed. I have noted the hon. Gentleman's view that planning would be facilitated by better statistical information. There are difficulties, but I shall certainly look at this matter to see whether any improvements might be practicable and I am grateful to him for making the suggestion.

I have also noted the hon. Gentleman's reference to difficulties with regard to provision of speech therapists and physiotherapists. As recently as 22 February I met COSLA to discuss this very matter, and I agreed at that meeting to take up the matter with health board chairmen. I shall be doing so when I meet them on 18 March. Perhaps I could mention that in the NHS we have managed to increase the numbers of speech therapists by 32 per cent., and physiotherapists by 28 per cent. since 1979.

We continue to pursue the move from hospital care to community care, where proper facilities are available. To those who say, "Do more," I point to the considerable improvements that have already been made, and to the substantial increases in funding that we have given to the NHS and to local authorities so that services can be maintained and further improved for this important group of people and their carers.

Mr. Dunnachie: May I thank the Minister for his reply to me, but say that he leaves me somewhat baffled. The group that I am talking about are the Cinderellas, those with mental illness. They have little or no help. I am surprised when you tell me this, as I know for a fact that when we talk about——

Enterprise Initiative

9.35 am

Mr. Nigel Forman (Carshalton and Wallington): I beg to move,

That this House recognises the importance of design, quality, marketing and manufacturing systems among the key issues which influence the competitiveness of British industry, and welcomes the policies of the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department for Enterprise, to promote greater attention to these factors in businesses both through the Enterprise Initiative and other measures.

It is my purpose to give hon. Members an opportunity to debate the enterprise initiative of this Government, especially those aspects of it that are intended to encourage better design, quality, marketing and manufacturing systems. The imperative for doing that is to be found in the need for our firms to compete in increasingly competitive national and international markets. Happily, the best firms in this country know that and have made great strides in recent years, which have been demonstrated by what has been achieved so far in improved performance, productivity and competitiveness.

However, there is still some way to go, by international standards, before all our firms, large and small, join these welcome improvements. For example, I am sure that the House is pleased to hear that manufacturing productivity in the fourth quarter of 1987 was more than 6 per cent. up on a year before, and up by more than 40 per cent. since 1979. Manufacturing profitability has risen every year since 1981, and in 1986 was at its highest level since 1973. Manufacturing output per head has grown faster in the United Kingdom since 1980 than in all other major countries, and even unit labour costs, which for so long were one of our principal problems in maintaining our international competitiveness, are now thought to be rising at a lower rate than those of our competitors.

All this is satisfactory evidence of movement in the right direction. In the future, we shall be able to maintain and improve our competitive edge only if we continue to improve our competitiveness in both price and non-price factors. A recent Design Council publication reported two pieces of interesting evidence in support of that assertion. The first was that an analysis of the different factors affecting the export of West German goods to the United States revealed that 47 per cent. were design-related, as compared with 28 per cent. that were price-related. So the design factor was by far the most important.

Another study of the reasons why British manufacturers bought foreign machine tools rather than British ones attributed 51 per cent. of the cause to design-related factors and only 5 per cent. to price-related ones. I therefore want to turn my attention to the crucial area of design.

The Design Council states in one of its excellent documents, entitled "Profit by Design":

"Good design is not an optional extra — it is a vital ingredient in the success of any firm. To grow or even to survive British industry must offer products which can compete in quality, performance, cost and appearance in increasingly competitive world markets."

Our foreign competitors have known and practised that gospel for some time. For example, the Danish electronics firm Bang and Olufsen manufactures and sells beautiful hi-fi equipment in this country and other parts of the world. The German motor manufacturers Porsche, BMW and Audi in their various ways have made their products into quality, even cult, items through their excellent design. We have all heard the famous advertising slogan "Vorsprung durch Technik". That slogan brings a wry smile to people's lips, but it also makes a statement about the product and the way it is perceived. Such statements can be convincing in the eyes of the public only if they are based on good design and sound performance.

We should also consider the Japanese camera and optical equipment firm Canon which happens to have its United Kingdom headquarters in my constituency. Canon has led the world with its SLR and compact cameras and now leads the world with its small tabletop photocopiers and other business equipment. Those are a few examples of firms whose success in the international market has been based on good design, among other vital factors.

Fortunately, the need for better design in British products has been recognised at the highest level in this country. Long before the latest enterprise initiative which my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry was so right to launch earlier this year, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, doubtless as a result of the tireless efforts of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs, gave the lead by chairing a seminar on design at 10 Downing street in January 1982. Many hon. Members will be aware that it was followed by another seminar in January 1987 to monitor the progress and give further impetus.

The Design Council, first as the Council of Industrial Design from 1944 to 1972, and latterly in its present role, has played a valuable part in keeping the flag flying for the improvement of British design in all its forms. I submit that we need to do still more in every way to spread the best design practices throughout our industrial sector and especially among small firms which, if we define them as companies with 500 or fewer employees, constitute roughly 95 per cent. of firms in this country.

Mr. Paddy Ashdown (Yeovil): Is the hon. Gentleman suggesting that the definition of a small firm should be one with 500 or fewer employees? Is he aware that many people regard even the Bolton definition of 200 employees as being vastly in excess of what it ought to be?

Mr. Forman: I am aware of that. I thought that my comments might take the hon. Gentleman by surprise. However, a cut-off point of 500 employees is used in relation to enterprise counselling and other services available from the Department of Trade and Industry. That is why I used that figure. However, I accept the hon. Gentleman's point that a layman's definition of a small firm may be considerably smaller than one employing 500 employees.

Much that is happening in this area is being stimulated by the Government. I welcome the assistance available from the DTI for consultancy arrangements on the design and development of new products and the redesigning of existing products to meet market, financial or production needs. It is important that firms should constantly assess and renew the quality of design, even when they believe that they have a market lead. These things do not remain static. I particularly welcome the fact that, since its inception in 1982, the support for design scheme has attracted nearly 7,000 applications for assistance, and 3,000 projects have been completed. I suggest that we need to generalise the best practice to ensure that it is taken on board throughout British industry among both large and small firms.

Perhaps one simple example will do more than anything else to illustrate my case. It is all too easy for arguments to become a little too abstract. As I recently bought a new jug kettle, I speak from experience in this matter. Indeed, I am well aware that my example illustrates the benefits of good design and I can vouch for the aesthetic appeal and effectiveness of the design. My example concerns a jug kettle, which, Mr. Speaker, you may have in your home or in your Apartment in the Palace of Westminster. The kettle is manufactured by GEC Redring. Approximately 65 per cent. of British households own a plastic jug kettle yet 15 years ago they did not exist. That shows the importance of innovation and design. According to a Design Council document "Profit by Design",

"Redring supplied elements to kettle manufacturers and did not manufacture complete kettles. But the company decided to buy a conventionally shaped kettle made out of plastics and developed it to a satisfactory level of reliability. Being non-automatic, the profits were small and it was stopped after a year in which much valuable experience of plastic kettles had been gained. However, a London industrial designer"— and here comes the element of design—

"David Harris, was working independently on a design for a plastic jug kettle and had approached all the potential manufacturers to try to interest them in producing the new kettle design.

Redring Managing Director, Mike Johnson and Max Byrd, Development Manager, saw the advantages—a jug kettle can be filled with less than half an inch of water which can save up to £40 a year in electricity bills; it handles and pours better; plastic is much lighter and does not burn the user; perhaps most importantly, in the long run, the plastic jug kettle costs less to produce.

So Redring bought the rights to the design. Said Byrd, 'it was frightening and exciting at the same time—we had to start from scratch because there was no other kettle like it.' Development took about a year—no complete prototypes were able to be made so tooling took place straight off the drawing board.

The Redring kettle was launched in 1980. Within two years the company had 15 per cent. of the kettle market."

I quote that example at some length to show what can be done through a combination of imagination and determination with a simple product. Often the simple products most need the benefits of good modern design.

However, if we are to succeed in changing attitudes towards design throughout British industry, we will need to ensure that more managers understand that good design must be an integral part of the whole manufacturing process and that well-designed products sell better and can also be cheaper to produce.

That underlines the need to educate existing managers about the importance and value of good design and to ensure that design forms an important part of school and business management education. We must ensure that design is included in the national curriculum being developed by the Department of Education and Science and that it is more widely accepted as a subject for A-level examinations.

The educational aspect of the problem poses a triple challenge. First, more design studies should be incorporated into business management courses, beyond the six schemes now funded by the DTI at five polytechnics and one college of further education. Secondly, we must increase business awareness among design students at degree level. Finally, we must plug the most serious gap in our educational provision in this area—the shortage of multidisciplinary product designers and design managers of the kind now being produced in only woefully small numbers in this country by Imperial College and the Royal College of Art in their pioneering course on industrial design engineering.

Happily, I believe that I am pushing at an open door. I take great comfort from the comments made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he opened a recent exhibition at the Design Centre in London. He made clear the direction in which the Government intend to raise the awareness of design in education still further. He drew attention to a £1·5 million initiative for pilot courses in engineering design in polytechnics and colleges and referred to the preparation of a consultative document on design in schools and mentioned action to improve the supply of craft design and technology teachers in schools. He said that recruitment to CDT teacher training courses—for which a new Government bursary is available—increased, I am glad to say, by 65 per cent. last year and 382 students enrolled on courses in the autumn of 1986, compared with only 231 in 1985. Clearly, we are making good progress in that direction, but we need to move further and faster, because it is vital to our competitive success.

It is a most welcome development that British industry is now putting much greater emphasis on quality. That is an increasingly important factor in maintaining and improving our international competitiveness and it should be an integral part of all manufacturing. As a chapter of the White Paper on the enterprise initiative points out, it is vital to encourage and improve quality and ensure that this is done through British standards and, increasingly, through international standards institutions as well. The fundamental insistence on quality must become part of the ethos of all firms. It must be built into their design and components and into the attitudes of their work force, from top to bottom. For many German and Japanese firms it is a corporate philosophy—almost a way of life. It would be good to see British firms following that lead.

I welcome the fact that the Government are playing their part with the national quality campaign, which has been going since 1983. I entirely agree with the Secretary of State's remarks in a recent document entitled "The Case for Quality":

"The inescapable message from all this is that if you want your customers to come back, you need to ensure that your products don't."

Once again, we can learn from the Japanese and the Germans, who often achieve companywide commitment to quality and manage to involve all their employees in their quality campaigns.

An excellent example of what can be achieved by the application of quality cost management is provided by Mullard, part of the Philips group, which has factories in Blackburn and, incidentally, in my constituency. Mullard has concentrated effectively on the application of quality cost management and applied it in producing tungsten filaments, picture tube cathodes and video discs. For the expenditure of small sums—the timely investment of not more than tens of thousands of pounds in each case—Mullard has managed to achieve terrific results, which prove absolutely that attention to quality and the upgrading of quality in existing products is the right answer for modern firms in a competitive environment. It pays off handsomely in terms of reduced costs, extra business and improved job satisfaction for employees, which also should not be underestimated. If one involves all employees in the upgrading of quality, they will become more fully committed to the standard of the product that they produce.

In better marketing, too, there are great opportunities for British industry to increase its competitiveness and market share both at home and in the export markets. Indeed, improved marketing is the next logical stage in the improvement of company performance, now that the necessary manning reductions, efficiency improvements and better industrial relations have been achieved in many cases. I therefore warmly welcome the marketing initiative, which is managed for the Department of Trade and Industry by the Institute of Marketing and which provides expert consultants to help firms to develop a more effective marketing strategy especially in export markets.

I understand that so far the financial support for the marketing initiative has trebled over the space of a few years to £6·25 million a year and that 1,400 companies have already taken advantage of the scheme. That is good news and my hon. Friend the Minister and his Department are to be commended for their contribution to our commercial success.

Schemes such as the marketing initiative can help companies with better presentation of their products, bring home to them the advantages of greater product differentiation and emphasise to management and all who work in British companies that, ultimately, the customer must be king. The success stories of companies that have adopted that approach—without any need for external stimulus—include some examples well known to the House, such as Amstrad computers and Clark's shoes, and we must encourage more of the same. One of the most important common denominators in all marketing success is firms' ability to look ahead and make full use of well-informed market projections such as those produced by the Henley Centre for Forecasting.

In the modern world in which the customer is king, it is vital for companies to have a clearer idea of new processes as well as new products and to spot the fact that consumer markets are increasingly defined in terms of community of interest rather than community in the geographical or class sense. Examples include the hi-fi community, the water sports community and the personal computer community. How many firms fully realise the potential for financial services and financial counselling now that as many as 75 per cent. of the population have a bank account? It is estimated by the Henley Centre that over the next 10 years real personal disposable incomes may increase by a further 20 per cent. The opportunities for the management of those new income flows will be considerable.

In such a rapidly changing commercial environment the firms that look ahead will stay ahead, while those that fail to do so will decline and may even go under. Let me give a few examples to illustrate that. McCarthy and Stone saw the opportunities to provide for the aging population much more effectively and has benefited accordingly. Securicor saw opportunities to provide better security in times, alas, of increasing crime. Black and Decker saw the enormous opportunities provided by the DIY revolution and Beechams saw the possibility of turning Lucozade and Ribena—with the help of Daley Thompson—into drinks for the rapidly expanding health market.

Those examples show the importance of identifying and taking market opportunities and also how much can be done even without Government help, let alone with the backing of the schemes about which I am sure the Minister will tell the House later.

Finally, we need new manufacturing systems such as computer-aided design, robotics and other new methods of production management, which can all help to produce significant improvements in the competitive performance of British industry. As computers become relatively cheaper and better understood, it should be possible to encourage their wider application, especially in smaller companies. That will not only enhance the efficiency of production processes, but will encourage management to think through the challenges of businesses in a more systematic way. It should also have a beneficial effect on the suppliers and components manufacturers for large firms that have already computerised and automated their processes. The White Paper makes it clear that the adoption of such techniques is not simply a matter of buying in the technology; it is at least as much about changing management systems to integrate production, marketing and design and to improve quality.

In a sense, I have come full circle. Since the central message of the White Paper and all the Government's excellent efforts to foster enterprise and competitiveness in British industry is that we have now entered an era in which quality and the skills of management, acting in fruitful co-operation with fellow employees, will, more than anything else, determine the economic success of firms in this country. I commend my hon. Friend the Minister and his Department for all that they are doing, but I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that, in the end, it is up to British industry to do more of what must be done.

9.58 am

Mr. Paddy Ashdown (Yeovil): I apologise to the House and to the Labour and Government Front Benches for the fact that I may have to leave rather earlier than I had hoped and therefore may not hear the winding-up speeches.

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): Is the new party coming apart already?

Mr. Ashdown: The hon. Gentleman will know that we all have constituency duties outside the House and have to drag ourselves away from time to time, much as we might prefer to be here.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on having secured the debate and chosen an extremely important subject. In the early part of his speech, he gave the official Government view and painted a rosy picture of the British economy. He talked about increasing competitiveness and unit labour costs. He failed—I understand why—to ascribe those developments in large measure to their real cause, which is the enormous exercise in the removal of manpower and growing unemployment in Britain. Nevertheless, I admit that efficiency in unit output has improved, but not enough to make Britain more competitive compared with our key European competitors, who have improved even faster. That is shown too clearly in the falling level of our share of world trade and, more than that, in our enormous and burgeoning trade deficits. I shall certainly touch on those matters, although the hon. Gentleman did not, because they are the underlying problems of the British economy. Many external commentators agree with me that those problems will come home to roost in short order.

To start on an optimistic note, the Government have done one or two things that needed to be done. I am not prepared to say that they have done nothing useful for Britain. That would be ludicrous. Their greatest achievement has been the democratisation of the trade union movement, ensuring that the government of Britain is returned to the democratically elected Parliament. That should not be reversed. Their second greatest achievement has been to set Britain on the road towards a much more enterprise-oriented economy, which will depend more on small business men, the self-employed, initiative and enterprise. Indeed, they have not been radical enough in pursuit of that aim.

One of the Government's great faults was apparent in the hon. Gentleman's speech when he defined small businesses as those with 500 employees or fewer. That is ludicrous. The Government have too readily understood the problems of large businesses and have been too ignorant of the genuine problems of extremely small businesses of one, two or three people, where assistance has always been provided to help with the initial set-up — that is commendable in itself — but where real assistance is required at the point of expansion when a business decides to double the number of its employees. That is the point when the prosperity that the business can generate and the jobs that it can provide receive a quantum leap, and at that point there is nothing except the business expansion scheme, welcome though it is. Far too much emphasis is put elsewhere.

The move towards an enterprise economy is to be welcomed, although it has not gone far enough, and for that reason this document, so far as it addresses that problem, is welcome. The rhetoric and hype are unexceptionable, but one must ask whether it is all that Britain needs now. One comes ineluctably to the conclusion that it is much more about public relations and hype than about tackling the underlying problems of the United Kingdom economy. Except for the stimulation of enterprise, the improvement in design, and new technologies, the underlying problems are not addressed.

What are those problems? We look at the rosy picture of the British economy of the hon. Gentleman and of the Government and we begin to see a picture of a wholly different hue. Since 1979 one fifth of our industrial base has been wiped away. It will not come back; it has been destroyed from the face of the map. Obviously, the world economy has passed through a period of restructuring, and no one would doubt that. I do not lay all the blame on the Government. But a Government with any kind of industrial strategy for the future have a medium-term financial strategy, so why not an industrial strategy? I am suggesting not an indicative plan, such as the Labour party would have put forward in the 1970s and may even put forward now, but one that will point the way to the future and help us to overcome that period of restructuring as other western European industrial democracies have. In the free market system with its hands-off, know-nothing and do-not-care-less approach we have lost one fifth of the industrial base on which our industry will always depend. However great the growth in the service sector, the service industries depend in large measure on an industrial base and feed off it, as United States' experience shows clearly. Whatever shift in growth there may be, the decline of our industrial base is deeply damaging.

Mr. Forman: To put his case in perspective, will the hon. Gentleman concede that the problems of industrial adjustment and restructuring, which involve the decline of some parts of the traditional manufacturing sector and the arrival of other new manufacturing processes, has been going on in all western industrial countries?

Mr. Austin Mitchell: Not at this pace.

Mr. Ashdown: Indeed so, but, as the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) says, not at this pace. The regrowth of a new industrial base has not been assisted, and I am thinking of the new technologies. The hon. Gentleman and I will agree that we must move to a low resource use and high value added economic base. That means using new technologies. But we have seen the deficit in new technology trade grow to astronomical proportions in the past eight years. It is now running at about £3 billion a year. There is no evidence that those key strategic new technologies which we shall need to make the shift that the hon. Gentleman suggests are growing. The deficit shows that only too clearly. One of the brave statements in the document is:

> "The starting point of our strategy—one which I have called our enterprise strategy in the White Paper—is the need for business to succeed against world competition."

We are doing appallingly badly. Our trade deficit must cause serious anxiety, even to the Government whose predilection is these matters is to close their eyes and pretend that problems are not there. In 1980, we had a £1,361 billion surplus in trade; last year we were heading towards a £9·5 billion deficit. That is a shift of £11 billion in the past six years. Even in the new technologies, where we must do well to succeed, that deficit is as bad, if not worse.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): Does the hon. Gentleman accept that, nevertheless, our official reserves are at their highest level ever?

Mr. Ashdown: Of course, I am not saying that. Indeed, Britain has invested huge sums overseas. The hon. Gentleman knows as well as I that that has much more to do with the happenstance and luck of North sea oil and its effect on the British economy than any other underlying strength of our industrial and economic base outside the oil sector.

We should be seeing some action from the Government which will stimulate the long-term investment, which Britain lacks so badly, of patient money, such as occurs in Japan. Of course, it does not produce a return inside the year that the City operates, nor does it unhinge stocks and shares because it causes a temporary downturn in accounts produced at the end of the year. We need to think about the strategic new technologies and about producing some stability in our exchange rate by joining the EMS.

The second major problem not addressed in the document is the terrible imbalance between the prosperous and pampered south-east, which is undoubtedly doing extremely well, and the other areas, which have largely been left out in the cold. The Government have unstitched and unpicked any concept of a regional policy. These factors come out clearly. Yesterday from the Library I got the figures for investment in venture capital to see what the regional disparities were. They are startling. I discovered that on the latest figures available 63·7 per cent. of all venture capital is now invested in the south-east. There is not a region, save only the north, which even gets into double figures. Actually, the north is just over double figures. About 11 per cent. of all venture capital is invested in the north. Obviously, that is welcome. However, in Wales the figure is 2·6 per cent.; in the south-west it is 4·9 per cent.; and only 5 per cent. of all venture capital has been invested in the midlands—an area that has been more devastated than any other by the economic and industrial restructuring to which the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington referred.

There is nothing in the document to begin to redress that. One cannot see signs of any effort by the Government to begin to have a programme to encourage industry and to give economic strength to other areas of Britain. The south-east of our nation is doing very well, but the rest of our nation is not. That imbalance cannot be continued without serious damage to our economy and perhaps to our social cohesion as well.

I turn next to what the Government say is their underlying strategy—their rhetoric about competition. I agree with that rhetoric and believe strongly that competition in the market place is absolutely vital. I believe that market forces should run the economy rather than the Government control it in minute detail. Indeed, the general view could be, "The market where possible, the state where necessary."

However, do we see that rhetoric of competition in the Government's actions? One can find it in the words in the document, but what actually happens? Let us take, for example, a public sector corporation such as British Telecom. Did the Government privatise that in a way that would encourage competition? Of course not. They converted a public monopoly into a private monopoly to assist their friends. When we consider what the Government have been doing about British Airways and British Caledonian, do we see that they have opted for a competitive approach? Of course not. We see a conglomeration of large elements in the market place, and that is anti-competitive. One finds the same with the privatisation of British Gas and in the Government's approach to the British Petroleum-Britoil affair.

Time and again, when the Government are given the opportunity to encourage competition, they opt for the larger semi-monopolistic forces in the market place, instead of generating real competition. Even in the case of the larger corporations——

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley) rose——

Mr. Ashdown: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman later.

Even in the case of the larger corporations, where one can see that in the interests of the consumers, the setting up of watchdog bodies might be able to control the huge insensitive corporations, such as the privatised BT, the watchdog bodies are created in a manner which makes them almost totally toothless. However I agree with the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington that the consumer is a vital element and I should like the market place to be run by the individual choice of the consumer rather than by the power of the monopoly producer, of the mass producer and supplier.

Mr. Riddick: Can I assume, from what the hon. Gentleman has said, that he wholeheartedly welcomes the way in which the Government propose to privatise electricity in this country?

Mr. Ashdown: The hon. Gentleman asks a question, so I shall give him a straight answer. No, I do not wholeheartedly welcome it. Just because I expound a principle, that does not mean that I therefore ascribe to the total detail of what the Government do in any particular case. The hon. Gentleman might have asked me the same question about BT, and my answer to him would have been no, because the privatisation was not competitive. However, if one intended to privatise the electricity industry, there could be a case for keeping the grid in national hands and then having privatisation of suppliers feeding into the grid. If we are to achieve competition, I believe that that is the way we shall do so. Creating a situation where one body has 70 per cent. of the market, and the rest 30 per cent., is not competitive. Indeed, that is creating sharks and minnows in the market place, which is exactly the opposite to what I believe should happen, and to what it seemed to me that the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington might have been proposing.

I move on to a subject on which I have already touched briefly——

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): The House should not allow the hon. Gentleman to get away with his comments about toothless watchdogs, because we recently had a prime example of Oftel drawing the attention of British Telecom to its chat lines and abuses of them. If being bitten by a toothless dog results in one taking pretty prompt action, I think that such watchdogs are effective.

Mr. Ashdown: The hon. Gentleman has chosen the one area in which they have been effective. I shall be more generous to Oftel because it has tried hard to do a good job within the constraints. Over the issues of Talkabout programmes and telephone boxes, on which it has recently done a good job, that watchdog has been effective. However, there are many other areas. I suggest that we would not have got into this powerless situation with regard to the inefficiencies and inadequacies of BT if Oftel had had the power to operate much earlier. The fact that it has now been able to operate does not mean that the organisation is perfect. Indeed, in different circumstances that situation may not have occurred. Anybody, including those inside Oftel, would agree that some of its powers are inadequate to the task of controlling what is a huge private monopoly.

I move on to another besetting problem on which I have touched previously. I refer to the short-termism which runs the British economy and which certainly runs the investment sector. One sees, hears and reads about that time and again in the City of London—a place where young men earn £120,000 or £130,000 per year when they are not yet 30, on the basis of a turnaround and profits shown in the portfolio of their stocks, measured over a week. In that situation, Britain is manifestly not making what I have already described as those patient money investments to bring on the new technologies in a manner that would return investment to the nation in the years to come. Instead there is a candyfloss, hamburger-style economy in which, if one cannot make a profit inside a year, one had better not continue the operation. In such a situation, the stocks and shares of any given company will fall according to what the published accounts say because people are making snapshot decisions instead of looking underneath to discover whether the company is making long-term investments. Indeed, all too frequently, a company that makes a long-term investment in technology becomes prey to a raider because the price of its stocks falls and it gets snapped up. There is a degree of technology buy-out in the same way as there was asset and property acquisition in the 1960s and 1970s.

It is not surprising that the City of London behaves in that fashion because it is set that model by the Government who also behave in that fashion. The short-termism that runs through the Government at present is deeply unpleasant, unwelcome and unhealthy for our future economy.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. John Butcher) indicated dissent.

Mr. Ashdown: The Minister is shaking his head, so I shall give him an example. When the Government privatised British Telecom or British Gas — I do not doubt for a second that there was a case for privatisation, and although I believe that British Gas should not have been privatised, I saw no reason why Rolls-Royce should not have been privatised and put in the market place if it was done in a reasonable fashion — if they had been taking a long-term view, they would have used that money to invest in the British economy, and not to pay off that year's bills or to balance the books. No sensible business man would dispose of assets in that fashion. The Government use money in a short-term way, and that affects others who make investment decisions.

None of those problems are addressed in the document although they should be, because they are the besetting, underlying difficulties and problems of the British economy. Instead we have what I can only describe as a degree of public relations hype. One need only consider the advertising budget for the initiative, which is now bigger than the budget for the small firms unit, as I think the Minister knows, in Lord Young's previous Department, the Department of Employment. The advertising budget is huge, and in some ways it is a waste. If the document seeks to give a profile to enterprise, that is useful, but why not tackle the real problems of the British economy? Sam Brittan in the Financial Times said that he thought it was a "sender up of Thatcherism by a hostile satirist."

Perhaps one can understand those comments because the way in which this matter has been handled is ludicrous to the point of being farcical. Chapter 7, for instance, states:

"In all our work we will take account of the differing circumstances of the regions and of the Inner Cities to enable those who live there to help themselves."

The document tells us that we are about to become aware of the problems of Britain's regions. However, if one picks up the popular version of the document, one finds that there is not much evidence that the DTI knows about the regions outside London. Having looked at it the other day, I noticed that, on the map, Cardiff has been put where Swansea is, Poole where Weymouth is, Reading where Oxford is and Coventry where Worcester is. There is not much evidence that the Department knows its way around anywhere outside the City of London.

Is that the kind of efficiency that we would expect the Department of Trade and Industry to set as an example for others? I am told that the calendar that it has produced had one week that contained three Tuesdays. The Department does not seem to know its way round Britain, or even what time it is. That is not a good example to set for industry. If that is what the Department of Trade and Industry means by showing concern for efficiency and a knowledge of the regions of Britain, I am not impressed. I do not suppose that other people will be impressed either, except those who are impressed by the candy floss of the PR man.

I accept the need for the move towards an enterprise economy. There is a need to go faster, to be more radical and to encourage small businesses and enterprise, but the document is a triumph of public relations over hard policy. There is nothing in it that will tackle the balance of payments problems which are inexorably approaching Britain. There is nothing in it to tackle the growing trade chasm which is opening up. There is nothing in it to end the tragic divisions between the pampered, prosperous and, in many ways, profligate south-east and the dog-eared dereliction that one finds all too frequently elsewhere in the old industrial bases of the nation.

There is nothing in the document to remedy the devastated industrial base of Britian. There is nothing for that consuming short-termism which is mortgaging the future for a quick buck today, stimulated by a Government who have set the pace by flogging off public assets, not for investment, but to squander on this year's bills. There is nothing to solve the deep-seated, underlying problems which have caused Britain to fall behind her industrial competitors, both in their effectiveness and in their share of world trade. If the Government turned their attention to those problems, we should sit up and listen, but this is, frankly, fiddling while Britain's industrial base is in severe danger of decaying in a way which will damage our future economy and perhaps the social cohesion of our nation.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): The Liberal spokesman, the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), made an interesting speech and I agree with many of his arguments. Everyone who listened to his speech will regard it as a balanced contribution to the debate.

There is a surprised expression on the face of my hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), the Vice-Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household. It is sometimes possible to refer to a speech by a member of another party and to say that there are some points worthy of attention or agreement, without it being regarded as heretical. The notion that one must never agree with anyone in another party strikes me as very strange, but perhaps I am being unfair to my hon. Friend, because he cannot speak in the House. Nevertheless, he can speak outside the House where he no doubt makes robust speeches on the policies that we are debating today.

I add my congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on his personal enterprise initiative in selecting this subject for debate. He will not misunderstand me when I say that the acceptability and blandness of his motion means that everybody can agree with it, but that is good sense in itself and a traditional Conservative approach to policy matters. It contains some good points which need wholehearted support.

I apologise for having missed my hon. Friend's initial remarks, but he is right in saying that, whatever ideas come from other parties, the Government and the Conservative party have a strong monopoly of ideas in this area. I also add my support and commendation for what the Government have achieved, very remarkably, since 1979 in respect of some aspects of the long-term transformation of the economy.

However, there are considerable problems that still need tackling. The fact that they have not yet been tackled reflects, to some extent, the excessive divisiveness of our political system which has become more pronounced in recent years and has prevented us from reaching the consensus solutions which are required urgently by Parliament and by any Government to overcome those problems.

The old curate's egg description of the Government's achievements would be right. When I say that, I do not wish to alarm my hon. Friend the Member for Watford by seeming to be churlish, as I am most enthusiastic about some key elements of the Government's achievements. Although it is an intangible and ethereal factor and, to some extent, an emotional and psychological point, one of the most important factors has been the change of attitudes. A great friend of mine, who is a peer in the other place, has a reputation for getting up at 11 o'clock in the morning in the traditional style of peers. I was rather amused when he said that one of the most marvellous things that the Government have done is to bring in a new work ethic. I shall not name him, as it was an accidental remark, although, if he reads Hansard, he will know that I am referring to him. He was correct about all the other citizens of this country, but not about himself, as he still gets up at ll o'clock.

There has been a great change in attitude and a reinculcation of the work ethic. I am a City person and admit that the City is often justly criticised. However, people in the City come into work early, not just the ordinary employees in any organisation, but the people who run that organisation. We also see that in industry. The attitude to work, for those who are fortunate to have it, has improved enormously from top to bottom. For example, directors and employees in factories are now on first name terms, but, in some traditional establishments, that used to be regarded as wicked only a few years ago. Such points may be considered trivial, but they are important factors in that change.

When the hon. Member for Yeovil referred to the Government's achievements in respect of trade unions, he was supporting an aspect of Government policy. Those are definite, unshakeable achievements which are admitted by all trade unionists, not simply Right-wing trade unionists. They will represent a tangible, monumental achievement for this country if their effects are lasting.

I pay tribute to the Government Departments, particularly the Department of Trade and Industry. I do not believe that the recent changes are superficial and merely PR hype. They are real and deep expressions of the change of attitude and behaviour within those Departments. I pay tribute to the Departments because I hear so many business men speak of the way in which Department officials assist them and put forward ideas.

I reject the old-fashioned notion — it might be supported by Professor Patrick Minford, for example, although I must not misquote him as he has never said this to me — that a civil servant cannot be as heroic as a private business man. Civil servants are just as good as private business men. The fact that they work in the public sector does not matter. There are many entrepreneurial officials in the Department of Trade and Industry, and I warmly congratulate the Secretary of State on creating a Department that works positively for industry, rather than a bureaucracy that holds industry back. Perhaps that encapsulates the best of all the subtle changes of the past few years.

Unfortunately, the picture is not entirely rosy. The balance of payment figures represent a severe problem. I am very much concerned about our problem of low output. I chide the Government with reluctance and with my customary sadness for allowing their propaganda to skate over the awkward truth. I used to enjoy reading The Economist, which I regarded as essential reading, but I now regard it as an increasingly silly magazine, partly because it has started to pursue a particular line. That is a great mistake. The Financial Times is an excellent newspaper because it does not pursue a particular line.

Recently, The Economist contained an article whose theme was the comparison between the West German and British motor car industries. It referred to the doldrums in the German motor industry and the triumph of the British motor industry. I am delighted that the British motor industry is now experiencing an upswing and is going through a better phase. It has done much to improve itself, although it has some problems at present. The article stated that the total German output of private motor cars was 4.4 million, about two thirds of which were for export. But it conveniently left out the British output figure, which was about 1.7 million following the recent increase — it used to be about 1.4 million. Those figures may not be entirely accurate, but I hope that they are a near approximation.

To leave out that was absurd. Although Germany is, as we know, a high-cost, high-quality, high-reliability economy, it is manifestly the most successful, the premier capitalist economy of Europe. The hon. Member for Yeovil mentioned all the depredations that we have suffered, paricularly since 1980 and 1981. We were the only country that became recessionary in physical manufacturing output — the only one of the OECD-classified list of economies of our size of 50 million or 60 million — to suffer a backwardation in real manufactured output. The German economy is much bigger than ours. It is absurd to say that it is not as successful, and for the Government to concentrate on productivity increase figures that come from units of output per employee. That is misleading, unless the total output figures are also included.

Mr. Ashdown: I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman has noticed, as I have, that the Government go a stage further in massaging the figures by always producing those that measure the position from the lowest point of the depression in 1981, rather than those from when they came to power in 1979, which would look entirely different. I understand that the total manufacturing output in Britain today is only a blip above its 1979 level.

Mr. Dykes: I think that it is more than a blip above. In the past six months, it has started to rise significantly. As the hon. Gentleman says, however, it is up for the first time.

I think that the Government would pursue a better line if they stopped avoiding the total output figures. Some people support the idea of the cathartic policy for the British economy; they feel that a rude shock was necessary. I do not agree. I believe that an advanced economy needs a blend of industrial manufacturing activities, as well as services and so forth. It is a great mistake for aspects of manufacturing industry to be wilfully neglected or allowed to be eliminated, just because of a decision to concentrate on such matters as computers and financial services. Be that as it may, development ought to come out of the many millions of decisions made in the open market. Obviously, some manufacturers went out of business against their will, and might have survived had they received the necessary support, which would have been forthcoming in other countries.

I do not wish to go on for too long, and I acknowledge the presence of my hon. Friends who are trying to contribute——

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): Both my hon. Friend and the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) have said things which, if the debate had taken place about three years ago, would have received my strong support and assent. In my previous guise, before I came to the House, I helped to publish papers that were very critical of the decline in British manufacturing industry, and the contribution that it made to our national strength and balance of payments.

I would like to draw my hon. Friend out a little. He has touched only slightly on the dramatic improvement in our manufacturing output in the past three years, and I feel that he should pay tribute to that. The hon. Member for Yeovil, I fear, also ignored that point.

Mr. Dykes: Unfortunately, I do not have the index on me, but I think that it is only a couple of index points above the 1979 level, which was, I believe, 109.

I was making a comparative point. Other countries have had their recessions—a bit later, indeed—and, as their output was higher in any case, the effects were severe. But the effects were proportionately much more severe in this country, whose economy was already limited in its output. Perhaps my censure was not as severe as my hon. Friend imagines.

Germany, then, is the premier capitalist economy, with no fixation with ideological nostrums so abstruse as to be almost invisible to the naked eye. There is an idea here that everything in the private sector is wonderful and everything in the public sector is wrong. In Germany, some regard the public sector as something that should be limited and kept small; nevertheless, there is an attitude of co-operation between the two sectors that we seem to have lost in recent years. I feel that an excess of ideology—rather than common sense, wisdom and a pragmatic observation of the scene—is guiding our business and economic practice.

Another problem is the complacency that still affects British management, despite the success that we have achieved. I pay tribute to the Government's attempts to overcome that, and, indeed, to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the enormously important work that he personally has done.

I must declare an interest in retailing: I am involved as a non-executive director in a large retailing group. I do not exaggerate when I say—as I did in a debate last year—that we have frequently been on our knees pleading with British manufacturers to supply the products that we so urgently need for our customers. Sadly, however, we have ended up again and again having to obtain them from overseas suppliers. We are now encouraging the latter to invest here more and more, thank goodness.

The attitude of certain large corporations in this country—I shall mention no names—has often been very complacent. They have refused to supply the products that we need. I do not refer to the odd one-off example; it has happened far too frequently. We now have no large British-owned television set manufacturers. I suppose that Ferguson is an exception: it is owned by Thomson Brand, and perhaps a change of ownership does not matter. Incidentally, Thomson Brand is a nationalised company.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): And it is European.

Mr. Dykes: Indeed it is. But, whatever the ownership, television sets, electronic products and so on have a history of decline. Government action is not the sole cause of that, although it may have been partly responsible. Manufacturing complacency, giving up and not bothering mean losing the market and any productive capacity.

After that cathartic period has been achieved, we need a much more open and pragmatic attitude. We need to get away from the ideology, and take common sense as a basis for our actions. We should accept the mixture of public and private sector, the need for them to work harmoniously together.

I do not wish to anticipate Monday's debate, which would be out of order. However, electricity privatisation is a case in point. I am not at all enthusiastic about the Government's plans; I state that quite openly. Parts of them are good, but has the proposal really been triggered by a genuine problem that needs tackling, or did the ideological motor start it off somewhere in the recesses of the Centre for Policy Studies—which itself should be privatised? [HON. MEMBERS: "It is."] I mean that it should be nationalised.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: It should be closed down.

Mr. Dykes: That would be a bit unfair. The Centre for Policy Studies has done some excellent work.

Did it all start with someone sitting in a cupboard, having food pushed through twice a day and being asked, "Are you ready with that memo on privatising the Army yet, George? You are late." Or did it begin in the Department of Energy, as a genuine modernising policy? I am simple-minded, and I cannot understand the idea of increasing electricity charges now so that they can be lowered later. I would not, therefore, have tackled the C E G B in the way that is proposed in the White Paper. The problems of the electricity industry are hugely complex, and to comment so briefly on them will inevitably appear superficial. Surely, however, the main problem is at the distribution end, which the Government are leaving more or less intact; indeed, they are increasing its scope of activity.

Of the three segments of the industry, distribution surely provides the main problem of geographical monopoly. There is enormous complacency in its operations, including — I say this with heartfelt enthusiasm, as a retailer—the use of showrooms, which is monumentally inefficient in many respects. No wonder all the area boards are, according to the Government, so enthusiastic about electricity privatisation. Their geographical monopoly will remain intact and they will be able to secure generational activity at the margin and increase their work. As I understand it, those boards will collectively own the middle segment of the proposed privatised industry—the transmission company.

I believe that the problems of the electricity industry lie with distribution rather than generation. To tamper with an enormously successful, carefully built up, huge entity, the CEGB, so lightly — the White Paper is a short document for such a complex matter—is a pity.

If I were involved in deciding Government policy—obviously they would be acting much more wisely as a result — I should agree that they have done a lot of extremely successful privatisation. We are all aware that the main reason for privatisation has been to make the people shareholders and, as a member of the London stock exchange, how can I say that that is a bad idea? However, all Governments must discontinue certain policies after they have been a success—they cannot go on and on. I believe that, after the last privatisation, that should have been it. I hope that that attitude may be shown vis-à-vis the water companies. The problems of that industry will not be solved by the fairly simple approach that has been adopted by the Government to such a complex matter.

Enterprise is vital and I wholeheartedly commend the Government for having been the enterprise Government and the DTI for being, par excellence, the enterprise Department. However, such work must be tempered with social restraint and a sense of responsibility. Every sound business man would surely agree that there is no contradiction between the maximisation of profits and an acute social conscience and responsibility. They should plough back resources into the community not only through taxation, but as a result of autonomous action by companies and individuals — company directors and shareholders.

My contribution to the debate is somewhat paradoxical because I am talking against my own interests in the Bill that is second in the list for consideration later, the Planning Permission (Demolition of Houses) Bill. That Bill is an excellent representation of the ideas that I have sought to put forward. As a Conservative I naturally support property development and the beneficial positive aspects of such development. However, in the outer London suburbs we are witnessing rampant, excessive property development. Therefore, I am glad that many of my colleagues are present to support my Bill when it comes up for Second Reading.

Property developers must also recognise the need for restraint and recognise their social obligations not to overdo development. I would be out of order if I described my Bill in detail, but it provides that property developers must apply for permission to demolish dwellings at the same time as they apply for planning permission to build a new block of houses or flats. The merits of such an approach would be obvious. The size of the file that I have with me demonstrates the number of letters of support that I have received. There is also tremendous support for the measure within the House.

My approach to my Bill is somewhat paradoxical because I have spoken in this debate and there are two other private Members' motions after this one. However, I have acted thus because it is rumoured that the Department of the Environment will, once again, object to my Bill. Recently I had a meeting with the Minister for Housing and Planning and he was as helpful as he could be. However, I would describe the Department's attitude as sympathetic, but unclear how to proceed. I believe that the Department of the Environment always prefers to change planning laws as a result of Government instruments rather than through Private Bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Gentleman has been extremely ingenious, but I am sure he would recognise that he has gone far enough on that line.

Mr. Dykes: I thank you for your great patience, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and if the House gives me time to debate the Bill today I shall then go into more detail.

Mr. David Shaw (Dover): May I apologise to the House because, owing to a long-standing constituency engagement, I may be unable to stay to hear the concluding speeches in the debate?

I believe that it is appropriate, given that today is the parliamentary eve of Monday's debate and certain journalists outside may be busy scribbling away, to say that there are some on the Conservative Benches who see opportunities and benefits to the nation as the result of the privatisation of electricity. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) was correct to consider that privatisation in this debate. From other privatisations that have taken place, it is clear that quality control, design of the product and the financial control, management and discipline in those businesses have improved as a result. My hon. Friend has discussed whether the pursuit of privatisation is a good policy. It is clear that it has been successful and that current business practices contrast totally with the attitudes that prevailed in the 1960s and 1970s. During that time Britain's international position was falling rapidly.

I believe that the White Paper on enterprise is extremely important because it is a further step away from the attitudes of the 1960s and 1970s. Today things are completely different. An important contrast is that the White Paper is not about putting vast sums of money on the table, and it is not about vast grants to British industry. It is about encouraging support and improving skills within industry and business.

Reference has been made to manufacturing output and the fact that it is only just above the level reached in 1979. However, those people who say that forget that the service sector has expanded enormously. We now have a larger manufacturing industry than in 1979 plus a much larger service sector.

When one compares the current position to the 1970s, it is important to recognise that putting money on the table was not the answer. In the 1970s money was grabbed by unsuccessful businesses and, as a result, those businesses were made more unsuccessful. They became less competitive as a result of receiving too much money to produce out-of-date and badly designed products.

The Government recognised that failure. Certainly, the famous "British disease" known throughout the world is now recognised as having been cured. Foreign competitors stand up when a British business man walks into the room because they recognise him as a true competitor. We had to change our attitudes and improve our skills in marketing, design and finance. If we had not done that, we would have lost out in competition to Japanese, German and American business men.

One of the best business lessons that I ever received occurred when I was flying back to this country across the Atlantic—I hasten to add on a British Airways plane—with a Japanese business man sitting next to me. Every time the conversation turned towards business, that business man discussed market share and how to increase it, the competitive position and how to compete more effectively and efficiently. I often contrast that conversation with the lessons that I had to learn when I visited various sectors of British industry in the 1970s. At that time I saw much old-fashioned industry and old-fashioned attitudes. In the 1960s and 1970s there was little understanding among middle management about international competition and increasing the market share.

The evidence of changed attitudes is demonstrated by a new sector that has developed, the British venture capital industry. The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) mentioned that industry and I share his concern that it is not as regional as we would like. It has been too concentrated on the south and the south-east. However, the business venture in which I was involved attempted to set up some operations in the north and the north-west. In a small and modest way, we managed to achieve one or two successes, but they were not as plentiful as we would have liked because we were trying to overcome in a matter of months attitudes that had been built up over many years. The regions lacked skills, training, investment and business knowledge, and there had been a loss of capital markets to London. Even the local professionals, the solicitors and the accountants were uncertain as to what venture capital was all about.

I am pleased to say that the British venture capital industry is admired by the United States for being competitive with their own industry. It is also admired by the Germans, the French and the Italians, all of whom want to copy our industry and develop their own venture capital industries. Certainly we have the opportunity for many new companies to start as a result of venture capital initiatives in Britain. I pay tribute to the work of the British Venture Capital Association.

One important aspect of the debate which I touched upon at the beginning of my speech is the British approach to business. In the 1960s and 1970s our attitude was totally wrong and we lost markets. In the Commonwealth countries and throughout Africa the British car industry has been in retreat and many foreign competitors' cars are now sold in those countries. We lost products, and we lost a television industry that is down to only about one company manufacturing in Britain apart from some Japanese companies now assembling over here.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that we lost all those industries at the time when they were all privatised? The managements refused to get off their bottoms and get around the world and fight for markets, and allowed the television industry, the motor cycle industry—indeed industry after industry—to go to the wall. The Government tried to stop them going to the wall. The private enterprise people could have done what they wanted to do, but they did not and they failed the country.

Mr. Shaw: The hon. Gentleman did not listen to the point that I made earlier. My key point was that all those industries that failed during the late 1960s and the 1970s received vast amounts of Government money. The Government subsidised businesses that had failure within them. However much money one puts on the table, one cannot turn a business round when the work force does not want success. [Interruption.] Management—and I criticise British management—in the 1960s and 1970s did not understand the requirements of success. That was a very significant point. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) please contain himself? He has only just walked into the Chamber and has taken no part in the debate.

Mr. Shaw: Nevertheless, it is welcome that a few Opposition Members have turned up. During the debate on the coal industry the other day they were notable by their absence.

Not only did Britain lose products and opportunities; it lost new products. It lost the opportunity to develop the video equipment industry, and many new areas of business. There were problems with both the management and the work force. In some British companies there were five or six canteens. I used to go round some of those companies and compare them with the American subsidiaries operating in Britain which had only one canteen and in which the management were on the shop floor. The management were interested in what was going on. There was a complete contrast in attitudes between British companies and American subsidiaries operating over here. Fortunately, however, much of that is changing.

We now do not have management and work force problems to the same degree, except when they are raised by Opposition Members. We have staff and personnel problems because management is beginning to recognise, and has recognised for some time, that management and work force in Britain have the same objective — to produce more goods.

It is important that in this interesting debate we recognise that throughout Britain there is a lack of training. The Government have done quite a lot to encourage training in business. However, we still have problems which are highlighted by Mr. Robb Wilmot, former chief executive of ICL, who pointed out that one Korean company has more management graduates in it than there are in the whole of the United Kingdom. That means that we do not have the management skills or the background of management training that we need. I know that the Government will do much to develop that.

I should like to pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs who has advocated the cause of British industry, and improvements in design and quality control. I am pleased that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has joined us. It is only appropriate that I should say that one of my friends recently attended a conference where my hon. Friend the Minister was speaking. He said to me, "Who is this man Butcher? The Government should wheel him out more often as he is a really good speaker."

In clothing design and other industries, Britain excels. At one time I acted as financial adviser to one business lady in the design sector. She constantly said to me that she had never been trained at design school to understand business, but she built up a business that employs some 50 people. We can imagine how large that business could have been if she had been trained in business skills.

I conclude by drawing attention to the fact that the Government are encouraging the improvement of design manufacturing skills. Productivity has increased rapidly. The Government, through the enterprise initiative White Paper, will help further to develop the quality and marketing skills of British industry. We have come a long way since the problems of the 1970s. We have proved that it is not vast sums of money being put on the table in investment grants that improve British industry. We have proved that it is improved by the right economy, by reducing taxation, by encouraging our business men to succeed and by being more competitive against foreign competitors.

All those skills that we are encouraging and all the improvements that we are trying to achieve in British industry are no good unless British industry earns profits. Opposition Members fail to understand the importance of profits. Profits are important because today's profits, this year's profits, provide the cash for next year's investment, and investment in plant and machinery is extremely important for the country. Without more investment in plant and machinery, we cannot succeed and we cannot compete against overseas companies.

I hope that the Government will continue doing what they have done to date so that there will be more improvement and investment in the people who are important in British industry and in new plant and equipment. I know that we will continue to achieve new production records as a result of the Government's initiatives.

10.59 am

Mr. David Evans (Welwyn and Hatfield): This morning, I have been under a misapprehension. We have heard about the electricity authority and about national and multinational companies. I should like to bring the debate back to the enterprise initiative.

I welcome the regional grant system being taken over by the Government's initiative. I hope that the initiative will be developed by the regions. Design is important. British Aerospace, which is in my constituency, is well-equipped in respect of design. That is why I hope that the proposed negotiations between the Rover Group and British Aerospace are successful. Design is important in business.

I should like to bring the debate back to the small business man. The country's future depends on him. The small business man needs the help that the initiative will provide.

It being Eleven o'clock, MR. SPEAKER interrupted proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

NATO Summit (Brussels)

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall make a statement about the meeting of Heads of State and Government of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us get off to a good start with the statement.

The Prime Minister: With permission I shall make a statement about the meeting of Heads of State and Government of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, held in Brussels on 2 and 3 March, which I attended with my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary.

The summit agreed a main declaration and a statement entitled "Conventional Arms Control: The Way Ahead". Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Since NATO's last summit in 1982, there have been important changes affecting the Alliance. First, we have seen developments in the arms control field, above all the successful INF agreement, achieved as a result of NATO's resolve.

Secondly, we look forward to President Reagan's forthcoming visit to Moscow and hope that—then or later—we shall see agreement to reduce the strategic nuclear weapons of the United States and the Soviet Union by 50 per cent.

Thirdly, we have seen bold reforms introduced by Mr. Gorbachev in the Soviet Union. These hold out the prospect of more responsibility and more choice for the Soviet people.

Fourthly, we have begun to see some signs of change in the Soviet Union's external policies, above all the very welcome decision to withdraw from Afghanistan.

At the same time, there has been no let-up in the Soviet Union's extensive military modernisation programmes. Indeed, they are going ahead as fast as ever. For example, first, by the mid-1990s, virtually the entire Soviet strategic force in place in the mid-1980s will have been replaced by new or modernised systems, including the world's only rail-mobile ICBM system. Secondly, one new submarine is deployed every 37 days. Thirdly, they are actively modernising their shorter-range missiles, where they already enjoy a major advantage, with more accurate longer-range SS21s. Fourthly, the Soviet Union made over 90 space launches last year for military purposes.

As a result, the Soviet Union has the world's largest nuclear and chemical arsenals, and the Warsaw pact enjoys substantial superiority over NATO in conventional forces.

Against this background, it was important for the leaders of the NATO countries to come together, take stock and to set guidelines for future action. The United Kingdom approached the meeting with a number of clear objectives. First, to underline the continuing importance of the NATO Alliance to the defence of the West. It is as vital now for protecting our freedom as when it was formed in 1949. Second, to confirm the unity and the resolve of NATO in the face of Soviet attempts to separate Europe from the United States and to denuclearise Europe. Third, to reaffirm the validity of NATO's strategy of flexible response and the consequent need to keep all NATO's weapons—nuclear as well as conventional—up to date. Fourth to discuss President Reagan's forthcoming visit to Moscow for a United States-Soviet summit, and to confirm NATO's priorities in arms control.

These objectives were very fully and satisfactorily achieved, as will be clear from the texts of the declaration and the statement to which I have referred. They contain: first, a strong reaffirmation of the vital link between the security of Europe and that of North America. It is particularly important to remind people of this in a presidential election year in the United States. President Reagan assured the summit that NATO enjoyed a bipartisan support in the United States and that American troops would remain in Europe as long as the common defence of the democratic way of life required. We are all, of course, very grateful to the United States and Canada for the susbtantial forces which they keep in Europe.

Second, in the two documents we reaffirmed our determination that NATO's defences should remain strong, recognising the crucial role of the nuclear deterrence provided not just by the United States strategic deterrent but also by the presence of effective and up-to-date nuclear weapons in Europe. I am particularly pleased that all Heads of Government agreed on "a strategy of deterrence based on an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary".

Third, based on confidence in our sure defence, a willingness to seek dialogue with the countries of the Warsaw pact and a desire for further arms control agreements, particularly on chemical and conventional weapons. Any further reductions in nuclear weapons after START would come about only in conjunction with the establishment of conventional balance and the global elimination of chemical weapons. It is quite clear that NATO is determined to avoid a third nuclear zero.

Heads of Government also took the opportunity to thank Lord Carrington, who retires in June, for his outstanding work as Secretary-General of NATO.

This summit meeting, which was convened as a result of a British initiative, successfully reinforced NATO's basic message of defence, deterrence and dialogue. It reaffirmed the strategy that has kept the peace in Europe for over 40 years. It underlined NATO's commitment to keep all our weapons, both conventional and nuclear, up-to-date in order to ensure that deterrence remains effective and that our defences are strong enough to convince any aggressor that he could not prevail. It is on the basis of such a sure defence that we are able to welcome the reforms that are taking place in the Soviet Union and to enter into further negotiations to reduce the level of weaponry on both sides.

Taken with the recent successful European summit, we have created a platform from which Europe can look with confidence to the future.

Mr. Neil Kinnock (Islwyn): I am grateful to the Prime Minister for her statement.

Is it not a fact that the statement that we heard this Friday morning is evidence of the Prime Minister's success in having the summit and of her failure to get what she wanted out of it? Is it not also clear that, in the week before she met allies in Brussels, Chancellor Helmut Kohl had already concluded the summit during his visit to Washington by agreeing not to press for the third zero on tactical weapons in return for the United States' reassurance that nuclear modernisation would receive no priority? Therefore, is it not obvious that the Prime Minister was effectively sidelined by the manoeuvre before she even got to Brussels?

Yesterday the Prime Minister said that the conclusion of the summit was that conventional weapons had to be brought down to parity and chemical weapons eliminated before any further negotiations on nuclear weapons took place. Was the Prime Minister reflecting the position of our allies? The communiqué states that the NATO disarmament goal includes,

"in conjunction with the establishment of a conventional balance, the global elimination of chemical weapons, tangible and verifiable reductions of American and Soviet land-based nuclear missile systems of shorter range, leading to equal ceilings".

Therefore, was not Lord Carrington more accurate than the Prime Minister? He said:

"nobody is saying that you cannot start one set of negotiations before another has ended."

Is it not the case that the West German Government take the view that negotiations to reduce battlefield and short-range nuclear weapons on their soil should be commenced as soon as possible and that separate and simultaneous negotiations can proceed without waiting for the completion of one agreement before others are pursued?

There has been a certain amount of semantic anarchy between our various allies since the summit ended. As words are actions in communiqués like that — [Interruption.] I suppose I made the mistake of quoting The Wall Street Journal on that issue. As words are actions in communiqués such as those coming out of Brussels, are the Parliaments and forces of allied nations to act upon the objective of keeping forces maintained in proper condition where that is desirable, which is the German version, kept up-to-date where necessary, which is the English version, or, as the Prime Minister says that that version is a euphemism for modernisation, should modernisation, as she interprets it, be the objective? Could she tell us whether, in her view, the act of modernisation should include the installation of new weapons systems, whether sea, air or ground launched, and whether they are regarded as being tactical, intermediate or strategic in range?

The Prime Minister says that she strongly favours the bold changes in the Soviet Union, both for the sake of the Soviet people and to increase international stability, and one cannot but concur with her there. But does she not realise that the pressures that she wishes to impose by the rearmament that would come from the form of modernisation that she wants would insert the greatest possible impediment to the changes that we all want to see in the Soviet Union?

The Prime Minister has previously spoken of the continual renovation and innovation in Soviet arms, and she did so again this morning. Is she aware that she can stop and reverse such a build up by fostering agreements which secure arms build down? However, is it not clear that she wants to pursue the contrary course and, under the guise of modernisation, bring about a multiplication of armaments? Therefore, does she not appreciate that, to put it at its most polite, there is a significant inconsistency in her approach?

There is much justifiable concern about the numerical superiority of Warsaw pact forces in Europe, and a clear need rigorously to pursue the asymmetrical reductions in conventional forces offered by the Soviets and considered by our allies. However, does the Prime Minister share the view of many experts, including the United States chiefs of staff report to Congress last year, that the imbalance of forces, if considered in terms of quality as well as in terms of quantity, is less in reality than is sometimes argued by many, including the Prime Minister? If she does, will she be pursuing force reductions on that basis rather than on the basis of what is sometimes called the "bean count" view of force disparities between the Soviet Union and the Western allies?

The Prime Minister: I sat for nearly two days in the NATO summit listening to many speeches, including many from Socialist Heads of Government, and I never heard such claptrap as I have heard from the Opposition Front Bench today. This country's Socialist party is out of step with every other one in Europe. That is no wonder, because it is virtually a CND Socialist party.

The Government got precisely what we wanted out of the summit in modernising nuclear forces, and that was endorsed by 16 nations, including the United States. Many of those countries supported us, and others agreed with the communiqué — [Interruption.] Yes, because some countries neither make nor deploy nuclear weapons, but they support the rest of us in doing so, unlike the Labour party.

There was a clear declaration in the conventional statement that we have to continue to keep conventional weapons up to date, and we thought it absolutely right that we should put it also in the bigger declaration, which says:

"This is a strategy of deterrence based upon an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary."

The right hon. Gentleman has difficulty with that sentence, he might try the next one for size. The first sentence of paragraph 6 says:

"While seeking security and stability at lower levels of armaments, we are determined to sustain the requisite efforts to ensure the continued viablity, credibility and effectiveness of our conventional and nuclear forces, including the nuclear forces in Europe, which together provide the guarantee of our common security."

How does the right hon. Gentleman think that one can possibily do that without keeping nuclear forces in Europe up to date? That is precisely what this NATO summit agreed. The right hon. Gentleman is out of step with each and every country in NATO.

The Soviet Union is, as I said, and as we all know, continuing to modernise all its weapons, whether conventional or nuclear. I set out some of the changes this morning, and there are many more. It is absolutely vital that we negotiate from a basis of strength because that tactic got the intermediate nuclear weapons treaty. It is because of that continued strength that we are able to deter. One does not deter with obsolete weapons, whether conventional or nuclear, and one has to keep them up to date.

The right hon. Gentleman referred to the American chiefs of staff. General Galvin needed the decision which we were instrumental in getting. America was prominent in supporting us all the way in securing this form of wording. The actual text was negotiated in English, so it is English which is the clear version.

Sir Antony Buck (Colchester, North): Does my right hon. Friend agree that there are two most encouraging features about this summit? The first is the total reaffirmation of the American position, and its commitment to NATO as the sheet anchor of NATO. The second important feature that is emerging is the improved relationship between France and NATO. Many of us would like France to return to being a fully integrated member of NATO but realise that that is not likely. Nevertheless, it is good that there has been a closing of relationships and so much interservice co-operation.

The Prime Minister: Yes, the total reaffirmation of American forces to Europe was welcome, particularly during an election year in the United States. I agree with my hon. and learned Friend that another encouraging factor was the presence of President Mitterrand and the way in which France is, voluntarily because it does not belong to the integrated military structure of NATO, exercising its forces, bearing in mind the NATO exercises. I put several proposals to President Mitterrand regarding, for example, being able to practise reinforcements through French Channel ports and airfields of any forces that would be needed, should there ever be an alert. So far, we have not been able to practise through those Channel ports, and I hope that we should be able to. Again, that is evidence of further close co-operation between French forces and the NATO structure.

Mr. Paddy Ashdown (Yeovil): Will the Prime Minister recognise how welcome it is that wiser heads in NATO have forced her away from unilateralism in seeking to raise the number of nuclear weapons? Since both the Warsaw pact and NATO have the capacity to destroy each other 50 times over, why does she want more? Is not enough enough?

The Prime Minister: As we know from the last election, only one party in this country is willing to keep a sure defence and to deter an aggressor. The Soviet Union is modernising her nuclear weapons. She has, for example, the only strategic ballistic missile which can be moved around by rail, and, as we know, can be brought into areas that are being vacated by the SS20s. We do not expect the hon. Gentleman and his party to be strong — they do not have a policy.

We are determined to keep defence and deterrent sure. That means modernising nuclear weapons. Ministers when they meet in their next nuclear planning group meeting, which takes place in April, will have to make decisions. They have on their agenda a proposal to make deployments in connection with the pulling out of Europe of the intermediate nuclear weapons.

Is the hon. Gentleman aware that Marshals Yazov and Akhromeyev are already saying that they will have to take this matter into account and compensating moves will have to be made? Marshal Akhromeyev said that in the ratification hearings for the intermediate treaty. We have the guts to keep this country properly defended, and so does NATO.

Mr. David Howell (Guildford): Will my right hon. Friend accept that the outcome of the Brussels meeting is sensible, realistic and greatly reassuring to the future peace of Europe? However, is she satisfied about the verification regime which will be needed for the proposed strategic missile negotiations? Will it be the same regime as the one that is in place for the INF treaty, or does she think that a much deeper and more comprehensive verification regime will be needed for the START negotiations?

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend is correct. A much deeper and more detailed regime is necessary for the START proposals than for the intermediate nuclear forces. The intermediate nuclear forces regime became easier when the Soviet Union agreed to a global ban, whereas my right hon. Friend is aware that at first it was proposed that the Soviet Union and the United States should each keep 100. That would have been almost impossible to verify. It will be much more difficult with START than with a global ban because there will be a mix of weapons. The establishment of a proper verification procedure is one of the reasons why it is taking a considerable time to get a START agreement. We think that it is more important to get the right and sure agreement than it is to get one quickly.

Mr. Michael Foot (Blaenau Gwent): Does not the Prime Minister appreciate that many other countries apart from those represented in NATO are greatly interested in nuclear and other forms of disarmament? Does she not understand that her perpetual, indeed paranoid, insistence on building up nuclear weapons is a barefaced breach of Britain's commitments under the non-proliferation treaty? How does she imagine that we will get other countries to abide by that treaty? Dos she propose to tear it up? If she continues to say that we must have nuclear weapons, many other countries will say the same.

The Prime Minister: First, the Soviet Union probably has more nuclear warheads than any other country. Secondly, the right hon. Gentleman went to the root of the communiqué because he does not believe that nuclear weapons are necessary for deterrence. The communiqué clearly says that nuclear weapons alone give the requisite degree of deterrence to the enemy. The right hon. Gentleman does not agree. Thirdly, this was agreed by the whole of NATO. Fourthly, the first nuclear arms control agreement that reduced the number of nuclear weapons was achieved under a Conservative Government through firm resolve and strength and by deploying cruise missiles. We played a big part in that. We were the first to deploy the cruise missiles and the Labour party would never have done that. We would never have had an agreement and the Russians would still have all their SS20s up. Had a Labour Government been in power there would have been no similar weapons on the Western side. We had a great influence over that agreement, and the Opposition do not like the fact that it was strength that achieved proper and balanced arms reductions.

Mr. Michael Mates (Hampshire, East): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on her robust leadership of the NATO nations. It has been confirmed within NATO that the twin-track policy that we have been following is the correct one—a policy of firm deterrence while seeking reductions. Will she now take every step that she and her Ministers can to explain to the people of Britain, who do not understand some of the nuances and who will be concerned at the thought of upgrading nuclear weapons, that modernisation and bringing up to date is not rearmament or escalation but simply the maintenance of that deterrent shield without which we would not have obtained any of the concessions that we have got from the Soviet Union?

The Prime Minister: I totally agree with my hon. Friend. We have to make certain that we have a sure defence and that the deterrence deters. To do that, weapons must be up to date. Then we must have dialogue on arms control agreements. That is what we are doing, and in those arms control agreements we are making certain that at no stage do they unbalance our defence effort or call it into question.

The Opposition policy of no nuclear weapons was defeated very surely in a phone-in during the general election campaign—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister must be given a chance to answer.

The Prime Minister: During that phone-in, Lance Corporal Ragman questioned the Labour spokesman on defence about Labour's non-nuclear policy. He said:

"Now you're telling me to go into this battle knowing that if we do succeed in pushing them back"— that is the enemy—

"we're gonna get nuked and if we don't succeed in pushing them back we're gonna get invaded."

Dr. David Owen (Plymouth, Devonport): The Prime Minister knows that the SDP has consistently supported the updating of Britain's nuclear deterrent and NATO's nuclear deterrent. What is more, it will continue to do so. Does the Prime Minister agree that there are many in NATO who think that some categories of battlefield nuclear weapons could be completely removed with advantage to both sides? I am speaking especially of very short-range battlefield nuclear weapons such as nuclear artillery. However, aircraft will continue to need to be nuclear armed. Can the Prime Minister say whether she would consider a battlefield nuclear-free corridor as a confidence building measure while at the same time going ahead with a stand-off air-launched missile for the Tornado aircraft?

The Prime Minister: I know that the right hon. Gentleman has consistently supported the updating of nuclear weapons except for Polaris, which he did not seem to agree should be updated. I know that he is not associated with the new party, and I notice that it does not have a policy. In its document that party says:

"The new party will, therefore, need to decide how to reconcile these changing realities with the manifesto commitment to 'maintain our capability in the sense of freezing our capacity at a level no greater than that of the Polaris system'."

If the party has a policy, it seems to be not to modernise in order to deter but to freeze in order to be obsolete compared with the threat that faces us.

The right hon. Gentleman asked about battlefield nuclear weapons. He will be aware that since the Montebello decision the number taken out of the field in Europe has been considerable. He will also be aware that the artillery shells are being updated. That decision was taken and is in process of being implemented.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): Is the Prime Minister aware that the last opinion poll on this matter showed that 75 per cent. of the British people think that further increases and improvements in nuclear weapons would not bring any real advantage or benefit to the United States or the Soviet Union? Why is the Prime Minister pursuing such a hard line in this costly and unproductive nuclear rearmament? Is it not the case that her policy of rearmament, of wanting to turn Britain into a nuclear battle station, was not put to the electorate at the last election?

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman forgets that we have an arms control agreement that reduces intermediate land-based nuclear weapons to zero, and that we are going for a START agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union to reduce the strategic ballistic missiles of the two nations to 50 per cent. Such a reduction of weapons was never achieved under the defence policy of the Labour party when it was in power and certainly would not be achieved now if it was in power.

In an article in The Daily Telegraph of 3 November the Labour Chief Whip was reported as saying:

"We have over 100 members of the Parliamentary CND in the Parliamentary Labour Party, including of course the Leader of the Party, Neil Kinnock."

Therefore, Labour party policy is to have no nuclear weapons at all. That is no deterrent.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): May I express my appreciation to my right hon. Friend for the fact that this communiqué presents starkly to the peoples of the Alliance the fact that under Gorbachev, as under his predecessors, the steady modernisation and enhancement of Soviet military power has proceeded apace? In the face of that reality, is it not completely irresponsible for the Labour party to advocate modernisation and improvement of neither our conventional forces nor our nuclear forces?

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend. Most people in this country expect us to have a sure defence and know that that requires a nuclear deterrent. That was reaffirmed by NATO this week, which said in the communiqué:

"Only the nuclear element can confront a potential aggressor with an unacceptable risk. Therefore, for the foreseeable future deterrence will continue to require an adequate mix of nuclear as well as conventional forces."

Governments of all sorts in Europe, including Socialist Governments, fully endorsed that communiqué. The Labour party is totally out of step with every other Government in Europe, including Socialist Governments, as well as with the United States.

Mr. Michael Alison (Selby): Does my right hon. Friend recall St. Augustine's observation that memory is the stomach of the mind? The fact that the Labour party has no stomach for maintaining a proper balance in our effective defence, including a nuclear balance, is merely a reflection of the fact that it has no memory of the holocaust that followed pre-war appeasement and one-sided military weakness.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is absolutely correct: no memory, no stomach, no spine, no guts.

Mr. Peter Shore (Bethnal Green and Stepney): Although I welcome the progress made towards multilateral nuclear disarmament through the INF treaty and the START talks, and although I accept that the emphasis must now be on rectifying the conventional imbalance in Western Europe, does the Prime Minister believe that it is possible to make much progress towards reductions of conventional weapons in Europe without embarking upon parallel negotiations to limit and reduce the number of battlefield nuclear weapons in the European theatre?

The Prime Minister stated her strong objection to the third zero, as she called it. What can be the objection to the achievement of such a goal if—but only if—we have reached agreement with the Soviet Union to reduce its overwhelming supremacy in conventional weapons?

The Prime Minister: As the right hon. Gentleman is aware, a third nuclear zero in Europe would unbalance the forces, which is why we do not wish to enter that sort of negotiation now. That is why the communiqué talks about doing this "in conjunction with" a conventional balance and the elimination of chemical weapons. Most of us believe that it can be done only when that is complete. Chancellor Kohl accepts that there should be no third nuclear zero in Europe, so he is absolutely with us.

The phrase in the communiqué,

"in conjunction with . . . a conventional balance and the global elimination of chemical weapons", came from the ministerial communiqué at Reykjavik, and has come forward into this communiqué. Most, indeed, all of us agree that the next priority is an asymmetrical reduction in conventional weapons because the Soviet union has such a great superiority and, if possible, a global ban on chemical weapons, although the verification problems would be enormous.

Sir Anthony Meyer (Clwyd, North-West): My right hon. Friend must be warmly congratulated on the major role that she played in securing an agreement in which no one got exactly what he wanted and everyone got much more than he expected. Does she accept that the presence of President Mitterrand at the meeting suggested the possibility of closer Franco-British co-operation, which might lead to closer co-operation in defence equipment procurement and manufacture and, in due course, to closer consultation about the use of our independent nuclear deterrent?

The Prime Minister: I agree that it was very good that President Mitterrand was present at the nuclear summit. He is a staunch believer in nuclear deterrence, and France is updating its nuclear weapons. We have had a good deal of bilateral discussion with France, trying all the time to get greater practical co-operation between the military forces of France and the military forces of NATO. That seems to be forthcoming. Although France will not rejoin NATO, it will, nevertheless, co-operate closely with its conventional and possibly its nuclear forces, although the latter would be much more difficult.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): Why does the Prime Minister suppose that she was unable to persuade even the Americans to support us on Exercise Fire Focus? Secondly, did she have any discussions with Chancellor Kohl or Secretary Shultz about the case of Christina Endrigkeit, which undermines the whole basis on which the Libyan bombing took place? Why is it that the evidence of Major Ruth La Fontaine, the acting officer in charge in Berlin, contradicts what the British and the American Governments said?

The Prime Minister: I am happy to tell the hon. Gentleman that Libya was not discussed at this NATO summit, not even in bilateral talks between the United States and ourselves. I note that the hon. Gentleman has no complaint about the NATO communiqué, for which I am grateful.

Mr. John Browne (Winchester): Does my right hon. Friend accept that, unlike the Labour party, many millions—if not hundreds of millions—of people throughout the free world thank her for rejuvenating NATO and urging our NATO allies to concentrate upon not merely the words of the Soviet Union but the actions of the Soviet Union projected into the long term? Does she accept that arms control must be balanced, integrated in terms of nuclear, chemical and conventional and, above all, prudent? As for the funding of NATO, does she accept that vast alternative sources of funds are available if only NATO would co-ordinate its procurement programme effectively?

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend. It was a vigorous communiqué by a vigorous NATO carrying into the future the strategy that has kept the peace in Europe for 40 years. Next year, NATO will celebrate 40 years of existence. The communiqué stands for everything that the Labour party rejects.

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): What precisely does the Prime Minister mean by "necessary modernisation"? Does it include replacing free-fall bombs on Tornado with cruise missiles? Does it include extending the range of the Lance missile? Does it include the so-called updating of the field artillery? How does she think the latter will be received in West Germany, where the people bitterly resent being told that they should be the firebreak for Europe? If she believes that the modernisation of Soviet short-range missiles is undesirable, how does she think all this updating and modernisation will help? It is substitution, it goes against the spirit of the present disarmament agreements and it cannot be in the interests of our people.

The Prime Minister: The communiqué recognised that we cannot deter with outdated weapons, whether conventional or nuclear. The Soviet Union knows that, which is why it is already updating its short-range as well as its longer-range weapons. Indeed, it is ahead of us in updating some long-range weapons

Since the INF agreement was signed, the Soviet Defence Minister, Mr. Yazov, has said:

"We shall exert all efforts to make the military alliance of Socialist countries, the Warsaw Pact organisation, even more powerful."

In the ratification hearings before the Supreme Soviet, Marshal Akhromeyev has said that the Soviet Union

"has other nuclear weapons in the European area which to a certain extent compensate for these"

"missiles."

That is the threat which we have to deter. I think that peace is extremely important. We shall continue to have peace only if we continue the strategy of NATO, which is to have nuclear weapons and to update them. If our free-fall nuclear bombs are absolutely incapable of delivery, there is no point in thinking that they would deter. Yes, in due course it will be necessary to update them.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): Will my right hon. Friend dismiss with total derision the shambling defence policy strictures of the Opposition, which are pure Mickey Mouse with a couple of bullets in the pocket? In accepting the congratulations of the House on her successful participation in the summit, will my right hon. Friend say a little more about the interesting partial French return to NATO, despite what she said about them not being members of it, and that, with British encouragement, they can overcome their inhibitions about the United States aspect of the policy? Will my right hon. Friend particularly say whether the French have now begun to reconcile themselves on the shorter-range missiles with the German inhibitions about the presence and location of the French missiles?

The Prime Minister: I think that there is no possibility of our French friends returning to the military structure of NATO. They were present as part of the political structure of the Western Alliance. I think that there is no possibility at present of their returning to the military structure. They are always extremely helpful in their approach to nuclear weapons. They know full well that there is no deterrence without them. They know full well that one must keep them modern and up to date. They are doing that with their own long range weapons, and they are in fact modernising their own short range. I believe that the fact that a Socialist President of France is taking such a strong view has had a very strong effect on Socialists also in West Germany, and has been helpful to the NATO Alliance as a whole.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): While, at times, fear and deterrence are necessary, in this case through NATO, does not the Prime Minister agree that sure defence—the phrase that she used—and abiding security and stability are obtained only through knowledge that leads to that elusive political commodity, justified confidence?

In that respect, has not the United Kingdom two incomparable assets? First, we are the cultural and institutional centre of a language that is now a major world language — English. Secondly, we have through history, endowment and performance a major world news agency, the BBC World Service, which serves the ends that I have just described. Cannot the £3 million that is now necessary for a world television service be made available, particularly bearing in mind the fact that it is the cost of about 20 modern war planes? Does not that make only good sense in our contribution to confidence, which alone separates us from nuclear holocaust and, from the Prime Minister's point of view, is very good value for money? Should not the government therefore invest in that news service that we all want to see?

The Prime Minister: Sometimes it seems to me that we need to aim more knowledge and more facts towards the Opposition to achieve their agreement to a NATO comuniqué. So far, the BBC does not seem to have been able to do that. Yes, the BBC external services are broadcast in many countries. The hon. Gentleman is aware that the Independent Television News already has an international television service, which does not cost the taxpayer a penny.

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): Has my right hon. Friend considered that her sadly realistic view that conventional warfare will be deterred only by nuclear weapons will strike a chord not only in our own constituencies, but throughout the length and breadth of Europe in working men's clubs, and particularly in the Soviet Union, where the Soviets' experience of invasion by conventional warfare was so horrific during the second world war? Does not my right hon. Friend feel that opinions engendered by such an experience and such a memory are likely to be worth a few more beans than the vacuous opinions expressed by Opposition Members?

The Prime Minister: Yes, I have always found that in this country people understand, because memories are still vivid, that one must have a strong defence. They understand that one needs nuclear weapons for defence. The Army—all our armed forces—understands that this Government at least would never put our young men in the field inadequately equipped and with equipment that was not sufficient to deter the threat. That was their worry in the piece that I read out. Therefore, they support the policy, and the people generally support the policy. They would prefer us to have a sound defence. They know that it is necessary and they have a certain amount of pride in the part that this country plays as a staunch ally in NATO, and also more worldwide even than NATO.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): In view of the statement that the Prime Minister has just made about the BBC, is she aware that many of us are absolutely delighted that she has come back from the NATO summit without getting entirely her own way? It is about time that the nations of the world decided that Mrs. Thatcher does not run everything. If she did, we should be involved in a nuclear war in no time.

Is the right hon. Lady further aware that she speaks with two voices? On the one hand, she says how delighted she is to work with Mr. Gorbachev and, on the other hand, she does everything possible to strengthen the military forces in the Soviet Union that want to undermine Mr. Gorbachev and are in fact undermining Mr. Gorbachev. Is it not clear that the Russians want to get rid of nuclear weapons over a period, to carry out the reforms that Mr. Gorbachev wants, and she more than anyone else in the Western world, even more than Reagan, is undermining those efforts?

The Prime Minister: It will come as no surprise to the hon. Gentleman to hear that I disagree with him. Perhaps he can say where one did not get the British way in NATO. One did. It was our job. We fought to get the modernisation in. There was no debate about whether or not nuclear forces needed to be modernised. Everyone accepted that they did. In the ministerial groups and the high-level groups, everyone accepts that they do. They make provision for future action. The only question was whether we said that in the communiqué. I believed in being open in the communiqué and, supported and backed by many others, we agreed that not only should we modernise our nuclear forces, but that we should say so in the communiqué. That is clear. There is no doubt about it. Everyone knows that we have to do it. It was what we said in the communiqué. I hope that the hon. Gentleman thinks that it was right to be open-minded.

We welcome the reforms in the Soviet Union. I have said many times that it is only on the basis of a sure defence and a sure deterrence that we can encourage openly the reforms that are taking place. We know that it is not easy. If they fell apart, if trouble is caused in the satellite countries, or if the Soviets return to a much more Stalinist figure, we know that, whatever happens, our defence continues to be sure because we take the necessary decisions in time. The hon. Gentleman will know that the lead times for modern equipment are very long, and one mistake now in refusing to make decisions could undermine the defence of the whole country. That is our fully consistent position.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Does my right hon. Friend agree that we speak with one voice, and that that voice is for unity and security in Europe and the rest of the world? Does she agree also that the Opposition speak with one voice in matters relating to disarmament, and that that is a voice of surrender and sellout? Does she further agree that the results of this summit will do an enormous amount to enhance respect for this country in the world as a result of her efforts in initiating it and carrying it through?

The Prime Minister: Yes, I agree. Conservative Members speak with one voice: that we should have a sure defence and deterrence. We are always ready to enter dialogue on effective arms control agreements. I agree with my hon. Friend that the Opposition speak with one voice. The Leader of the Opposition used that voice clearly when he spoke, during the election campaign, of using all the resources that one has to make any occupation completely untenable.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must have regard for the fact that this is private Members' time. I shall allow questions to continue until noon and then we must move on.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): The Prime Minister was free with her advice to Mr. Gorbachev as to how he might deal with dissidents in his Politburo—and she should know. Was she so free with her advice to her protagonist, Chancellor Kohl, as to how to deal with elements in his Cabinet and country who, under no circumstances, will accept one of her modernised Lance missiles, or any other missiles, on West German territory?

The Prime Minister: Chancellor Kohl has been one of the staunchest members of NATO. It was he who agreed to deploy cruise and Pershing missiles. We deployed cruise first; West Germany was second. Those were new nuclear weapons that were necessary to deter the Soviet Union. It was necessary to demonstrate our strength, and Chancellor Kohl was the second to deploy. West Germany has also taken modernised nuclear artillery shells, so the hon. Gentleman is completely wrong.

How do I give Chancellor Kohl advice? I say that I do not believe in coalition Governments — Liberals are weak everywhere.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): Despite the mental meanderings of the Opposition, there is overwhelming evidence to show that the people of this country have not forgotten the lesons of the inter-war years. The memory has not been dulled that war came about because of weakness, not strength. My right hon. Friend's statement today will be welcomed throughout the country, particularly in the north of England, because we can now look forward to the modernisation of our defence programme. I hope that this will not be the last time that my right hon. Friend comes to the Dispatch Box to say that we shall remain strong in this country.

Bearing in mind all the work that my right hon. Friend must do, may I ask her to reflect for a few moments on the BBC before doing out more money to it, and look at the play that it put on this week, which was a travesty of justice for NATO and the defence of the western world?

The Prime Minister: It is six years since we have had this sort of NATO summit of Heads of State and Government taking stock and considering guidelines for future action. It was therefoe vital that we secured the agreement publicly that nuclear forces must be modernised as necessary. The detailed decisions, as my hon. Friend knows, are taken in the ministerial nuclear planning group, which meets in April. It will first have to consider any dispositions consequent upon the intermediate nuclear forces agreement, and, later, which weapons should be updated as necessary. My hon. Friend is aware that the lead times are long, which is why we had to get the guidelines clear for Ministers who take these detailed decisions. However, it is clear from the NATO communiqué that our defence will continue to be sure; so will our deterrence, and all members of NATO agree with that conclusion.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Does the Prime Minister accept that anyone looking objectively at what she has done this week would conclude that she has gone completely mad? The world is racked by debt, hunger and poverty. The National Health Service is collapsing in her own country for lack of funding, and she goes to a NATO Council of Ministers with the deliberate intention of scuppering the possibility of a future disarmament treaty with the Soviet Union by agreeing to upgrade and spend a great deal of money on nuclear weapons. Does she not think it is time to stop increasing expenditure on nuclear weapons and to start spending money on the vital social needs of this country and the rest of the world? Is it not time seriously to promote disarmament, on which the Soviet Union is clearly keen, even if she and her friends in Europe are not?

The Prime Minister: Sixteen NATO Heads of Government and Heads of State agreed this effective statement. Of course, I do not expect the hon. Gentleman to like it. He does not agree with NATO or nuclear deterrence. He does not, therefore, agree with deterrence. One gets disarmament agreements only by negotiating from strength, in detail and toughly. One can then be very certain that there is verification. Those agreements will stick. When one agreement is completed, we move to another knowing that defence is sure and that the treaties that have been signed will stick and be honoured meticulously. Therefore, the intermediate nuclear agreement was reached and the United States and the Soviet Union move on to the START agreement, which I believe will be made. The hon. Gentleman wants arms control agreements and they are happening under this Government and other NATO Governments because we have acted from strength.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): Does my right hon. Friend agree that the Opposition, in trying to destroy our defences, overlooked one key political fact — that, despite being willing to give up some nuclear weapons, the Warsaw pact countries still show no sign of giving up their Communist creed or their desire to spread their revolution wherever they can?

The Prime Minister: Of course, it is part of the Communist creed that it should be extended by one means or another the world over. That has been part of the Communist creed from the beginning. That is why we watch their actions throughout the world very carefully. The Communist creed is spread by military might, by subversion or by proxy. At the moment there are hopeful signs, and we welcome the decision to withdraw from Afghanistan. We have been demanding that withdrawal for a long time. That withdrawal is welcome and we will watch its implementation carefully. We also note that more world aid is provided by NATO countries than by Communist countries.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Is not the Prime Minister's obsession with nuclear weapons undermining the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation treaty signed by 133 nations stating that they will not have nuclear weapons manufactured or deployed on their territory? Is not her obsession also undermining the INF agreement, which she claims that she had something to do with—and that is not true—because many nations will believe that she is cheating on that agreement because of the increase in nuclear weapons? Will she consider an alternative other than the threat of mass extermination if she thinks that the Russsians are coming? Why will she not commit suicide if she is frightened of the Russians and allow the rest of us to continue to negotiate with Mr. Gorbachev, who she called "that boldly courageous leader"?

The Prime Minister: No. Disarmament was hoped for after the last world war and the West began to disarm. Shortly afterwards, the Berlin airlift occurred, and we will all remember that. As was said at the NATO summit, we did not choose to make the Soviet Union an enemy; the Soviet Union chose to be one. NATO was formed after the Berlin airlift and after the Soviet Union chose to embark on a heavy programme of rearmament. That NATO agreement and the action following it have kept the peace in Europe for 40 years and enabled us to continue to produce this kind of statement and debate in the House. The hon. Gentleman is the first to take advantage of that but the last to defend the means that achieved it.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): Does my right hon. Friend agree that we did not reach today's negotiating table by dangling obsolete weaponry before the Soviet policy makers? Does she also agree that the people in this country who seek genuine peace and security will be more reassured by this Government's policies than by the Labour party's policies which at best will leave our defence capabilities rusting in the cupboard, and at worst will abolish them tomorrow, and, according to the Leader of the Opposition, will involve us "taking to the hills"?

The Prime Minister: Obsolete weapons do not deter. Conventional weapons alone do not deter, and two world wars in Europe have already proved that. We want a war-free Europe, and we need to keep nuclear weapons to achieve that.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): Was the Prime Minister implying in her earlier replies that Chancellor Kohl is enthusiastic about the immediate deployment of modernised Lance missiles on German soil?

The Prime Minister: No, Sir, I said modernised artillery weapons. They have already been modernised. A decision has yet to be made about Lance. That will be one of the decisions. It is a United States weapon; it will have to be designed. The point about making the present decision is that we will be prepared as necessary to make decisions to deploy modernised nuclear weapons.

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): Can my right hon. Friend give the House more details of how NATO is to persuade the Soviet Union to eliminate its massive stockpile of chemical weapons? Does she not agree that the process has been made much more difficult by Britain's decision in the 1950s unilaterally to get rid of its chemical weapons? Does she not think that there is a lesson to be learnt from that in relation to nuclear weapons?

The Prime Minister: Yes; my hon. Friend is right. I have frequently said that Opposition Members should really criticise the Soviet Union for not following our example in unilaterally getting rid of chemical weapons. It proves that unilateral disarmament is useless. One's opponent merely increases his stockpile and modernises and updates his weapons. I think that a change of view came about in the Soviet Union when the United States, which has only a very small stockpile of older chemical weapons, decided to go ahead with work that would update that stockpile if necessary. It was following that decision that the Soviet Union changed its mind about wanting to negotiate a global plan for the reduction of chemical weapons. Again, we have to watch verification because these weapons are very easy to make and therefore very difficult to verify.

Mr. Speaker: We now return to the debate on the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. Gentleman please resume his seat?

Enterprise Initiative

Question again proposed.

12.1 pm

Mr. David Evans: I take this opportunity to congratulate my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on her success in the NATO discussions and to say how much I agree with everything that she said.

The enterprise initiative is about small businesses. The small business man has an idea, and he knows perfectly well what he wants to do with that idea but unfortunately it sometimes takes a long time to develop the idea successfully. The initiative will help the small business man in that respect. I like to think that, through his ingenuity and entrepreneurialism, the small business man will find ways to develop his business—even when bureaucracy, local authorities and property owners seem to stand in his way at every turn. Bankers need security. They need all sorts of assurances if they are to help the very small business to develop. Nevertheless, in my experience the small business man usually manages to get the business off the ground one way or another.

I was glad to see from the White Paper that there will be more regional offices to help the small business man whose business has become a reasonable success. To begin with, small business men do not understand what a business plan is or even what cash flow is. They find that out by overtrading and suddenly finding that they need the bank manager's help yet again. That is why I welcome the regional offices. There comes a time, after the business has eventually got itself off the ground, when it needs to take on further responsibilities—in terms of management, expertise, new premises, products, capital investment or banking facilities. Enterprise counselling could greatly benefit the business that is just about to expand beyond all that its owners originally dreamt of. Most business men start by wanting to run a small business, and only in the development of that business do they begin to realise their potential and ability.

I welcome the consultancy process, but, contrary to what has been said, I have not met many civil servants or Government officers with entrepreneurial flair. My experience is the reverse. Unless they are carefully chosen and are prepared to be trained, we may find that we have a typical bank manager type who will deter the entrepreneur from developing his business if it is not copper bottomed, instead of helping him. Can those counsellors who are supposed to direct up and coming entrepreneurs be trained, monitored and reported on yearly or two-yearly?

When a civil servant decides that an entrepreneur can attract capital and the proper quality of staff, it is time for consultancy. Consultants are not what one expects them to be. Indeed, the first consultant I met I quickly head-hunted into my business, and I am not the only one to have done that. If one goes through the boards of multi-national companies one finds that their members often start as a consultant to the business. Will the Government reconsider carefully the most important step of helping a small business to become an international company which contributes to employment?

When a small business grows into a big business the business man has to decide whether to attract outside capital into it. That can be a frightening process. Again, a counsellor or consultant could help the business to become a public company. The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) said that yuppies were earning £120,000 a year. I am not worried about that. I hope that they earn £120,000 a year, not £20,000. I hope that some of those whom I am talking about become yuppies. I am keen that we should have many millionaires and I do not believe that the public are fooled by yuppies earning £120,000. The public who have invested in BP and so on are sound and intelligent. They have made a long-term investment. They are not worried whether the shares go up and down; they are interested in the dividend, whether the company is making profits and providing employment, and whether they can leave their shares to their grandchildren. I refute what was said about the public being gullible; they are not.

The enterprise initiative will help enormously businesses which need capital and need to plug into the opportunities of the EEC, the European Investment Bank and merchant banks. Businesses do not know how to become public companies. They need independent advice, not from bankers and solicitors but from an independent consultant whom they can trust. That is important for their growth.

The next important stage concerns design. Products need to be designed attractively. In the past some of the goods produced in this kingdom have not attracted people, but now there is a tremendous improvement in the design of all the products on the shelf. If we do not design products and fix prices properly, Japan and other countries will continue to attract our buying public. After all, it is up to the public to decide what they want and do not want. Therefore, I welcome this initiative on design because design, manufacturing and selling are at one.

I like to believe that we are now a nation of house owners and of shareholders. I should like us to be known not as a nation of shopkeepers but as a nation of small and medium-sized businesses, because they underlie the prosperity of this kingdom.

12.10 pm

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): I very much welcome the enterprise initiative and its thrust towards further deregulation of our economy. It is an excellent move. However, I wonder whether it will affect the book trade. I have had several complaints from constituents about the possible imposition of VAT on books. The kind of thing that they say to me is, "Isn't that a tax on something special? Wouldn't it penalise schools and libraries and be a tax on knowledge?" To a large extent, I agree with them.

However, behind those criticisms, I believe that there is an impulse from the book trade itself, which is being rather hypocritical because of the existence of the net book agreement. Through the procedures of that agreement, which is probably the sole remaining instance of resale price maintenance, books have a price greater than the market would bear. Schools, libraries and ordinary people suffer because they are paying higher prices for books than they should. I hope that the Government will consider that distortion of the free market in their enterprise initiative.

I welcome the proposals that teachers should have experience of business world. In the House,we try to achieve the same objective—at least some of us do—through the Industry and Parliament Trust. We go out from these green Benches into the real world outside. I am not asking somebody else to do what I would not be prepared to do myself.

I regret that in the election not all teachers voted Conservative. When I was canvassing, some who were against us harangued me on the doorstep. It was rather like being back in school and being told off for being naughty. It struck me that that may be something to do with the fact that teachers go to school, then to teacher training college or perhaps to university, and then back to school, so they are thoroughly imbued in the school culture, rather than in the culture of the world outside schools and universities. I hope that through the enterprise initiative teachers will gain greater experience of the wider world, just as we do through the Industry and Parliament Trust.

I noted the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on the qualifications of counsellors and whether they would have had enough experience of the real world. I should be surprised if they were civil servants. They should be people who have been in business or marketing. Interestingly, although when I was special adviser to the Minister for the Civil Service I was very much in favour of increasing the secondment of civil servants to the world outside, I nevertheless believe that counsellors should come from the business world.

I am glad to report the success of enterprise in the north-west. As one local paper put it:

"The march toward Warrington/Runcorn by North American companies goes on . . . There are now some 75 North American companies in Warrington/Runcorn".

That is an example of the confidence that the United States has in our economy and in our continuing membership of the European Community.

In October last year the Warrington Guardian reported the intention of Enterprize North West to:

"build upon the area's booming business success".

Mr. Andre Winter of 3i said

"Warrington really does seem to be thriving and we are giving new and established companies the opportunity to grow further . . . People in the area certainly seem special".

I certainly agree with that. He said:

"They have entrepreneurial spirit and the ability to start up new businesses."

In January, the Warrington Midweek Guardian reported that

"Booming Warrington New Town continues to break records for attracting new companies . . . Half year statistics show that 120 companies signed leases to move into Warrington sites, bringing 1,042 jobs."

I have never met Eileen Bilton who is very much associated with the advertising for Warrington new town, but she certainly weaves some magic for the area. The general manager of the new town commented that Warrington-Runcorn was meeting

"greater success than ever before. We are particularly pleased at the number of jobs created and the high percentage of expansions."

In February, the Warrington Guardian reported an investment of £43 million in the town, bringing a further 1,500 jobs. The president of the Manchester chamber of commerce and industry, Mr. Lester George, said that the "North-West had talked itself into despair and it was only recently that the region had recognised its economic strength . . . The North-West is poised for expansion and nothing will stop it . . . The only question is whether business will be permitted to grow to its maximum capability."

I draw great inspiration from that new-found confidence in the north-west. The north-west has realised that retailing stories of doom and gloom will not increase takings. It has also realised that the difference between north and south is not a handicap, but an advantage. After all, in the past, it was enterprise that threw up the great cities of Liverpool and Manchester and beat the south-east into a cocked hat. I am sure that it could do so again. We even have some yuppies in Altrincham.

I think that Mr. George's question whether the north-west would be permitted to go up to its maximum capacity was a sage question. We are already meeting problems of the availability and mobility of skills. In Manchester, surveys show that a quarter of all manufacturers and those in service industries lack skilled labour and find it hard to recruit. That shows the importance of training for jobs and of the enterprise initiative.

I hope that the enterprise initiative will push hard against bureaucracy, as it promises. I know that we have abolished 500 quangos and reduced the number of Government forms to the height of Big Ben, but, small business men, repeatedly tell me that there are still too many chiefs and not enough Indians in our bureaucracy, and that there is still too much red tape.

I have been contacted by a company called Econoloft, which is the largest loft installation company in the United Kingdom. Sadly, it has met the kind of obstructionism about which I am complaining. Its success has been built upon its product of space-saver stairs, which provide access to lofts that would not be possible through the use of traditional stairs. The company has gone through a lengthy process of obtaining 40 determinations from the Department of the Environment on its safety and specifications and has had personal ratification from the Secretary of State for the Environment. However, because of some quirk of the law, individual building control officers can still take objection to that product and say that, in their opinion—only their opinion appears to count—the specifications conflict with the 1985 building regulations.

Some local authorities now have the bit between their teeth and have engaged in criminal prosecutions of that company with all the bad publicity that attaches to such a criminal prosecution. For example, there was a prosecution in Chippenham. I am glad to say that it was dismissed, but, undeterred after the case was heard, the local authority in Saffron Walden has now given notice to the company that it intends to prosecute it for its product. That is expensive, vexatious, time-consuming and harassing for a company that is ambitious to do its best for itself, its region and the United Kingdom. If given its head, it could install its own manufacturing capability for the space-saver stairs, and bring extra employment to the region.

It is precisely that kind of nonsense that the enterprise initiative should snuff out, and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will consider the matter with despatch.

Whether the north-west will be permitted to develop to its full capacity will also depend to some extent on what happens in the run-up to, and after the winding-up of Warrington-Runcorn new town. I hope that the Government will take a flexible approach to the receipts of the new town prior to its wind-up, and that those receipts will not simply disappear into the maw of the Exchequer. Those assets are considerable, and are being realised with some despatch. I hope that some of them will be reinvested, so that the industrial parks in the north-west can be completed. That would chime in well with the Government's general policy of building in incentives for all.

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): I am bound to say that it is extremely difficult to refocus the mind on the subject that we are supposed to be debating—not only because this has been an unusually exciting morning, but because an hon. Member's spirits do not exactly lift when he rises to speak surrounded by serried ranks of empty Benches. Nevertheless, I am not deterred.

Mr. Butler: Labour Members made a big fuss earlier this week about an article in The Guardian by Andrew Rawnsley, which accused them of being either drunk, incompetent or lazy. Yet only one of them is here today.

Mr. Cran: My hon. Friend has made an eloquent point, to which I do not think I need add. The facts speak for themselves.

I am an enthusiast for the enterprise initiative. I say that having had considerable dealings with the Department of Trade and Industry for some years. In the years before this Government and the White Paper of which the enterprise initiative is part, all that we had from the DTI was interventionism of one sort or another. We looked at certain sectors and decided how they could be improved. We spent £20 billion for 20 years on regional policy, and in the end I do not believe that any of us received the value for money that we wanted.

That is why I consider the White Paper quite revolutionary. This is the first time that I can remember that the DTI has been so strongly associated with the word that was used by my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans)—entrepreneurship. I am delighted at that, because I well remember trying to tell the CBI a few years ago that it should sponsor a crusade for entrepreneurship. I believe that this was the way to strengthen the regions of the United Kingdom, make more successful the businesses that were already there, and, indeed, to encourage more new businesses.

I could not interest the CBI in that proposition, for reasons that I need not go into here. In addition, the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), who is no longer in his place, spent a long time telling us that the practice of past Governments was right, and that we needed a formalised industrial strategy. What he did not tell us was that it is clear from consulting the business community, the CBI and the Association of British Chambers of Commerce that not a man jack of them wants that sort of industrial strategy.

What the business community wants and what it has got from the Government are the conditions in which it can take the marketing and strategic and other decisions necessary to decide the future of its businesses. I was disappointed that the hon. Member for Yeovil did not give a balanced picture and admit that there are many people who do not want his concept of an industrial strategy. What we want—it is on offer in the White Paper—is the encouragement of enterprise.

Before the Government were elected to office one began to wonder whether the spark of enterprise had been extinguished from the British public. I almost believed that it had, but, my goodness, look at what has happened in the past 10 years. One can hardly believe that such a transformation was possible.

[Mr. Cran]

In the 1950s and 1960s many talented youngsters were not prepared to go into industry and business. I well remember conducting a survey with some sixth formers at the beginning of my career in industry. I asked them whether they would go into business and industry and whether, in due course, they would form their own businesses. I will never forget that 80 per cent. of them said that they were not prepared to go into business and industry, but wanted a nice, easy, cushy number in the Civil Service, the professions or whatever. The reasons for their choice were simple. They regarded employment in industry as dirty, not well paid and, more important, uncertain.

Against this background I congratulate the Government because they have wrought a cultural revolution in the outlook of youngsters and others in this country. The hon. Member for Yeovil did not mention that this revolution is reflected in the fact that since 1980 some 180,000 net new businesses have been established. That is an enormous achievement in comparison to the past.

No doubt some hon. Members would argue that such new businesses are all in the south-east, but that is seen not to be the case if one checks the record. Between 1984 and 1986, 20,000 new businesses were set up in the north of England. Therefore it is clear that this Government's approach is the correct way to proceed because we will not solve the problems of the regions by drafting in unwilling companies by way of regional policy. We will rejuvenate the regions by the "bottom up" approach, by encouraging existing businesses and encouraging people to establish new businesses.

I am aware that the Minister is not complacent about encouraging business. However, when one makes international comparisons — he and I appreciate that there are difficulties with such comparisons—it is clear that the Netherlands has four times our number of small businesses, France and Japan twice that number, and the United States and Germany one and a half times that number. Therefore, we have a fair way to go to make up the leeway, but that is not the Government's fault—it is the fault of previous Governments. I believe that the philosophy contained in the enterprise initiative will go a long way to enable us to catch up with those countries.

My hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield asked how the Government can encourage business. I believe that few previous Governments have known how to encourage business. Let us consider the problem of deregulation. We are all aware that business men resent having to comply with the onerous requirements that the Government and others place upon them. We are aware that the Government are unable to abolish all such requirements completely, but they must reduce them. Therefore, I was delighted to learn from the White Paper —tucked away in one or two lines—that we will receive a deregulation White Paper some time in the summer. That is first-class news, but, for goodness sake, let it not be a recitation of what the Government have already done.

I pay tribute to the Government for what they have done, but I want to see a radical approach in that White Paper. I wish that I had time to outline my proposals, but I must press on.

The White Paper on deregulation states:

> "All new proposals for requirements on business are examined".

Obviously, that is to ensure that compliance requirements are minimised. That seems to be first-class. The document continues:

> "Gradually,"—

that is a word that always worries me—

> "all existing requirements are being examined in the same way."

Full marks to the Government for starting the process of gradually examining existing requirements. The problem is that all the difficulties stem from those existing requirements. Therefore, can the Minister tell us how gradually is "gradually" and whether he has a time frame within which the Government expect to go through existing legislation. We are all waiting with bated breath.

The White Paper also states:

> "The system of assessing the compliance costs . . . is being further developed and departments are being encouraged"— another word which worries me—

> "to identify more targets for regulatory reform."

That approach is absolutely right. There is no doubt about that. However, that is passive language. Will the Minister and the Government tell us what it means? The Government's heart is in the right place, but will they move quickly enough? That is what the small business community wants to know.

Another aspect of the White Paper which appends to the initiative is the transfer of technology and co-operative research. We all agree that that is vital. When I represented the CBI — to make it clear to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) that I am not ashamed of that — I was always amazed at the unwillingness of many companies — not all companies fall into that category — to innovate. That seems extraordinary because the future of industry is that it should innovate.

I was also worried about the unwillingness of many companies to spend on research and development. Many companies preferred to go to the Government cap in hand, saying that they would spend on research and development if the Government would pay part of the cost. That was excusable when industrial profits were at low levels, but that could not be said now when industrial profits are at the highest levels for many years.

Therefore, this atrocious situation, whereby United Kingdom industrially-funded research and development is lower than that of most of our competitors, should be reversed. That really has to be rectified. The onus is not on the Government; it is on the industrial community to be rather more aggressive. I welcome the innovation proposals. The mere stating of a solution — and it is stated most eloquently in the White Paper — is one thing; it is quite another to implement it.

In this regard I remember spending a lot of time trying to get industry and industrialists to go to universities so that the latter could tell the former what they had to offer. I can assure the very few hon. Members who are present that it was an uphill business. I could get them along only if I could say that there was money on the table. I could not simply say that they should go along and see how much they could get out of universities in terms of technological developments that occur in universities and elsewhere. At some point I should like to hear from the Minister what details he has to catalyse industry to make use of the enormous residue of facilities in universities and polytechnics. We must not forget polytechnics. In the country at large there are a number of first-class polytechnics that companies should also look to for advice and guidance.

Moving on to the core of what was said by my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman), I should like to talk about the enterprise initiative itself. I have enormous respect for small business men. Even though politicians stand for election every five years, we do not take the same risks. Small business men mortgage everything. Some even second mortgage their homes. The companies that they establish do not, however, have strength and depth. That is why the approach that is set out in the White Paper is correct. If a company has no spare resources, it is the Government's role to ask, "How can we help a small and, in some cases, weak business to transform itself into a stronger business that, in 20 or 30 years, may employ many people?" That is why the White Paper is correct.

We should recognise that many companies worry about consultants. They always consider that they are too costly and that, in any case, once they are let in through the front door, one cannot get them out through the back door. The approach of the White Paper will assuage such fears. The Government have generously contributed £50 million to fund the scheme. Some may say that they are not generous, but it should be noted that the Government are prepared to make more funds available in the following two years. Such funds will be welcomed and used by business men who recognise that, these days, the market place is extremely complex and is becoming more complex.

I was slightly worried when I read the section relating to design, marketing, and so on, because I did not see the word "communications". That surprised me. I have no doubt that that does not mean that it is not the Government's intention to encourage communications but rather that the document was written by somebody with a more academic approach than we have. Design is not academic or abstract. It means communicating with customers to ascertain what the customers want. That was not clear in the document. The same applies to marketing. Marketing is not just a sales force; it is a whole company, from top to bottom, being orientated towards selling what it produces. That means upward and downward communication. I hope that, when the initiative gets off the ground, this point will be understood.

In the past few years, my hon. Friend the Minister has played a great part in encouraging industry's awareness of the need for better quality. He knows more about quality than I do, but he and I know that it is not just a matter of computer-aided design and manufacturing but of management communicating with the work force. If one is building a car, one does not just shove on an ill-fitting component so that one can get another unit out of one's factory. Therefore, there is a tremendous need for communication at all levels within British industry.

The enterprise initiative is a solid, revolutionary concept, but many other things are needed to make it work. For example, it is much easier than it was, but it is still difficult for a small or growing business to get finance, particularly loan and equity finance between £50,000 and £100,000. The hon. Member for Yeovil correctly said that there is a shortage of patient money—that is, having to wait five years for one's return. The trouble is, however, that the hon. Gentleman was long on analyses of and short on solutions to the problems. That was fairly typical of the approach that we had from the Opposition Benches. One solution is the formation of local investment companies, which would take in equity and make long-term loans. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not listening today, and may not even read on Monday what I am saying. Therefore, I might have to write to him about this. That said, I am reminded that my hon. Friend the member for Carshalton and Wallington is parliamentary private secretary to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, so perhaps I can rely on him to tell my right hon. Friend what is required. In fact, what is needed to make the idea possible are fiscal incentives for investors in local investment companies.

Taxation is always an irritant—even to Members of Parliament—but it will always be with us. However, an increase in the threshold of corporation tax to £250,000 would be welcomed by the small and middle-sized business community.

Another great problem is inheritance tax. If there were more than one Opposition Member present, there would no doubt be a great hue and cry about my suggestion that there should be 100 per cent. relief for business assets. Far too many business men who build up a business over many years then find that it is taxed from under them, and that is quite wrong.

I congratulate the Government on a first-class document.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I begin by apologising to the House and to my hon. Friend the Minister because I shall not be able to stay for the winding-up speeches, as I have a constituency engagement this afternoon.

Property is the basic raw material for trade, commerce and industry. In Victorian times and during the industrial revolution, no obstacles were put in people's way by, for example, planning laws. When that great man, Brunel, was laying out the Great Western Railway, he did not have to trot off to his local council offices and apply for planning permission to build Paddington station. He did not have to deal with inspectors and all the majestic panoply of Government interference. He got on his horse—not on his bike; I do not think they were around then—and went out and surveyed the line of the Great Western Railway himself. Those were the days of great enterprise and initiative.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: And slums.

Mr. Summerson: I remind the hon. Gentleman that it was Conservatives who brought in the Factories Acts.

Our people have not lost enterprise and initiative. We remain an innovative, resourceful and inventive people but, to a great extent, that is being stifled by red tape. Today, we have to labour under the town and country planning legislation. The first such Act passed in 1948, and since that date, those responsible for administering the legislation have worked out a jargon all their own, as I know from my experience. They give such reasons for refusing applications as, "There is a certain rhythm about the roof scale along this stretch of London road and this should not be disturbed" or, "Such an item would not be a welcome addition to the street scene." I do not know where they get this jargon from—perhaps they learn it at planning school—but it is of no help to the small business man who is trying to expand his factory.

[Mr. Summerson]

I congratulate the Government on revising the use classes order. This is excellent, but I urge them to go further. They have not really started. I can give another example of obstructionism—that by local authorities. To this day, 43 years after the second world war ended, there are still empty bomb sites in our cities. There is such an empty site only 100 yd from where I live, and such sites can be found in many parts of our great cities. The one near my home was owned by the Greater London council.

Those of us who take an interest in property matters are keeping a careful eye on property auction catalogues. In those we see properties that were formerly owned by the GLC being sold at auction. In many instances the leases on those properties expired years ago. The rents being paid today are at levels that obtained 10, 15 or 20 years ago. Many properties owned by local authorities should be given over for use by business. However, many local authorities do not even know what properties they own. They have no idea and are not interested.

In my area, the London borough of Waltham Forest is controlled by Labour and the council imposed a 62 per cent. rate increase last year and decided to set up an economic development unit. How very helpful to local businesses to know that they can go and discuss that 62 per cent. rate increase with friendly officials at the town hall!

> "The identification of Urban Programme Areas for particular help is a new policy for DTI and recognises the particular difficulties of such areas. A number of inner cities will similarly benefit from the new measures for Development Areas as well as Regional Selective Assistance. DTI is also responsible for coordinating the work of the City Action Teams in major cities and running 16 Inner City Task Forces."

That is greatly welcomed. I urge my hon. Friends in the Department of Trade and Industry to confer with the Department of the Environment so that we may have some co-operation between those two Departments. It is fine for the DTI to bring forward this sort of programme. However, obstruction by the local authorities that rule in inner city areas will tend to cancel the benefits of such programmes. We must make full use of all the resources in our inner cities.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: What about people?

Mr. Summerson: We must also make full use of people, but, as I have said, people need places in which to work. If some local authorities deny businesses the right to use certain areas and buildings, those people have nowhere to work and will go elsewhere. In its turn, that will put more pressure on rural areas.

I urge the DTI and the D o E to get together and overhaul the planning system. I am sure that hon. Members will have seen the report from the Audit Commission. That sets out local authority property holdings and what little use is made of them. That matter needs to be looked at urgently. Enterprise initiative cannot flourish if it is denied the premises that it needs. It is all very well to talk about trade and industry and about initiative and enterprise, but people need places in which to work and I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to look at that.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): My first pleasant task is to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on his success in the ballot, his choice of subject and the vigorous way in which he put his case. This is the second time in three weeks that I have attended a debate on a motion introduced by a Conservative Member during which the Opposition Benches have been almost empty, save for the token presence of the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell). We all sympathise with him in his lonely vigil.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: The hon. Gentleman probably realises that, on Fridays, Labour Members go to their constituents and attend to the disastrous consequences of the Government's economic policies.

Mr. Nicholson: Conservative Members, too, have constituents to look after.

I was interested to hear the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) and his reflections on the planning system, although I do not necessarily follow him to all his logical conclusions. I have just returned from a parliamentary delegation visit to Saudi Arabia, where planning regulations are somewhat in their infancy. What impressed me, especially in the capital city of Riyadh, which is not in the most delightful of spots—it is in the middle of a desert plateau—was the dignity and splendour of modern buildings that have been put up during the past five years.

It is relevant to our debate on enterprise that we should not consider such matters simply in terms of utilitarian financial incentives. Especially in the inner cities, an immense amount depends on environmental considerations and the type of buildings, public or private, that are erected. Indeed, for the past 10 years, Saudi Arabia has been working on a new industrial city on the shores of the Gulf at Dubai. It is a most impressive achievement.

I contrast those achievements with Britain where we have planning laws to an excess, the Department of the Environment building at No. 2 Marsham street—that great tribute to architectural splendour.

It is a pleasure to take part in a debate with my next door neighbour, the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown). My sorrow at his flitting from the scene must be counterbalanced by the fact that I shall have to leave in three quarters of an hour and will be unable to hear the hon. Member for Great Grimsby and my hon. Friend the Minister.

The hon. Member for Yeovil made an interesting point about venture capital in the regions, and I hope that it will be picked up, if not in this debate, in the Government's approach to such matters. I do not question the statistics that he mentioned, but my impression is that we are beginning to get substantial new life in the regions, especially in the west midlands and my native north-west, which suffered greatly in the recession. As my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) said, new businesses are being created in the north-east at a rate of 6,000 a year and the number of businesses setting up under the enterprise allowance scheme has increased by an average of 30 per cent. each year since 1983.

Manchester is now the second biggest financial centre outside London, with more than 50 banks located in the city. Last year, Japanese, German and Australian banks set up in Manchester. In the west midlands, which has suffered greatly from the industrial recession, tourism contributes more than £500 million to the economy. Since 1976, employment in that industry has increased threefold to 70,000. One might not think of the west midlands as a typical tourist area, so that is an achievement.

I had some sympathy with the hon. Member for Yeovil when he warned about the new publicity mechanism and the semi-change of name of the Department diverting attention away from its essential tasks. We should not dwell too much on enterprise and lose our essential concern with the rather more mundane matters of trade and industry. The Department of Trade and Industry, or whatever it is called, will be judged by how it assists, encourages and facilitates British industry to export and to regenerate our domestic market.

I inject a note of soberness into our discussion. The latest balance of payments figures from the DTI show, in 1986, a deficit on visible manufactures of £5,307 million, rising in 1987 to £6,542 million. The non-oil visible trade deficit rose from £12,519 million in 1986 to £13,809 million in 1987. Those are large, disturbing figures. The trend, while not savagely upwards, is still upwards. Those are deficits. We must be concerned with those figures.

I mentioned that I have recently returned from Saudi Arabia. Many of the conclusions that I reached on that visit would be the subject of a foreign affairs debate. We visited British expatriates and the embassy's trade offices there. We got the message from those who live, trade and work out there that not enough British companies were showing an interest in that extremely rich market, despite the fall of oil revenue. Saudi Arabia is trying, understandably, to diversify its economy. It is looking for partners in the industrialised world to help in that.

British companies are doing a certain amount, but we were told that more could be done. They wished that more companies would come out — that more smaller and medium-sized businesses would show an interest. They contrasted that with the success of French companies, for example. The point was also made that British companies and perhaps some British expatriates needed to improve their ability to deal with the Arab market. That is an important task for the DTI.

Everyone, including Opposition Members, took the view that Britain has an immense opportunity in a country such as Saudi Arabia at the moment. Last September an offset programme to the substantial Tornado sales from Britain to Saudi Arabia was concluded. That gives British firms a considerable opportunity for joint ventures.

There is another reason why Britain has an immense opportunity in Saudi Arabia. We took on board the impatience of many Saudis with the United States. For many decades, Saudi Arabia has had a close political and economic partnership with the United States, but the people were considerably affronted by the restriction that the United States placed some years ago on the sales of spare parts to aircraft that it had supplied. There was concern in the United States that those planes could be used in Israel. That affront was felt by all the people whom we visited. They are frustrated with the United States' policy on the west bank and the Israeli conflict. They look to what Britain can achieve. That is a matter for a foreign affairs debate, but be not surprised, it gives considerable export opportunities, which can benefit us.

One way in which the DTI can help is mentioned in the White Paper, which states in paragraph 9:

> "One possibility is to make more use of Chambers of Commerce and other regional bodies to deliver services to exporters where they can offer a network of contacts which is close to small and medium-sized businesses with the potential to export."

Perhaps I should declare an interest because I am a parliamentary consultant to the British chambers of commerce. They are discussing with the DTI the use of chambers of commerce to identify firms in the £1 million to £10 million turnover bracket, which could export more but do not, and to help to lead them to the point of entry in export markets.

Moving away from the export side of the discussion, that paragraph in the White Paper went on:

> "One other possibility is to use outside agencies such as Local Enterprise Agencies, Chambers of Commerce and firms of management consultants to provide an information and signposting service for the business development initiatives. The advantage of operating in this way would be to extend the range of DTI contacts with industry at a relatively small cost and to use wider networks of contacts with small and medium-sized businesses than is possible even through the extended Regional Office network."

My hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) welcomed the extension of DTI offices but said that it was important that there should be an entrepreneurial flavour to them. I hope that by using the premises and personnel of chambers of commerce and local enterprise agencies the entrepreneurial element will come in. I am happy to say that a number of chambers of commerce are involved in housing DTI personnel. They include Norwich, south-east Hampshire, Coventry—the Minister will be pleased to hear that; I am sure he played a major part in achieving it — north Staffordshire, Sheffield, central and west Lancashire, Chesterfield, Derby and Nottinghamshire. We hope that there will be more.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) referred to the opportunities for enterprise resulting from the privatisation of major industries. I do not want to enter a great argument now about the rights and wrongs of privatisation and what it achieves. But constituents have told me that merely transferring a major enterprise or utility from the public to the private sector does not, on the whole, change the people who work—as managers, or whatever—in that organisation. Many of them, it is said, still maintain the attitudes of the nationalised industry in which they worked before and in which their careers developed. I put that point to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy at a meeting last night. I know that, in the privatisation of electricity, he intends to encourage the input of entrepreneurs from outside. It is important not to lose sight of that opportunity in the discussions and developments that ensue from the White Paper.

In view of the time of year I want to give the House one or two reflections on the Budget of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. It should help to encourage certain activities that are relevant to enterprise—for example, increasing companies' training and R and D activities, and providing incentives to smaller and medium-sized firms to contribute to collaborative research through research associations. The possibility of contributions by local industry to specific non-profit making bodies charged with undertaking activity beneficial to the local community would also be helpful.

There is a consensus among Conservative Members that the high rates of personal taxation need to come down. The figure generally mentioned is 50 per cent. and I go along with that. The coming Budget is a good opportunity to achieve it. Last week I read in The Times —the Treasury sometimes allows these options to emerge in the public domain to test reaction—that the higher rates might come down to 35 or 40 per cent. We should approach that with care. We are not Saudi Arabia, and cannot afford no income tax or a return to 1939 rates of tax. We still have considerable difficulties and we must consider the political and social realities and pressures in society. I have substantial reservations about that course of action. I urge my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to try to do much more to make it worthwhile to work at the lowest end of the income scale.

We have done a certain amount about the poverty or unemployment trap through benefits and we got into some trouble over that with regard to housing benefit and other matters. We are approaching the end of that road. We can significantly help and give incentives to those on lower incomes by expanding an idea initiated by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry three or four years ago—a lower employee national insurance deduction for those on low incomes. We should do that rather than assist through a reduced rate tax band. The advantage is that that national insurance reduction would not need to be transferred right up the line. It is a relatively cheap way to help a specific group of people. Employers and chambers of commerce have made that point over many years and I reiterate it today.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor should also consider giving more incentives to middle management and younger professionals—and I am referring not to the yuppies in the City, but to the professionals in the private and public sectors who pay very high marginal rates of tax. The rise from the present 27 per cent. basic rate to 40 per cent. is extremely steep. I hope that the Chancellor will make that an objective when he presents his Budget.

I hope that the Budget will reinforce and encourage the enterprise initiative that my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington has so fortunately brought to our attention. That enterprise initiative must be related to the important tasks performed by the Department of Trade and Industry, dating back many decades to the days when it was the Board of Trade, to help Britain's trade and industry.

1.6 pm

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): As a Member representing a northern constituency, I often hear it said that there is an appalling gap between the north of England and the south of England—the so-called north-south divide. I have always regarded that idea as somewhat simplistic and misleading. It is wrong to imagine that there is nothing north of Watford, but whippets and welfare scroungers, Labour Members, dark satanic mills, Arthur Scargill and squabbling cricketers and brass bands.

Some of Britain's most beautiful countryside is north of Watford. Some of Britain's most inventive and wealthiest people are to be found north of Watford. Indeed, some of Britain's most thriving industries are in the north. It is too simplistic by half to say that there is a north-south divide. The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) made that mistake earlier. I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman is not in the Chamber now. This is the second debate this week in which I have taken part when the hon. Member for Yeovil, having spoken earlier, disappeared to further his leadership ambitions in other areas.

Mr. Wilshire: The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) has gone to look for a party.

Mr. Riddick: That is most interesting.

I believe that the real divide is not so much between the regions, but within the regions. There exists an enormous divide of attitude in the regions. I cannot agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) that everyone has undergone a change of attitude. I fear that that is not yet the case. The real divide exists between the people in the regions who understand the enterprise economy and those who do not understand it. It exists between those who have grasped the opportunities provided by this country's increasing emphasis on enterprise and those who have not grasped those opportunities or are even aware that they exist.

The social divide is between those who have taken the opportunity to buy their council houses and those who have not or, indeed, those who have taken the opportunity to buy shares in the industries that we have privatised and those who have not. The great divide is between those who have started their own businesses and are playing their part in Britain's flourishing private enterprise and those who do not understand or recognise the opportunities and rewards available from that enterprise.

Since the Government came to power in 1979 they have enormously improved the conditions in which private enterprise has to work, as we all know. I see that the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) is laughing. He should remember that we have reduced direct taxation and reformed the capital taxation system to provide proper incentives for individuals to work hard to produce the wealth that is so vital to this country's well-being. We have reduced the tax burden on small and large companies alike to encourage them to make decent profits. We have reduced the amount of red tape to free more time for the entrepreneur and manager to do what he is best at doing —designing, producing, marketing and selling. We have designed various schemes to help the budding entrepreneur to get off the ground, and the enterprise initiative is probably the best of these. In short, we have improved the overall economic climate so that enterprise can flourish and hard work and talent are rewarded.

As we all know, there is more work to be done; there are more battles to be won and more individuals to be convinced. I return to the question of attitude. Private enterprise, and Britain, will never flourish or achieve its maximum potential until all the people of this country believe in the enterprise culture—until they understand that competition is much healthier than corporatism, and that the ambition to improve the lot of oneself and one's family is nothing to be ashamed of and is much more laudable than relying on someone or something else. It is the age-old battle between those who believe in independence and those who believe in reliance. The real divide is between those who believe in freedom, choice, responsibility, and enterprise, which are the values that Conservative Members hold dear, and those who believe in dependence and servility to the state—the values in which Opposition Members believe.

It is depressing that no Labour Members are present apart from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby. The hon Gentleman said that that they were all in their constituencies. However, if we were discussing a motion about state support for, or investment in, industry, many Opposition Members would be present — and many Conservative Members would be here to argue against the idea. Conservative Members have won the battle of ideas in many parts of the country, particularly in the south of England but also in the west midlands and in many parts of the north. Many thousands of people in my constituency of Colne Valley understand that success and wealth creation come as a result of hard work and enterprise and not Socialism or what Lord Young called the nanny state. That is perhaps why the good folk of Colne Valley elected me — their first Conservative Member in 102 years. However, the battle of ideas has not been won completely and that is why we have no choice but to continue to give more power back to the people and allow them to run their own lives without for ever having to look over their shoulders to see whether the state, in whatever guise, approves.

The Government must address themselves to several areas to ensure that the enterprise initiative and private enterprise fully succeed. Education is the most important aspect of the whole process and the Government clearly agree. The DTI's excellent White Paper states:

> "The competitiveness of industry and commerce depends on our ability to harness the energy, develop the intelligence and promote the enterprise of our people, especially amongst the young."

I could not have put that better myself and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister on those excellent words.

I applaud wholeheartedly the Government's objectives to provide teachers and pupils with a greater exposure to the world of commerce, business and industry, but, most important, we must ensure that each individual has a first-class education. That is why the Education Reform Bill, which is now in Committee, is so vital to our well-being. What is so depressing is the way in which the battalions of education producers line up one after another and effectively say to the Government, "How dare you interfere with our God-given right to, and knowledge of how to, educate the children of this country." It grieves me to say this, but often it seems to be opposition for the sake of it. It is indeed a battle between the producers and the consumers of education.

Before I came to the House I worked in industry and spent a great deal of time interviewing people for jobs. When I interviewed for jobs that required O or A-levels, I was horrified regularly at the low level of general literacy and numeracy of many young people. It is not their fault. How unfair it is for them that they did not receive a proper basic education and for the 25 per cent. of Britain's long-term unemployed that they are either innumerate, illiterate or both. How can we expect them to play their part in Britain's ship, HMS Enterprise, if their education has not developed their intelligence, innate skills and ambitions? Our education reforms are a key factor in the Government's enterprise initiative.

I am lucky to have an American student working for me as a part-time research assistant. Earlier this week I told her that I was hoping to speak in this debate and she did a bit of work for me. Most of all, she put across to me strongly that in America enterprise and business are stressed at all levels of the education system, that in the universities and colleges tremendous stress is put on business and economics, and that people want to study those subjects. In no way is a career in industry frowned on.

My assistant pointed out that the Olympics in Los Angeles were wholly financed by private money and made a healthy profit. It was the first time that it had been done, yet the American people thought it was an admirable idea. If we were to host the Olympic games there would be no question of private enterprise; it would be down to the local councils. There need to be changes in education and attitudes.

One of the bees in my bonnet—as with education this one is not the responsibility of the DTI, although perhaps it should be — which is shared by my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson), is that one of the greatest obstacles to economic progress in inner city areas, towns and industrial areas, such as Colne Valley and Huddersfield, is the planning restrictions which can do so much to stifle enterprise, small businesses and entrepreneurs. I want the green belt protected, which is why it is important that we provide land for industrial and commercial development, for use by entrepreneurs in our towns and cities because that is the way in which we create new jobs.

I know of several developments in my own area of west Yorkshire which have been delayed, frustrated or even stopped because of the planning refusals, or the unnecessary planning restrictions and conditions that make the enterprise barely viable or, in some cases, impossible. There are a whole host of reasons for that. Sometimes it is because the plans are contrary to the local plan or because the highway department or the water authority objects. Sometimes the fire regulations make it difficult to proceed; and it is sometimes because of the Government. In my constituency for example, 128 buildings were listed as of historic importance in 1980. By 1987 that figure had increased to 1,455—it had been multiplied by 12. When such buildings are listed, we restrict their use for industrial development. Of course, we must protect our architectural heritage, but I believe that that has gone too far.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs will not be too disappointed that I have not referred to many of the proposals in his White Paper. There are not many proposals in it with which I disagree. It is a very good document and I welcome the increased business development help and consultancy that it outlines. I am pleased that it recognises that red tape and bureaucracy equal time-wasting and enterprise-blunting.

The real secret of the success of enterprise in this country lies outside the remit of the DTI. The downward spiral of income tax must continue, as must the reform of capital taxation. I have not touched on trade because I have not had the time. Clearly, the Government's emphasis on high-quality training is excellent. I hope that as British firms continue to prosper they will start to do more and more of their own training. Furthermore, the consistency and stability with which the Government have provided economic policy during the past eight years is of equal importance to enterprise. However, most importantly, we must get the education system right. We must change attitudes and we must get the planners off the backs of the entrepreneurs.

Free enterprise is at the heart of Britain's economic renaissance. The spirit of invention and enterprise is working in Britain once again as it did 150 years ago. If Government create the right conditions, free enterprise will do the job of reducing unemployment and creating wealth and happiness for the British people.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): One of the prerequisites of these Friday debates appears to be to say where we were before coming here. My hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) has been to the sunny sands of Saudi Arabia. The Opposition spokesman the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) is from the sunny sands of Grimsby. I have come from the dentist and, for that reason, I apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman), who opened the debate, for being absent. While he launched eruditely into the subject of enterprise, I had my feet up and was flat on my back, being capped—no doubt an experience more often felt by Opposition Members.

I very much enjoyed the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) and the other speeches that I was present to hear, but unfortunately I did not hear the opening speech. I am sorry that my hon. Friends have been so adamant about the green Benches of the Opposition. It is quite restful on the eye, and I am sure that the hon. Member for Great Grimsby is worth the rest of them put together, with his wit and the entertaining speech that is about to come. Linked to the wit and musical talents of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs it should be a fine summing-up for a Friday afternoon. We look forward to it.

I refer first to the changes in our society and the need for enterprise initiatives of all kinds to adapt our society to those changes. We must take into account the fact that we are moving from a world in which we spend two thirds of our life at work to a world in which we spend one third of our life at work. That is partly because of shorter hours, the shorter working week, longer holidays and earlier retirement.

We are also moving towards a world where, increasingly, people have more than one job at a time and more than one career during their working lives. We are also moving towards a world where employment in itself is no longer the norm, as more and more people are becoming self-employed. That is where such initiatives are particularly important.

About 700,000 new businesses have been created in the past eight years and the number of self-employed has increased from 1·9 million to about 2·6 million between 1979 and 1986, although the Minister may have more up-to-date figures. It is welcome to note that almost 250,000 people have taken up the enterprise allowance scheme. That is a new way forward, but we have a long way to go to catch up with some of our competitors abroad in encouraging smaller firms.

In Japan, for example, almost 50 per cent. of people work for firms which employ fewer than 20 people and only 8 per cent. work for firms which employ over 500. The same pattern is apparent in France and Italy. However, in Britain, some 26 per cent. of people work in big firms and only 25 per cent. in small firms.

There is much scope for greater expansion of our small firms sector and of the self-employed sector. The rewards are there to grasp. The recent report from the university of Newcastle, compiled by Doyle and Gallagher, showed that, from 1982 to 1984, only firms which employed fewer than 20 employees were the net creators of jobs. That is significant. The birth and expansion of firms is occurring in those sectors. They are creating the jobs on which the British economy so desperately depends.

Small firms have many benefits. Obviously, managerial control is much simpler, industrial relations problems are fewer and quality is more responsive to customer needs. However, small firms also have to contend with many problems. Their ability to innovate after the first idea is more restricted. They are more likely to have cash flow problems and less likely to have cash for investment and research. They are also less likely to understand marketing and export aspects and the technology that we need to encourage them to tackle. That is not surprising because most small firms start with an individual who has an idea. He does not start as an expert on marketing or man management.

We can give much more support to small firms. I welcome the initiative, particularly the marketing aspect, not only in terms of expanding horizons for the marketing of small firms, but of encouraging small firms to consider the nitty-gritty of advertising. Too often, in small firms' advertisements, one sees the small ad mentality of trying to fit as many words as possible into a confined space, hoping to get the message across. Advice on that matter could go a long way to assist such firms.

I also welcome the changes which will make access to the various schemes easier. For example, under the loan guarantee scheme, since 1981, £600 million has gone to 18,000 small firms. Very few of those grants have been in amounts of less than £15,000, yet the small grants are often the most needed. Grants under the scheme have been most difficult to obtain because of the complicated procedure involved. It is good that the Government and the banks have worked together to ease that problem.

I also welcome a move that is occuring in the EEC. I do not recall that the hon. Member for Great Grimsby has ever welcomed anything from the EEC, except perhaps the fish which, of their own free will, swim into the Grimsby docks——

Mr. Austin Mitchell: The other way.

Mr. Bowis: Into the Grimsby nets, and then they go the other way.

The hon. Gentleman might force himself to welcome the movement in the EEC in respect of the fiche d'impact. It is difficult to translate, but it has nothing to do with fish. It does not translate exactly as the enterprise and deregulation unit but it requires all legislation and amending legislation to go to a committee for its impact on small firms. Until it has been through that process, legislation cannot be enacted. There is a lesson for my hon. Friend to preach to his colleagues in some of the other Departments—not least the Treasury and the DHSS—to ensure that their legislation has no unfortunate impact on small firms, as, sadly, it too often has.

I welcome the shift in DTI spending away from the broad regional grants to more selective spending on technology, research and development and advisory services. That is the right way to encourage businesses to start and to grow. In the latter context, it is good to see that spending has increased from about £142 million to £147 million, approaching three or four times as much, over the period of this Government.

Hon. Members have raised the problems of labour shortage and uncertainty over the housing market, among others. Again, I hope that my hon. Friend will speak to his colleagues in other Departments about the effect of the cost of local government on small firms. Progress is being made in many parts of the country, not least my own area in Wandsworth, where the partnership between local and national Government has brought in more new firms—including manufacturing firms. In Battersea, we have reduced unemployment by 19 per cent. in the last year, and in Wandsworth it is down to 9·2 per cent. Wandsworth is the only inner London borough, apart from the City of London, where unemployment is below 10 per cent.

Much of that improvement is due to the policy of keeping rates low so that jobs can be created in the inner cities, and there is a fear that the new uniform business rate will have an unfortunate impact on some small firms. The National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses did a survey of its own members, and found, for example, that a new engineering workshop in Norfolk would be paying 219 per cent. more in UBR, a hairdresser in Lincoln 300 per cent. more, a pub in Broadstairs 362 per cent. more and a railway arch workshop in Slough 440 per cent. more. Although the Government are rightly trying to help the north, as opposed to the south, in some of their rate reform policies, when they say they must be using a transferred epithet, because businesses in the south-east will pay more business rates whether they are prosperous or not.

"The more prosperous businesses in the South East will be paying more rates",

I do not wish to cut into the happy duet that we are about to enjoy, but I briefly ask my hon. Friend the Minister to pass on to his right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State my welcome for his use of 25 employees as the definition of a small firm. In the past, figures of anything from 100 to 250, or even 500, have been used. In fact, about 78 per cent. of firms employ five or fewer people, and the enterprise initiative package will assist those very small firms to grow.

I look forward to hearing what my hon. Friend the Minister has to say, and I am grateful for the opportunity given to us by my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington to debate the matter.

1.33 pm

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): I shall begin the basso profundo part of the duet, leaving the tremolo to the Minister, who has brought the skills of rock opera to the Department of Trade and Industry.

Let me first congratulate the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on winning the ballot. I must congratulate him rather less on the motion, which, had it come from anyone else, would have been regarded as pure sycophancy—a desperate attempt to escalate an hon. Member's career from the higher reaches of Parliamentary Private Secretary. In the hon. Gentleman's case, however, I accept that it is not sycophancy, but is meant sincerely. I have heard him on this subject before, and I know that he speaks from a genuine concern.

I hope, however, that the hon. Gentleman will admit that the motion has brought an incredible amount of economic illiteracy into the Chamber. Perhaps it is just because it is Friday. It is amazing, when we pick up stones on Fridays, what crawls out from under them. A bigger collection of political twerps and economic illiterates have spoken today than I have ever heard before. Apart from the hon. Members for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), whose speech I enjoyed, the economic illiteracy has been tremendous.

I hope that the Minister can distance himself from some of the nonsense that has been mentioned by Conservative Members. It has been my pleasure to hear all that nonsense because I am Leader of the Opposition (Friday). Warhol said:

"everyone will be famous for fifteen minutes"— and indeed, everyone will be Leader of the Opposition for a morning—today it is my turn. In that capacity I wish to comment on the essence of the debate, the enterprise initiative document.

Gladstone used to entertain parties of visiting Liberals on his estate of Hawarden, where the great man relaxed by chopping down trees. Lord Randolph Churchill said that all that Gladstone's visitors went away with were chips from the trees that he had chopped down and that that was all he had provided for the people of the country. Churchill said:

"He told them that he would give them and all other subjects of the Queen much legislation, great prosperity and universal peace, and he has given them nothing but chips. Chips to the faithful allies in Afghanistan, chips to the trusting native races of South Africa, chips to the Egyptian fellah, chips to the British farmer, chips to the manufacturer and the artisan, chips to the agricultural labourer chips to the House of Commons itself."

Gladstone was a big man, but the man whose initiative we are debating today is certainly not big. Gladstone was a hairy man, but mine brother Young is a smooth man, a more emollient presence than Mr. Gladstone. Certainly, Lord Young of Graffham did not chop down the trees himself—if we consider those trees to be the great oaks of British industry—they were brought down by the economic insanity that the Government pursued from 1979 to 1982. During that period one fifth of the British manufacturing capacity was closed down and 28 per cent. of manufacturing jobs went. Indeed, 1·8 million manufacturing employees lost their jobs and, for the first time, we became a net importer of manufactured goods.

Lord Young has been sent in to clear up the resulting disastrous landscape created during that period. He has been sent in to pick up the chips and to redecorate the stumps. It is similar to the joke that Adlai Stevenson made of Richard Nixon, namely that he was such a good politician that if he chopped down a great redwood he would stand on the stump and give a speech in favour of conservation. That is not Lord Young's job, he would get an advertising agency to do it for him. Indeed, the budget for the enterprise document and its promotion on television is £6·3 million. That money will be spent to pull the wool over the eyes of the people.

Lord Young would tell us that the trees have been chopped down for the best possible reasons. Some £6·3 million is being spent on telling us that the DTI is doing more when, in fact, it is doing less. The Conservative party often claims that the Labour party throws money at problems. It appears that Lord Young throws advertising agencies at problems and expects them to provide some kind of solution. The maxim is, "When in doubt advertise", and the DTI's advertising budget is expanding pari passu with the deficit in manufactured trade.

Lord Young has an advertising budget to tell us that the stump is still flourishing. All that it needs is good advice about its appearance and perhaps a consultative agreement with a painter to redecorate what is left of the stump of British industry.

Lord Young's job as a Minister is not to solve problems, but to conceal them. The Prime Minister has said, "David is not like other Ministers." That may be a compliment, but I am not sure, given the calibre of other Ministers. The Prime Minister has said, "Other Ministers bring me problems, David brings me solutions." Some might wish that that solution was a dilute mixture of tranquillisers or hemlock. That is not my wish. The solution that is brought to the Prime Minister in the initiative we are debating today is smarm—derived from Lord Young's repeated words, "Yes, ma'am." Smarm as the answer to Britain's problems is oozing out of the DTI.

Mr. Forman: As the hon. Gentleman is talking about the direction of the DTI under its present leadership, does he not at least pay tribute to the fact that since 1979 the balance of spending within the DTI has shifted dramatically away from propping up the industries of the past towards greater support of innovation and research and development? Is that not exactly what the Labour party would wish?

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. Gentleman is still working for that promotion. Of course we welcome that shift. However, it is shift within a reduced and misapplied budget. There is no strategy for the regeneration and encouragement of British industry.

Returning to Randolph Churchill and Lord Gladstone, what does Lord Young say to a nation which now has a higher level of import penetration than any other advanced industrial country? What does he say to a nation in which the imports of foreign manufacturers as a proportion of British output was 9 per cent. in 1966 and is now 48 per cent. — double the proportion in west Germany and in France? What does he say? He advertises. What does he say to an economy which has just had its worst ever monthly trading deficit? He advertises. What does he say to a manufacturing industry that has gone from a £5 billion surplus in 1978 to a £7 billion deficit? He advertises. What does he say to his ministerial colleagues who are now seriously embarrassed at the failure of the DTI to stop that trade gap widening remorselessly this year? He advertises.

The White Paper and its associated documents that have been pouring out from the DTI are an advertising compendium with no substance. They are irrelevant to the real problems.

The problem is that industry was so badly battered by what the Government did between 1979 and 1983 that the industries that survived the economic holocaust caused by high interest rates, an overvalued pound and a depressed and deflated domestic economy because of cuts in Government spending, had to throw overboard research, design, development and training — indeed, everything that makes for non-price competitiveness. They had to do that simply to survive.

Investment is still down. As a nation, we spend three times less on each individual training system than is spent in Sweden. We produce three times fewer trained engineers than France. Research, design and development have all gone.

Now, in this motion, we are asked to praise the DTI's belated efforts in that direction. Praise is due to them, but it is about time they saw some light. They cannot simply graft on those measures and expect them to take. They cannot expect business to become competitive by grafting on research and design through consultancy arrangements. Research and design spring from competitiveness, they do not produce it. They are a reflection of competitiveness and the dynamic of British industry which begins with price competitiveness and generates profit.

Profits have always been too low in Britain. If we had higher profits we would have invested more, there would have been improved productivity, output and quality. We would have been able to spread research, design, development and model changes in the automobile industry over a larger output, thus pressing less heavily on each unit cost. If we had been able to do that, we would now be more competitive. We cannot graft on competitiveness at this late stage after the prelude of 1979 to 1983.

Competitiveness is a syndrome; it cannot be created by consultancy arrangements. It is a driving desire for change, growth and expansion, a desire to compete and to win in the world market which does not exist because industry has been cowed and battered by what has been done to British industry in the name of monetarism. The danger is that we are now locked into a lower level of output and production. It is difficult to expand beyond it without sucking in imports and worsening the balance of payments.

It is true that there was an improvement between 1986-87. The pound and oil prices came down. Therefore, our exports became slightly more competitive. Productivity went up and unit labour costs went down. The Government were beginning to learn some economic sense — if we run the economy for competitiveness, we can increase productivity and bring down unit labour costs by the expansion that that generates. But we must run the economy to be competitive. The Government were prepared to do that only because an election was in the offing in 1987. It is certainly not the start of an economic miracle.

We shall face serious difficulties in manufactured trade — difficulties to which the enterprise initiative is largely irrelevant. With the dollar coming down, we face the fact that two thirds of the increase in manufactured exports that has occurred since 1979—it is a small increase—has gone to the American market. That two thirds is now threatened by the fall in the dollar. Also, American exports have become more competitive. They are already considerably more competitive in volume terms. Trade that is diverted from the American market competes more bitterly and intensely with our other traditional markets. We are still in the syndrome that the NEDC diagnosed in the 1970s, when Britain turned out products of a lower unit value than France or West Germany but imported high-value goods. That is still true.

Imports are taking an increasing share of the British market. That sounds incredible, after all the praise of the regeneration of British manufacturing that has come from Conservative Members. If British manufacturing has been so powerfully regenerated by the new spirit that the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) wanted to make compulsory in schools—he scolded the unemployed for not feeling the new spirit of enterprise—why is it that, between 1979 and September 1987, the percentage of the domestic chemicals market taken by imports increased from 30 per cent. to 40 per cent.? That was in less than 10 years.

The proportion of imports in mechanical engineering increased from 29 to 38 per cent., in electronics from 31 to 48 per cent., in motor vehicles from 38 to 48 per cent., in textiles from 33 to 46 per cent., in clothing from 29 to 38 per cent., in washing machines from 28 to 35 per cent. in 1987, and in televisions from 22 to 37 per cent. If we are so good, why has that happened? It is because industry has been so badly treated by the Government that it has not been able to compete. We cannot make it compete by grafting on the new elements that have suddenly been thought of by Lord Young.

All the basic weaknesses of the British economy still exist. They have to be dealt with—not the peripheral matters with which the enterprise initiative deals. I shall quote various reports that have been produced over the past few months about the state of British manufacturing. I hope that the Minister will give us his assessment of their accuracy. Investment is almost the life-blood of competitiveness—the one thing on which we have to fight back against the world — yet investment in manufacturing is 9 per cent. lower than it was in 1979. Indeed, in large sectors there has been a net disinvestment. We have been living on the seedcorn. The annual industrial survey of the Financial Times in January 1988 stated:

"In many areas . . . it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the rising sales of British goods derive less from investment in new products than from competitive prices, stemming from relatively low wages, and a currency level which, until recently at least, has been competitively priced."

On productivity, a summary of recent academic research by Warwick university states that Britain is still part of a "vicious and self-perpetuating spiral of low wages, low morale and low productivity."

A CBI memorandum to the NEDC last October states:

"Britain remains a relatively low-pay, productivity, low profit economy".

How will we improve all the things that we are supposed to improve in design if we have a low-pay, low-profit economy, if we do not involve workers, and do not generate investment? The Cranfield-British Institute of Management study, entitled "Managing Manufacturing Operations in the UK, 1975-1985" stated:

"The regrettable but overwhelming conclusion must be that very little has happened in manufacturing operations in the UK over the last ten years. This is particularly true in the key areas of 'competitive' edge—delivery reliability, lead times and use of new technology."

That is the background.

We welcome the provision of help and these consultancy arrangements in design and marketing. There should be a bonanza for the consultancies. They will produce a lot of advice, some of which will be practicable for British industry. It is just not enough. If the Department of Trade and Industry is prepared to recognise that the state has a role to play in offering these consultancy arrangements, and encouraging manufacturing in this direction, why does it not extend it in other sectors? In our competitor countries, Governments and Government Departments offer help to their manufacturing industry. They offer support, investment, finance and a closer working relationship with Government Departments than British industry has ever enjoyed. Why is assistance offered for sectors such as design but not for all the other problem areas faced by industry, and, in particular, why not for research and development?

Research and development must be the key to new processes and new competitiveness. The DTI has spent £30,000 on a report from Coopers and Lybrand on innovation centres, which I think are necessary for Britain. Coopers and Lybrand found, no doubt because that is what the Department wanted it to find, that innovation centres were not necessary. But Japan has 190 of them, all state funded.

The Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology produced one of the most damning reports on British investment in research and development that I have ever seen. It paints a depressing picture which is contrary to that created by the advertising monstrosity that the DTI is putting out. Lord Young told that Committee that recent Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development figures for industry-funded research and development in the United Kingdom and competitor countries gave cause for "considerable concern". He was half right. It should have been "overwhelming concern". He also said that he saw it as

"central to the Government's philosophy that the motivation for spending more on R and D must come from industry itself."

The problem is that it has not done so. It does not seem likely to do so and the Government are doing far less than they should. If we cut out defence-oriented research and development, the proportions of Government-funded research and development in EEC countries is: Germany 34 per cent., France 26 per cent., and United Kingdom 16 per cent. In other words, we are spending about half per head of what Germany is spending, about 60 per cent. of what France is spending and just a little over what is spent by those industrial powers, Italy and Belgium.

The conclusions drawn by the Committee, which looked in detail and heard evidence from all interested parties on the state of research and development, were:

"the overwhelming weight of opinion from almost every sector of the research community and from the private sector is that R & D in many fields is underfunded, and in some cases seriously underfunded . . . These two views should not be taken together to mean that the underfunding is wholly the responsibility of the Government. This is not true. A large share of the responsibility rests with industry, who have failed to invest enough in R & D and to appreciate its importance. Other sections of society, particularly the City and institutional shareholders, have to accept some responsibility. The Committee are concerned at the comparative failure of British industry to undertake and to finance R & D, and its disposition to rely on publicly funded work."

That is a crashing indictment of British industry and the Department of Trade and Industry, which has not been encouraging it to spend more on British research and development.

In the light of that failure and of the realities—not the public relations realities projected by the Department through its advertising budget and by Conservative Members reading Central Office briefs—the initiative that the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington asks us to commend is silly, smarmy and irrelevant to the real problems facing manufacturing. It is not a case, as the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) said, of fiddling while Rome burns, because the motion commends the increase in the output of firelighter manufacturers and offers them design consultancies on the shape of the briquettes that they manufacture. That is worse than fiddling while Rome burns.

The real problem is the industrial decline that must be reversed. We have wasted the oil opportunity that should have been used to expand the British economy to a new industrial strength. That opportunity was largely thrown away. Let me declare my overseas visits. In November 1987 I visited the United States and not Saudi Arabia. While I was in the United States, Senator Moynihan said that President Reagan's economic policy consisted of borrowing $3 trillion from the Japanese and throwing a party. The Government have taken the wealth from the North sea and thrown a party and, being mean, they have invited only their friends and not the mass of the British people in the way that Reagan invited the mass of the American people.

The Government have destroyed jobs and will be the only Government to go out with fewer jobs than they came in with. Over the same period America has created 10 million jobs by expanding the economy. What will happen in the 1990s when the oil contribution finishes? We will move into deficit in oil trade in 1991. The Government have used the opportunity of oil to destroy much of our manufacturing industry and we have moved into a horrendous and growing deficit on manufactured trade. I ask the Government to tell us what will happen when the oil goes in the 1990s. How will we survive and provide the jobs, preserve our standard of living, and generate growth unless we rebuild manufacturing industry? That cannot be done by the tinkering that is contained in the White Paper.

It is not a question, as the White Paper says, of a hands-off approach to industry. We have to run the economy for manufacturing, and that is what a Labour Government will do. We shall run the economy for growth, for expansion, for manufacturing and for jobs. We will not run it for finance or for the interests of money and those who have it or for high interest rates. We shall put money to work for the people and for industry. That is what any responsible Government ought to do. The tinkering in the White Paper is not reality.

British industry is now in a war, an international struggle for survival, and it is not surviving very well. Survival does not depend on small firms, 94 per cent. of which do not export. Survival depends on the big battalions and on the Government's co-operation with them to rebuild the country's economic fortunes. We send British industry into that international struggle burdened with heavier costs than its competitors. It has heavier rail transport costs and heavier electricity charges, just wilfully increased to fatten up the electricity industry for privatisation. British industry also has heavier interest rate charges than its competitors, and all those burdens are influenced by Government.

We are asking industry to fight that international war with that ball and chain round its leg. It has gone into battle not with protection and help from the Government, because it has been stabbed in the back. Any firm that invests substantially in research and development and in new products and modernisation, and diverts money from immediate profits to investment is promptly the object of a takeover bid because its share price is depressed by the very techniques of investment that are necessary to survive the international struggle. We send it into battle and we stab it in the back, and Pilkingtons is an example of that. The company then has to spend millions in fighting off the threat of the takeover bid. Lastly, we send it into battle not with Government help and co-operation, but with a Government running the economy for finance. The Government are now killing the goose, the fall in the pound from 1986, that has laid the Government's golden and electoral eggs. The real value of the pound sterling has appreciated by 13 per cent. since the last quarter of 1986. The Government complain about the increase in wages, but there has been a 13 per cent. increase in the real price of the pound. That is a bigger burden on industry than any increase in wages, and it is a direct consequence of the Government's policy of tying sterling to a deutschmark whose value must increase.

The terms of trade for manufacturers are worse than they were in 1981, and disastrous consequences will follow, just as they did in 1981. As the hosannas about success from the grovelling chorus of sycophants from whom we heard today ring loudest, matters are turning sour. We have returned to the stop phase in the stop-go cycle, and all that the Government have to offer to counter it is fatter consultancies. They are an irrelevancy.

The prospects are bleak and becoming bleaker. The balance of payments is widening, and the Government's only answer will be deflation. Exports will suffer and imports will become more competitive. None of that reality emerges from this half-baked, inadequate White Paper which fudges every issue and gives solutions to none of the problems. Essentially, it is the bland leading the blind stumblingly downhill.

2 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. John Butcher): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) for the timeliness of the subject that he chose for the debate. He has done the House a great service in providing us with an opportunity, for the first time in this Chamber, to consider the White Paper and the enterprise initiative and to discuss — fortuitously, only a few days before the Budget — many issues which hon. Members on both sides of the House believe should be aired.

I was interested to hear the latter comments of the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell). When, during his peroration on exchange rates, he launched into an analysis of competitiveness, he illustrated clearly the chasm between his approach and the approach of my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington to what precisely is required in the British economy to make us more competitive. My hon. Friend focused on non-price factors, just as the nations with appreciating currencies, such as Japan and West Germany, focus on non-price factors. If anything gives the lie to the contention of the regressive, unconstructed, backward-looking Labour party, it is this: if it was all about exchange rates, the German economy would be on its knees because it has had to cope with constantly increasing values in its currency, as have the Japanese. But they have insured themselves against the currency-based erosion of their competitiveness by becoming involved in the issues which my hon. Friend highlighted.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: Does not the Minister realise that it is precisely because those countries built their industrial power that they can sustain an appreciation in their currency? We cannot, because we are weaker. If a country's output of motor cars is 3 million, 4 million, 5 million, 6 million or, in the Japanese case, 7 to 8 million, it can spread the costs of research and design over the larger output. British Leyland produces just over 400,000 cars, which is probably about the same figure as in the late 1940s. We cannot afford the appreciation because we have not grown as much as those countries have.

Mr. Butcher: The hon. Gentleman is a perceptive man and a well-thought-of member of the Labour Front Bench. If he was giving a lecture on the economic history of the United Kingdom away from the House, he would acknowledge, rightly, the role of leads, lags and trends in an economy. Much of his speech reflected the worst sort of short-termism. He attributed to this Government faults that have been building up in our economy for a long time, especially as the world recession hit our manufacturers harder than it hit most, for reasons that I shall give in a moment. But the Germans have coped fairly easily with an increasing value of their currency because they set the framework of their economic miracle against clear principles back in the period from 1949 to 1953. As I said in a previous speech, their policies bear a strong resemblance to the policies that we put in place, in macroeconomic terms, particularly from 1982 to 1985.

Therefore, when the hon. Gentleman does his United Kingdom tour as part of the listening role of the Labour party, I hope that, when he launches into his lectures in Great Grimsby, Scotland or wherever, he will regale some of his colleagues in the Labour party with the lessons of the German economic miracle and that he will look at the period of German economic history between 1949 and 1953 when Euchen, an excellent economist, and Ehrhardt, an excellent Chancellor, laid the foundations for that German economic miracle, which are similar to the foundations that we laid in this Administration, in the teeth, at the beginning, of a world recession.

I endorse the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington on non-price factors. He is absolutely right to focus on quality, design and marketing as just three of those non-price factors. They represent the effort, the three enabling skills in a company, that must be deployed to best possible effect. I shall come back to some of my hon. Friend's comments later.

The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), who gave his apologies to the House for leaving early, demonstrated yet again that he is the master of the mixed metaphor and that he can give a speech on any subject at any time with the minimum of consideration. Therefore, he is ideally equipped to be the next leader of the Social and Liberal Democrats, or whatever name they will be trading under at the next general election.

Let me look at the meat of the hon. Gentleman's argument. He said that we were not doing enough for small firms. He said that we had policies in place for setting up small firms, but with the exception of the business expansion scheme we were not doing enough to see them through the initial period of consolidation into further expansion. The hon. Gentleman has therefore completely misread the White Paper; he has completely misread the Department's latest initiative, because there is a whole raft of measures inside the enterprise initiative designed to help small and medium-sized companies to grow and to fill in the missing capabilities that they often find are exposed when they expand from a small company into a medium-sized company and, we hope, with many of them, eventually into a large company.

The hon. Gentleman seems to be stuck somewhere around 1968 in his appreciation of measures required to revitalise Britain's economy. I shall not hazard a guess at where the hon. Member for Great Grimsby is, but I think that he is somewhere between 1951 and about 1975½. I do not think that he is a root-and-branch clause IV man, but he is pretty much into the motherhood statements of the mid-1970s when he puts forward his recipes for recovery in Britain.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) talked about change of attitudes. That is remarked on by those who have the advantage of coming back to this country having spent a period abroad. If one talks to a business man who has been away for four or five years and who has returned to the United Kingdom in the past two or three years, such people remark on the demonstrable and sometimes spectacular change in attitudes in the board room where our managers are much more professional and ambitious, and on the shop floor where trade unionists and the work force are rediscovering some of the basic virtues that are the key generators of employment.

I should like to mention the names of some fairly typical people to whom we in the DTI talk, who are not members of the chattering classes but who in many past conversations have influenced the formation of our policy. One, whose observations I have noted over a period, is the trade unionist, Bill Jordan. When the Labour party listens, I hope that it will listen to trade unionists such as him. I assume that when the Labour party and trade unionists meet, their conversations are about getting money for the Labour party. I do not want to damn Mr. Jordan's career by flattering him too much, but he is an expert on the quality campaign and on quality as a means of preserving and creating jobs. I doubt whether that has been on the agenda of meetings held between him and the Labour party research department.

British management skills, as my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East pointed out, are key. My hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) pointed out that things now are different from the 1960s and 1970s—we are becoming more professional. He, like my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington, returned to the issue of market share, which must be our national obsession. I am delighted to report that, at long last, the remorseless erosion of Britain's share of world trade in exports between 1964 and 1980 has been halted. We have stopped the rot. When future economic historians write about that period they will observe that a seminal event took place in about 1981-82, when that erosion of our share of world trade was halted.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Dover remarked, management skills are desperately important and today's profits, as he rightly said, are tomorrow's investments.

My hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) confirmed one aspect of the White Paper, which is that we are determined to get closer to the customer and to take DTI's services out to those who are best equipped to take advantage of them. We shall use chambers of commerce when necessary; we shall open more offices; we shall listen to and pick up as many tips as we can on the best way of implementing the enterprise initiative. In the case of my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield, a soccer metaphor is perhaps appropriate. In the past five years Britain has started to move up the league table of economic performance in the OECD. It is our intention as a nation to more even further up it. Having decided that we should not be relegated in 1979-80, we have now moved up to a mid-table position and we must now decide whether to go for the championship. It is a long time since we have had the base that we now have from which to work. If we can make that decision, we must not throw the opportunity away——

Mr. Dykes: Does that mean that Britain is in the position of Queens Park Rangers, Luton Town or Arsenal?

Mr. Butcher: I have learnt on previous occasions in the House never to take sides about soccer. However, my hon. Friend will know that I took just a minuscule amount of pride in the performance of Coventry City in the last cup final. We are today in the position in which, say, Kenny Dalglish was two years ago when he was considering the sort of side to build for the championship—but enough of soccer metaphors. I am now competing with the hon. Member for Yeovil in the mixed metaphor stakes.

We shall pick up the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) about a freer market in books. He was correct to identify the great need in the United Kingdom to provide our teachers with valuable experience in commerce and industry. For the most part, they would welcome that, and I am encouraged by the reaction of commerce and industry to the White Paper. Representatives of the various sectors, such as the Institute of Directors, the chambers of commerce and the CBI, have welcomed our objective of getting 10 per cent. of teachers a year into companies to take a look at the things that will be required of the students in their care when they enter the job market. Warrington and Runcorn has shown that it provides a welcome home for inward investment by providing skilled workers and the right enterprise ethic in the local community. As we have been invited by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South to do so, we shall take a look at the inpediments to trade.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran), with his great experience as a regional director in Birmingham and as a keen observer of the national scene, made an excellent speech. There is a growing appreciation that we have to encourage our brightest and best younsters to opt for a career in industry and commerce. We need them. There is almost a form of economic warfare in the international market and we need the best people to fight in that battle on behalf of British industry and commerce. I believe that our national culture is changing and that we no longer suffer from the 19th century attitude that our top schools should produce only young people fit to become district commissioners in Africa or colonial leaders in far-flung parts of the world. We want people to lead British industry and commerce in the struggle for world markets.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beverley referred to deregulation. I will communicate to my ministerial colleagues his clearly stated wish that we should take a radical approach to deregulation. My hon. Friend is currently decoding some of the terminology in our documentation and he believes that it sounds rather cautious. If necessary, I will try to persuade my colleagues in the DTI to tune that up and enhance the committment level a little.

Reference was made to the links that must be established between the universities and industry and commerce. My hon. Friend the Member for Beverley will be aware from our recent documentation that a £36 million link programme, the teaching company scheme, has been created. As far as I am aware, that scheme has no enemies. It is universally acclaimed as an excellent way to firm up links between the higher education sector and industry and commerce. Bright young men and women are entering companies on postgraduate projects. They are given specific targets and often surprise the companies by the level of sophistication that they bring to a project.

My hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) referred to planning constraints. He brought an interesting nugget of information to the House when he explained that there had been a 62 per cent. increase in rates in his authority coinciding with the authority's marketing efforts in an economic development unit. That often happens in Labour-controlled local authorities. Such authorities seem to produce policies that make their municipalities hostile territory for the private sector and small business men. They indulge in PR massaging. They set up a project which they often call an economic development unit to make a passing statement about their desire to bring employment into the area. For the most part, I am afraid that such action is a somewhat cynical exercise.

My hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) asked me to consider the trading and export services. I will read the Official Report carefully and respond to him regarding the British Overseas Trade Board.

My hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) reasserted his argument that we should do all that we can to make education more relevant to the needs of our economy. Almost in passing he made an observation that could have dominated the debate. This side of the Budget it is probably right that it should not have done so. We have rediscovered over the past four or five years that supply-side economics work. As taxation rates come down, the take increases.

I recall an excellent article in The Sunday Times entitled "Who is selling the snake oil?"

In that article the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) was portrayed as the cowboy who came to town waving a bottle of elixir purporting to be a cure-all for everything from hair loss to digestive complaints. His cure-all was increased taxation for everything. We have discovered that the converse is true. Reducing taxation at corporate and personal levels increases income for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The country can then decide how to spend the increased revenue.

My hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) who, as far as I can understand, was fresh from a rectification job on his peripheral caries, brought some interesting comments to the debate, especially about job creation and the role of small firms. We shall continue to examine what small firms pay to local government. That is a matter not for me but for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, but it is a key factor. Wandsworth is to be congratulated. Some London boroughs introduced nuclear-free zones, whereas Wandsworth is a de facto enterprise zone. Wandsworth is concerned about enterprise because it knows what enterprise does for jobs. I congratulate that brave and imaginative borough.

That takes me to the comments made by the hon. Member for Great Grimsby. He said that he would speak as a basso profundo. He will know that the basso profundo often takes the part of the jester and sometimes the ogre. I suspect that the captains of industry and some trade unionists who read his speech may see him as an ogre because he made a number of suggestions that would turn the clock back to a time when competition in world markets was not as great as it is now, and seriously weaken our resolve to fight for competitiveness. Many of the policies that the hon. Gentleman would advance would undermine and erode the competitive ethic both in the board room and on the shop floor.

The world recession hit us very hard. The weaknesses in our economy had been building up over a long period. If we can put right in one decade what went wrong gradually over about two decades, we shall have done very well indeed.

I do not know any longer where the Labour party gets its information from. The hon. Member for Great Grimsby is a great researcher and I am sure that in the listening campaign he will be a great listener. Let me take this opportunity—unusually in a debate such as this—to mention some people who, in my view, typify the industrial renaissance in this country. They are not necessarily members of the chattering classes and they are unlikely ever to appear on the Robin Day programme. However, they are certainly worthy of a visit from the hon. Members for Great Grimsby, for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) and for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair). Those people, and hundreds like them, have influenced Government policy, perhaps without knowing it. I see that the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) is in the Chamber, and our first port of call should be the midlands. Opposition Members should go to Lucas, an excellent company, and talk to John Parnaby, who is probably an expert — probably a world expert — on manufacturing systems engineering. He would probably enlighten the Labour party as to current trends in manufacturing sciences and intellectual investment on the shop floor. They could then go to Rugby to see Brian Small at Ingersoll.

Mr. Denis Howell (Birmingham, Small Heath): Will the hon. Member give way?

Mr. Butcher: I have already given way once.

Mr. Howell: As the Minister has referred to me, should he not give way?

Mr. Butcher: Very well.

Mr. Howell: When the Minister calls at Joseph Lucas on his great tour of the midlands, he will not be able to call at its head office in Great King street in my constituency unless he hurries: it is about to be demolished and hundreds of people are about to be made redundant.

Mr. Butcher: Yes, and the Lucas company is getting into higher and higher added value. It is becoming more and more successful in its aerospace efforts. It is running a very successful Girling subsidiary. There have been redundancies, but those who observe that market would agree that the company could not have pursued its strategic objectives without some redundancies. It is always difficult for a company faced with strong markets in which it does not have an appropriate investment to decide whether to continue to fight in those markets or whether to fight where they can win. I believe that Lucas has made the correct decision.

Hon. Gentlemen should then move on and talk to Malcolm Fraser at the Council for National Academic Awards. He has some excellent ideas on management development and how to produce a modular system of qualifications for managers which builds bridges from the shop floor to academia and out again. It is a flexible system of management training. Clark Brundin, at Warwick university, together with Khumar Battacharya, has shown that universities can open their doors wide to the private sector and gain immense advantage from it. They, too, have a great deal to say on how to build Britain's industrial and commercial renaissance.

Hon. Members may like to talk to John Kerridge at Fisons. He has taken an agro-chemical company into new areas, higher added value, pharmaceuticals and science-based products. James Pilditch has produced excellent work on best management practice in books and journals of his own authorship. If hon. Members are worried about textiles and the so-called older industries—I have never liked that term—they may care to talk to Louis Van Praag who runs a company called Sabre Textiles.

I know that it is unorthodox to mention names, but they are typical of people who learnt from experience and brought a new dimension to management and a new vigour to their companies.

Design is not an extra and it is not about making products pretty; it is about the concept of a product or a service from its beginning—from the core outwards. It is about design for manufacture or maintenance. It is about fitness for purpose and, ultimately, a product's aesthetic appearance in the past four years British companies have at long last woken up to this and many are starting to reap the benefits.

Quality is not a bureaucratic obsession within a company. To repeat a phrase that I have used previously, quality is about selling products that do not come back to customers who do. It is one of the key job creators, as Bill Jordan in the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers would confirm. Quality management is now a well-rehearsed science. It does not cost money. Zero defects are now entering company cultures throughout the country.

We in our enterprise initiative support quality, design and marketing. I pay tribute to the Design Council which has run the consultancy programmes for design, the Institute of Marketing and Tony McBurnie, who is administering that side of the programme, and to the Production Engineering Research Association which has helped us to pursue our objectives in improved manufacturing practice.

During the debate we heard a great deal about management and I have a little more to say about it. In the past we have learnt, as disseminators and distributors of grants, that it is no good whatever to invest large sums to reduce the investment costs of a company if the people at the heart of that company are not professional and of the highest capability. Company performance is determined more than anything else by the calibre of the people at the centre of its decision-making process. We as a nation must make a major investment in management skills and those of our work force. When John Egan competes with Mercedes it is not Jaguar v Mercedes, but the skills of the people of Coventry in his work force competing with the skills of the people of Stuttgart. If his people are better trained and educated, he can win that battle. If they are not, he will lose it. John Egan and many other chief executives have pursued their objectives in enhancing the quality of their work forces. That is something about which the whole House should be united and which progressive trade unionists have endorsed over a long time. In my view, the best managers and the more enlightened trade unionists are now coming together and are unanimous on that proposition. Another change that has taken place in the United Kingdom during the past six or seven years is that the "us and them" mentality is at long last disappearing.

As far as the initiative itself is concerned, and the current progress, I can happily report to the House that there has been a major response to the marketing campaign——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

ACCESS TO MEDICAL REPORTS BILL

Ordered,

That Standing Committee C be discharged from considering the Access to Medical Reports Bill, and that the Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.—[Mr. Simon Hughes.]

Committee upon Friday 29 April.

Orders of the Day

PLANNING PERMISSION (DEMOLITION OF HOUSES) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 29 April.

SUNDAY SPORTS BILL [LORDS]

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 22 April.

UNBORN CHILDREN (PROTECTION) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Second Reading what day? No day named.

HOUSING (HOUSES IN MULTIPLE OCCUPATION) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

OVERSEAS AID (ASSISTANCE TO THE POOREST) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

OPTICAL APPLIANCES (BLIND AND PARTIALLY SIGHTED PERSONS) BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [12 February].

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate to be resumed what day? No day named.

Sir John Biggs-Davison (Epping Forest): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Would it be in order for me, without detaining the House, formally to move the motion standing in my name on the Order Paper?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I am afraid that it would not be possible for the hon. Gentleman to do that. It would have been possible only if it had been reached before 2.30 pm.

M20 (Motorway Service Area)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

2.31 pm

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): Nothing generates more heat than a planning proposal, and few roles can be more ungrateful than that of the Minister who has to decide between local outrage and what he perceives as the national interest. Therefore, I enter this debate acutely conscious that my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for roads and traffic is under enormous pressure from all sides and that, as the proposal to site a motorway service area at Hollingbourne is currently subject to appeal, he may feel inhibited from making any statement on the issues today in the House.

Nevertheless, I am deeply grateful for this opportunity to put on record, in the Parliament to which all Ministers are ultimately responsible, a number of considerations that I believe my hon. Friend will have to take into account when he comes to take his decision. I also believe, as I shall later show, that there is one decision that he can announce today without trespassing on an area which is properly sub judice and for his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

I believe in motorways. They are much more efficient than other types of road. They are much less dangerous and they are now the lifeblood of a modern economy. However, if there are motorways there must also be motorway service areas—suprisingly frequently, it would appear. In 1979, the then Secretary of State accepted recommendations that argued for flexibility in spacing motorway service areas, but still expected a frequency of roughly 30 miles. In the 10 years since those recommendations were made, petrol consumption has improved by about 30 per cent., but I suppose that against that the Minister could argue that motorway service areas are much less to do with the motorist's need for putting fluid in than for letting it out. Nevertheless, on roads where a mile takes less than a minute, variations in spacing of 10 to 15 miles are hardly significant.

The idea is to have, in the Maidstone area, a motorway service area on the M20, which is shortly to be completed after many years of mutual frustration, by the insertion of the missing link between Hollingbourne and Ashford. The Department makes much of the need to open the service area at the same time as the motorway. If it were to be the only one, I might be tempted to ignore the precedent of 25 years of unserviced motorway hitherto or the unserviced years of the M25, but it will not be the only one. There will almost certainly be motorway service areas at junctions 3, 4 and 6 on the M25 and at Ashford and Cheriton on the M20.

In that embarrassment of riches, some people might wonder whether we need another service area at all. Many motorists have managed a great number of miles perfectly well without one, but, if we have to have one, where should it be? Since as long ago as 1975, it is clear that voices in the Department of Transport have been arguing to place it at Hollingbourne, and therein lies the major problem, both for those who oppose the plan and for the Minister.

Over the past 13 years, files will have grown fat with letters, memos and minutes of meetings between officials, the sum total of which has been to turn a proposal into a de facto decision. It will need more than sympathy and vision and more, even, than argument alone to overturn that decision now. It will require ministerial courage of the kind that says to respected senior advisers, "I am the Minister. I believe that that is the wrong decision and I am going to change it." That sort of courage is always in short supply, although less so in this Administration than in most. I believe that my hon. Friend the Minister has that sort of courage in ample measure. All that is needed is to demonstrate to him that since he made the choice of Hollingbourne public in 1986, and certainly since 1975, enough has changed to render a new approach as logical as it is desirable.

I wish to deal, first, with the position of Kent county council. My hon. Friend has every excuse if he feels puzzled by the apparent behaviour of Kent county council. During the recent appeal hearing, an official of that council stated that members of Kent county council supported the choice of Hollingbourne as the preferred site for a motorway service area as far back as 1976. The then vice chairman of the county planning sub-committee, who is now the borough councillor for Hollingbourne has no recollection of any debate on the subject at that time and believes that if the decision were taken at all, it must have slipped into the minutes inadvertently.

Since then the council's officers have been assiduous in promoting Hollingbourne, even to the point of virtually ignoring a recent very firm instruction from the planning sub-committee to carry out a full appraisal of an alternative site. In those circumstances, it would not be surprising if successive Ministers believed that county members approved the choice of Hollingbourne. Indeed, my hon. Friend made their approval an important ground of difficulty in meeting the objections to the site put to him by a delegation from Hollingbourne, which he met on 8 December 1986. When, after many attempts to arrange a meeting between Maidstone borough council and Kent county council had strangely foundered, a site meeting eventually took place on 5 January this year. County council members instantly resolved that the potential of the Allington site should be explored. In response to that, the county officers failed to do any such thing, but simply put another paper to a meeting of the county planning sub-committee on 23 February, reiterating their choice of Hollingbourne, Members rejected that for the second time and demanded a proper study of the Allington site.

The Minister cannot possibly be expected to make a distinction between the opinions of officers and members of a county council, unless the disagreement is brought to his notice, but I should like to assure him that Kent county council, like Maidstone borough council and all the parish councils concerned, wants him to undertake a full appraisal of Allington quarry as an alternative site for the motorway service area.

A second change since 1975 has been in the growth of traffic. Since 1977, on the B2136, which passes through Leeds village, there has been an increase of 443 per cent. in vehicles with three or more axles, including articulated lorries. In 1986, the Minister's Department admitted that the rate of growth in traffic using that narrow country road was more than twice the national average, and forecast a rise in traffic levels on the road to between 6,500 and 8,000 vehicles per 24 hours by the year 2005.

It will, I am sure, come as no surprise that a traffic survey made in December 1987 showed a 24-hour figure of 8,167 vehicles. I say that it will come as no surprise because it is, after all, the Department that gave us the traffic forecasts for the M25. I do not know how that Department dares now, in its summary of evidence to the current inquiry, to suggest that we can ignore the claims that traffic is increasing on the B2163, or that the motorway service area would affect it. The M20 interchange will add hugely to the attractions of this wholly unsuitable informal bypass to Maidstone for assorted heavy lorries. If added to that were the lure of a 24-hour service area, Leeds village would be almost destroyed by the burden of traffic.

My hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe), in whose constituency Leeds village lies, endorses those words entirely, and she is very sorry that a constituency engagement prevents her from saying so in person. Severe damage to Leeds village would mean a desperate loss. Both halves of the village are conservation areas, and 41 of its buildings are grade 2 listed. They are an important ingredient in what many of the half million visitors to Leeds castle come to enjoy.

The third change is that work has now begun on the Channel tunnel. That will substantially accelerate the already dramatic switch of Britain's trade from other markets to mainland Europe, and will bring many tens of thousands more vehicles and millions more visitors to Kent. With the lively and much-appreciated assistance of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Kent is working hard to protect itself from the disadvantages of this great innovation, while trying to ensure that it benefits from it also. That is why the council has declared that development will not normally be permitted

"if it is likely to cause loss of, or material damage to, landscape areas and features which are:—

(1) representative of the Kent countryside by reason of their physiographic character or vegetation cover, with particular regard being paid to those areas of rare or possibly unique scenic quality: or

(2) of historic interest: or

(3) of an unspoilt quality free from urban intrusion."

I wonder whether my hon. Friend could easily find another area in Kent in which all those criteria come so fully together.

The proposed site is in the North Downs special landscape area. It is within 500 m of the conservation area of Eyhorne street, 1,400 m from the Broad street conservation area to the north and within only 900 m of the park of historic Leeds castle, the third most popular tourist attraction in Britain. The site shares a border with an area of outstanding natural beauty, a designation so special that everyone recognises the names involved: the Lake district, the mountains of Mourne and the Cotswolds. Perhaps all of them are eagerly awaiting the chance to have a motorway service area as well.

A fourth change has been the dazzling success of exquisite Leeds castle as a tourist attraction. Host to half a million visitors a year, its special events attract between 10,000 and 20,000 visitors or more. On a fine summer evening, how many of them would park their cars in the motorway service area for a ready getaway after the concert, and how useful would a motorway service area, so blocked, be to the road user?

I shall not pretend that Leeds castle's success depends entirely on leaving its neighbours, Leeds village and Hollingbourne, undisturbed. However, I share the managing director's view that a lorry park, a caravan park and a possible motel in a motorway service area would make a change so fundamental in the castle's environment that no amount of landscaping would do more than garnish the wound.

In the old days, the rich used their influence to keep modern developments, such as the railways, at a distance from their estates, and there must always have been a temptation for Ministers to tease them when they could by defeating their endeavours and lumbering them with a line beneath the fences of their estates. In this case, the rich man is replaced by the half million ordinary citizens who come to Hollingbourne and Leeds village to see ancient England at its best. It would be a sorry memorial to be remembered as the Minister who gave them the inescapable view of a lorry park.

A fifth change relates to the position, in planning terms, of Allington quarry at the Coldharbour interchange. Until recently it was the subject of a major planning appeal. When we went to see the Minister on my birthday last year he told us that he would be unable to accept a motorway service area as part of a site where alcohol was on sale. Indeed, he also believed that the proposed development would not leave room for a motorway service area. Both of those difficulties have disappeared with the refusal of planning permission. However, two other difficulties remain. One is the nature of the refusal. The Department of Transport seems to believe that its terms preclude the use of the site for a motorway service area or anything else. The second difficulty is cost.

The valuer retained by the Department placed a value of £285,000 per acre on the Allington site. That value depends entirely upon "hope value." No developer would pay £285,000 as "hope value" for land subject to ministerial restriction of the nature described. At most, the developer would buy an option. It is important to note that an equally qualified valuer put a value of only £2,000 per acre on the site. That presupposes that the land carries only agricultural value.

The only things that are clear in this difference of opinion are, first, that the Department of Transport cannot simultaneously argue that the green wedge considerations are so overriding that they rule out the use of the quarry as a site for a motorway service area and, at the same time, value the land as if the green wedge considerations were of no importance. Secondly, unless and until there is a properly worked out consideration of the Allington site, none of us will know what the sums involved are likely to be. However, we are aware that the Allington site would be much more heavily used than the Hollingbourne site.

I find it extremely encouraging that the Tonbridge and Malling council, which does not want the green wedge damaged, argued against siting the motorway service area in the quarry, where, with great care, it will scarcely affect the visual wedge. It said:

"Tonbridge and Malling is unwilling to support the construction of a motorway service area at Allington Quarry unless and until a developer demonstrates an overwhelming case of need. An essential element of such a case would be evidence of the Secretary of State's rejection of all other alternative sites."

Therefore, the issue stays with the Minister. He has it in his power to reverse the bureaucratic mud slide that threatens to engulf the most environmentally-sensitive area of my lovely constituency.

When Lord Jenkin, then Secretary of State for the Environment, did us the honour of inspecting the site, he told us that although we would have to accept either the interchange or the service area, it would be intolerable to have to suffer both.

In this debate I speak as the hon. Member for Mid-Kent. However, I also speak for my hon. Friends the Members for Maidstone and for Faversham (Mr. Moate) who is president of the North Downs Society. My hon. Friend the Member for Faversham would have been present if it were possible. However, I believe that I do not speak just for my hon. Friends and our constituents. I speak for the millions who, between now and the end of the century, will come to Kent looking for the essential England — the historic, small-scale, solid, ungarish England of Led the Saxon whose castle stands at Leeds and of the Canterbury pilgrims who knew, when they got to Hollingbourne, that they did not have much further to go.

If we have to explain to those visitors that the garish motorway service area — even before its inevitable expansion it will dwarf the conservation areas around it and it will fill the night sky all the year round with reflective light — could have been sited in a disused quarry where nobody lives, where nobody could see it and where no part of it would intrude on the environment, they will look at us as we would on the residents of some Third world country who turn a unique temple into a lorry assembly plant.

As I said at the beginning of my speech, I do not seek to press the Minister for a decision today. Even if I could, it would be improper for me to do so. I ask only whether he will produce a fully worked-out proposal for the Allington quarry site, which was the first choice of his own Department's consultant in years gone by, before he makes his final choice. I believe that so much has changed since his original decision was taken that it would be prudent and generous of the Minister to accede to my request.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): No decision will be taken on the proposal for a motorway service area at Hollingbourne until my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment have received the inspector's report of the inquiry and have carefully considered that report. I hope that that is a partial assurance to my hon. Friend. He has drawn this matter to the attention of the House and has spoken about our hon. Friends who would have liked to express concern. It is of passing interest that not a single hon. Member of another party is involved in that environmental or transport issue.

My hon. Friend is keen to see good road communications in Kent, whether for pilgrims or for others. I noted with interest the views he put forward on television last week on procedures to help establish such roads. I thought that that was sensible and brave, but I cannot guarantee to accept those proposals, either.

We regard the provision of motorway service areas — MSAs — as an essential part of the motorway system and have carefully formulated a strategy for their provision. No doubt many former pilgrims would have been grateful if our medieval ancestors had done the same, because pilgrims experienced problems in getting refreshment on route.

My hon. Friend knows that our specific proposals for an MSA at Hollingbourne have been the subject of a public inquiry. I will take the opportunity to explain why we regard MSAs as being essential, why we selected a site at Hollingbourne, and that we propose to minimise environmental intrusion there.

Unless services are available beside the motorway, vehicles will leave the motorway to find them on local roads. Such detours defeat the heavy investment in motorways and the important public benefits they provide of faster, cheaper and safer journeys reducing traffic congestion; and improving safety in the communities bypassed.

My hon. Friend sensibly made the point about people taking rat runs, even in the country, to avoid congestion. An additional advantage of MSAs is that they enable drivers to take a rest, thus increasing their alertness when continuing their journeys and contributing further to road safety. About one motorist in six tends to come off the motorway to go to a service area. If there are no motorway service areas obviously they cannot do that. They are a significant advantage and convenience to many motorists who would otherwise have to pass by.

Organisations and individuals have stressed the need for MSAs to be provided. MSAs have always been an important feature of motorways in England. In deciding on the number to be provided, the advantages to the motorist of frequent services have to be weighed against the financial and environmental costs, the likely commercial viability and the general policy of severely restricting accesses to motorways. We don't expect motorway users to have to travel more than about 30 miles or half an hour's driving between service areas.

Following consultation with local authorities and other interested parties in 1983, we established in 1984 a strategy of providing four MSAs at the cardinal compass points of the M25, together with MSAs about 15 to 20 miles outside the orbital motorway, where they do not already exist, on major feeder motorways, including the M20. Consultants were appointed to assist the Secretary of State in deciding the provision of MSAs on the M20 in the Maidstone area and in the Folkestone area. Two were short-listed out of nine potential sites in an 11-mile corridor centred on Maidstone. Those were Hollingbourne and Allington quarry, which is also known as Coldharbour. There is no strategic need for services between Westenhanger and Maidstone.

We considered carefully the consultants' findings on the two Maidstone options. In particular we noted the conclusion that Allington quarry was preferable on environmental grounds and would serve more travellers. There were major problems about Allington quarry site. The government believed that it was desirable for the MSA in the Maidstone area to be built so as to be open by the time the M20 extension from Maidstone to Ashford was opened. My hon. Friend talked about Kent county council's view. We understood that the county council shared our view. The Allington quarry site could not be developed without the concurrent improvement of junction 5.

Mr. Rowe: My understanding is that Kent county council has said that it would prefer to see environmental considerations given precedence over the need to have the site opened concurrently with the link.

Mr. Bottomley: My hon. Friend knows that I cannot get into what was before the inquiry. I am stating the view that we understood Kent county council to hold.

It was thought that the widening of the M20 and the improvement of junction 5 were unlikely to occur until 1993 at the earliest, and perhaps later. It was thought that Hollingbourne could be developed in time to open with the M20 extension in 1990. A major problem with Allington was the prospect that an MSA would not be open until at least three years after the completion of the M20 Maidstone to Ashford extension. That remains the position. The second major problem about Allington was a financial one. I shall not go into the details of that. I would cover ground that has been covered elsewhere.

It may be said that we have a policy of going for MSA sites in the open country, simply because they will tend to be cheaper than sites in urban or near urban areas. I assure the House that that is not our policy, as any review of our current MSAs will show. We try to choose sites that are the best in the light of all relevant factors. But we cannot ignore cost.

At my hon. Friend's request, I met representatives of the local planning authority, the parish council and the Hollingbourne society to hear their concern at first hand. I remain convinced that Hollingbourne represents the best balance of all relevant factors. Great care has been taken in preparing the site layout that will minimise environmental intrusion. Fear of environmental intrusion causes most local concern.

My hon. Friend expressed particular concern about the possible impact on views from the North Downs, from Pilgrim's way and from Leeds castle, as well as from Eyhorne street and from Hollingbourne itself. I shall explain briefly how we propose to minimise the intrusion. We do not intend to have pedestrian access to motorway service areas. The fear of having a car park for Leeds castle will not be borne out in practice.

The overall aim is to integrate the development into its surroundings, as far as possible, to mitigate any visual intrusion, and to create an attractive setting for users of the facilities.

In the design of the site layout and the landscape proposals, particular attention has been paid to views into the site from nearby properties and from the North Downs, to develop measures for minimising visual impact. Use is made of the existing landform and vegetation, as well as the proposed motorway embankment and the landscape proposals for the M20. Specific measures to reduce visual impact include the use of surplus soil to form mounds along the most sensitive boundaries. They will be beneficial upon completion of the works and before full establishment of the planting.

The lorry and coach parks—intrusive and difficult to screen—have been sited in the lowest part of the site, where it is screened from the north by Cottage and Snarkhurst woods.

The Department is seeking to acquire a 40 m strip parallel to and to the north of the London-Ashford railway line, that is, part of Snarkhurst and Cottage woods, to ensure that an adequate height of tree cover is retained to effect screening of the MSA, particularly in views from the north, those from the Broad street area on the Pilgrim's way and the important long-distance footpath, the North Downs way. The Department considers it essential that the 40 m width of Snarkhurst and Cottage woods be acquired as part of the MSA and that it be managed under departmental control. A management scheme would be prepared with the aim to achieve and maintain a healthy tall screen of vegetation, while preserving the character and ecology of the woodland.

In view of the landscape quality of the area, it has been agreed that the lighting sources for the various areas be kept lower than would normally be adopted. I cite one example. The height of column for the integral perimeter road would normally be 12 m. In this instance a 10 m height is proposed. By adopting a lower light source height for the required illumination of the site, it will be well below the top of Snarkhurst and Cottage woods as viewed from the north and seen against the background of Snarkhurst wood as viewed from the south.

That is a brief explanation of our general strategy for motorway service area provision and the particular care that we would take at Hollingbourne. I hope that, to some extent, that assures my hon. Friend of our commitment to a well-balanced and caring development of the proposed MSA on the M20. He asked me to refer to other aspects of work. It is a sensible convention that decision on such issues are taken after the benefit of the independent, impartial inspector's advice, following the conclusion of the public inquiry.

Through my hon. Friend, I say to our colleagues who cannot be here and to my hon. Friend's constituents that there has not been a more effective demonstration of local concern than that which was put forward by my hon. Friend and his constituents. They put their views forward in a firm but courteous way. In reading the newspapers, listening to them, face to face, and going round the area, I have reached an appreciation of the concerns, and of some of the issues which would have been put forward firmly by my hon. Friend if he had had time to raise them. If the MSA goes ahead, some of those concerns may turn out to be less of a problem than people imagine. However, to pursue that would take me into sectors in which I do not want to trespass.

All in all, motorway service areas, together with our roads programme, are designed to bring economic benefit, environmental relief and road safety advantages. MSAs are an important part of this, although I appreciate the concern about where they go and where they might have to go.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Neighbourhood Watch Programme (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Gloucestershire's neighbourhood watch programme, with particular regard to its involvement with the Manpower Services Commission and the community programme.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there are now 228 neighbourhood watch schemes in the county of Gloucestershire. In an effort to sustain these schemes and to initiate new ones, the Gloucestershire community programme home watch project was launched on 25 January with the appointment of the project co-ordinator. The project is funded as part of the Manpower Services Commission community programme crime prevention initiative. It is managed on behalf of Gloucestershire police by Gloucestershire county council and, when recruiting is completed, will comprise the co-ordinator, an assistant co-ordinator and 11 workers. They will help to arrange the first meetings of new schemes, provide speakers for neighbourhood watch meetings and produce a quarterly news journal. I welcome, and commend, this imaginative scheme. Like similar schemes in other parts of the country, it will provide valuable support to the police in managing the growth of neighbourhood watch.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Hurd: There are some 38,600 staff in the Home Office. Conditioned hours are 41 hours a week in London and 42 elsewhere, inclusive of meal breaks. Prison officers' hours are 39 hours a week net of meal breaks, but they can opt to work a 48-hour week and the majority do so. About 11,000 members of staff are eligible to participate in flexible working hours schemes and some 8,000 do so. At least 32 members of staff are on job-sharing schemes. Information is not readily available about the number of staff who are on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight. About 18,500 members of staff — in prison service grades — have a minimum retiring age of 55 years. Most of the rest have a minimum retiring age of 60, except for some 3,000 industrial staff, whose retirement age is 65. It is not possible to estimate the number of staff who could achieve 40 years' reckonable service for pension purposes by the age of 60.

Phonographic Performance Ltd.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with Phonographic Performance Ltd. about alleged needle time restrictions on the broadcast of music on independent radio stations; and what assurances have been received from Phonographic Performance Ltd. that needle time restrictions no longer exist.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with Phonographic Performance Ltd. about alleged needle time restrictions on the broadcast of music on independent radio stations; and what assurances have been received from Phonographic Performance Ltd. that needle time restrictions no longer exist.

Mr. Renton: Discussions have taken place with Phonographic Performance Ltd. on a range of issues. Phonographic Performance Ltd. has made it clear that, while the present nine-hour needle time limit is not immutable, it would expect to secure substantial payment from substantial users for any increase.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he as as to how many independent radio stations pay £30 or more per record to Phonographic Performance Ltd. for the broadcast of single play records.

Mr. Renton: I understand that no station pays Phonographic Performance Ltd. £30 or more per record.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to the average price per record paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Performance Ltd. for the broadcasting of single play records;

(2) what information he has as to the highest price per record paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Performance Ltd. for the broadcasting of single play records; and by how much this exceeds the average.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to the average price per record paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Performance Ltd. for the broadcasting of single play records;

(2) what information he has as to the highest price per record paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Performance Ltd. for the broadcasting of single play records; and by how much this exceeds the average.

Mr. Renton: I understand that Phonographic Performance Ltd. has estimated that the average fee for the broadcasting of single play records by independent local stations is £1·26 per play. The highest fee paid is over £17. Broadly similar fees are also payable to the Performing Rights Society.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the overall percentage of net advertising revenue paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Peformance Ltd for the broadcast of recorded music.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the overall percentage of net advertising revenue paid by independent radio stations to Phonographic Performance Ltd for the broadcast of recorded music.

Mr. Renton: The fees were determined by the Performing Right Tribunal in 1986. Established independent local radio stations are required to pay Phonographic Performance Ltd 4 per cent. of the first £1·25 million of net advertising revenue, and 7 per cent. thereafter, for the right to broadcast nine hours of recorded music each day. Broadly similar fees are also payable to the Performing Right Society.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many independent radio stations pay £10 or more per record to Phonographic Performance Ltd for the broadcast of single play records.

Mr. Renton: I understand that one such station now pays Phonographic Performance Ltd above this rate.

Community Radio

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the address of the radio authority that is to issue licences to run community radio stations; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Renton: The radio authority will be established under legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend has yet to bring before Parliament.

Murders

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders were committed in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: In the absence of a court decision it is not always possible to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide; they are known collectively as homicide. Statistics on offences initially recorded as homicide and on offences decided to be murder are published in table 4.2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", Cm. 233—for data up to the end of 1986—copies of which are available in the Library. Statistics on offences recorded as homicide for 1987 are not yet available.

Broadcasting Complaints Commission

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer to the Broadcasting Complaints Commission the risk that obscenities may be broadcast as a result of the implantation of microphones in cricket pitches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is the responsibility of the broadcasting authorities to ensure that nothing is included in programmes which offends against good taste or decency. The commission is limited to considering and adjudicating on complaints of unjust or unfair treatment or unwarranted infringement of privacy arising out of broadcast programmes.

Independent Radio (Needletime Restrictions)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to what needletime restrictions exist to limit the air play of recorded music on independent radio.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to what needletime restrictions exist to limit the air play of recorded music on independent radio.

Mr. Renton: In general, independent local radio stations are limited to broadcasting nine hours of recorded music within the repertoire of Phonographic Performance Ltd. each day, even though most ILR stations now broadcast for 24 hours a day.

Convicted Murderers

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many previously convicted murderers, having been released from prison, have committed a further murder, since the abolition of capital punishment.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 5 November 1987, at columns 1054-55.

Immigration (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting to be interviewed by immigration in Birmingham in connection with applications for entry clearance for members of their family to join them in the United Kingdom at 31 December 1987.

Mr. Renton: At 31 December 1987, there were 130 outstanding entry clearance applications awaiting interview of persons living in the Birmingham area. All have either now been completed or have appointments arranged before 31 March 1988.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are employed in interviewing people whose relatives have applied for entry clearance to join them in the United Kingdom and whose applications have been referred to his Department by entry clearance officers abroad; and where these interviewers are located.

Mr. Renton: The information requested in the first part of the question is not available. The number of immigration service staff employed in such interviews varies daily and they form only part of the responsibility of the officers involved.

The majority of interviews are conducted by officers based at the following immigration offices: Aberdeen, Avonmouth, Belfast, Birmingham, Cardiff, Dover, Edinburgh, East Midlands airport, Felixstowe, Folkestone, Glasgow, Gravesend, Hartlepool, Hull, Immingham, Liverpool, Luton airport, Manchester airport, Middlesbrough, Newcastle airport, North Shields, Norwich airport, Plymouth, Preston, Prestwick airport, Ramsgate, Sheerness, Southampton, Southend airport and Stansted airport.

Domestic Assaults

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has to which police forces in England and Wales produce separate figures on the number of reported domestic assaults each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No regular information on the number of domestic assaults is reported separately to the Department by police forces in England and Wales.

Independent Radio Air Time

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the percentage of independent radio air time taken up by the playing of recorded music.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the percentage of independent radio air time taken up by the playing of recorded music.

Mr. Renton: This information is not readily available.

Lunar House, Croydon

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the length of time for which the public enumerator board has been out of action at the public inquiry office at Lunar house, Croydon; and what steps he is taking to ensure that it is operative.

Mr. Renton: The enumerator board in the immigration public inquiry office at Lunar house was out of action for three months. It is now fully operational.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the purpose of the visit by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) to Lunar house, Croydon, on Friday 12 February; and how long he spent in meetings with the trades unions.

Mr. Renton: I visited Lunar house on Friday 12 February to discuss with officials in the immigration and nationality department proposals to speed up the handling of the backlog of citizenship applications. I announced the specific steps we are taking on Tuesday 16 February at columns 862-63. I did not meet the trades unions on 12 February but, because of their great concern, which was reported to me, I plan to do so on Tuesday 23 February.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many of the unopened items of mail presently at Lunar house, Croydon, relate to (a) applications for citizenship and (b) variations of leave.

Mr. Renton: Ninety five thousand applications for citizenship are unopened and a further 54,000 applications for citizenship have been opened but not acknowledged; 58,000 other items of mail, many of them relating to variations of leave, are unopened.

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of visas granted to visitors at immigration control for the full six-month period, the numbers of visitors' visas refused and the numbers of visitors' visas granted for a period of less than six months for (a) the week commencing 2 February and (b) the week commencing 9 February.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available. Figures on passenger admissions by period of leave granted for the whole of February will become available later this year when all the relevant landing cards have been received and counted.

Rodeos (South-West England)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the conduct of horse rodeos in south-west England; what action he is taking to prevent cruelty to horses used in such rodeos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information on such events. However, under the Protection of Animals Act 1934 it is an offence to promote or permit a public performance which includes throwing or casting, with ropes or other appliances, any unbroken horse; or to ride or attempt to ride any horse which has been cruelly stimulated to make it buck. More generally, the Protection of Animals Act 1911 makes it an offence to cause, or being the owner permit to be caused, any unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive animal.

Breathalysers

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will issue guidelines for chief constables to the effect that they should encourage the voluntary introduction an use of wall-mounted coin-in-the-slot breathalysers and breathalyser ignition locks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The clear message must be that drinking and driving do not mix. We welcome the way in which chief officers are helping to get this message across but are not convinced that their efforts would be assisted by asking them to encourage the use of self-testing devices.

Interception of Communications Act

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the working of the Interception of Communications Act, with particular regard to mobile telephones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have no reason to believe that there are any difficulties over the working of the Interception of Communications Act in this respect. The interception of calls on mobile telephone systems which have been designated as public telecommunication systems under the Telecommunications Act 1984 is covered by the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Cremation Certificates

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will end the requirement for two doctors to sign cremation certificates; and by how much funeral costs would be reduced if this requirement ceased, as recommended in the Broderick report.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are considering this possibility. The fee currently recommended by the British Medical Association for the completion of the confirmatory medical certificate for cremation is £19·65.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Solicitors (Costs)

54. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will take steps to ensure that solicitors, when attending their clients at remand centres, have their costs fully met under the legal aid schemes; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Solicitors who attend clients at remand centres are entitled to their costs under a criminal legal aid order provided that the determining officer who considers their claim is satisfied that the attendance was reasonable. The solicitor is allowed either his own reasonable costs or the costs reasonably incurred in instructing a solicitor local to the remand centre to attend on his behalf.

Immigration (Appeals)

59. Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney -General if he will take steps to expedite the hearing of appeals under section 13(ii) of the Immigration Act 1971.

The Attorney-General: Following the transfer of administrative responsibility for the immigration appellate authorities to my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, the working methods and procedures of the authorities have been under review. Once an appeal has been lodged with the immigration appellate authorities, it is open to any party to that appeal to apply for an early hearing.

Mrs. Angela Pink

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to whether the Director of Public Prosecutions has yet reached a decision on the possible prosecution of Nottingham city councillor Mrs. Angela Pink; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as I am able to inform him of the outcome of the Director's consideration of this case.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Food Surpluses

66. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with aid Ministers of the European Economic Community as to the future use of food surpluses.

Mr. Chris Patten: I discuss food aid with other European Community aid Ministers at regular intervals. But food surpluses and the common agricultural policy are a matter for agriculture Ministers.

Southern Africa

70. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the development of infrastructure projects in the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference region.

Mr. Chris Patten: SADCC has commended to donors a large number of infrastructure projects, in particular in the regional transport field. Good progress is being made with support from Britain and other countries on rehabilitating rail routes through Mozambique, and work will begin shortly on the northern transport corridor linking Malawi to Dar-es-Salaam, for which I have approved a British contribution of £12·4 million.

Ethiopia

71. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider assisting the World Food Programme in obtaining the powdered milk, vegetable oil and protein-rich biscuits required in Ethiopia for children under the age of 14 years.

Mr. Chris Patten: No request has been made to us by the world food programme. We are aware of the need for food to supplement the basic diet on Ethiopia and have provided £189,000 to meet the cost of 1,000 tonnes of beans which are being distributed by the International Committee of the Red Cross. We shall also be meeting our share of the cost of the substantial qualities of supplementary food being provided by the European Community.

74. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that famine aid to Ethiopia is reaching the intended recipients.

Mr. Chris Patten: The assistance we provide is generally channelled through international and voluntary agencies with extensive experience of getting relief quickly and effectively to those in need. It is carefully monitored to ensure it reaches the intended beneficiaries.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he plans to make to the Ethiopian Government, in the light of recent consignments of corned beef that have been shipped from that country into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no plans to make further representations to the Ethiopian Government on the subject of exports of corned beef from that country to the United Kingdom. The availability of corned beef does not seem relevant to the famine problem now affecting large numbers of Ethiopians; and exports of that commodity should bring in much needed foreign exchange.

Aid Statistics

72. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of the United Kingdom's gross national product devoted to overseas development in 1960 and for the latest annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: The proportion of the United Kingdom's gross national product devoted to overseas development in 1960 was 0·56 per cent. In 1986 it was 0·32 per cent.

Tropical Rain Forests

73. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the Government are taking to encourage sustainable development in areas of the world where tropical rain forests are at risk.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government support the FAO tropical forestry action plan and is a member of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, both of which are concerned with the sustainable use and appropriate conservation of tropical rainforests.

Our expenditure on bilateral aid projects in the forestry sector has increased threefold to £13 million in 1986. We provide further support through technical co-operation, research programmes and the joint funding scheme.

International Debt

75. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the chairman of the World Bank regarding the problem of international debt.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 1 February, at column 459.

76. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the debt initiative for the most debt-ridden countries, following the endorsement of that initiative at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting and by their finance Ministers.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor's initiative has been well received. Some aid donors have announced the write-off of more aid debt; the United Kingdom has already almost completed this process of converting aid loans into grants and others are following our example. Seven of the poorest, most heavily indebted sub-Saharan countries pursuing sound economic policies have had their official debts rescheduled for longer than normal by the Paris Club. We continue to press our partners to accept lower Paris Club interest rates for countries eligible for the initiative.

India (Departmental Advisers and Officials)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many advisers and officials from his Department are currently working in India in connection with phase II of the family welfare project in Orissa; when they went to India; and when he expects them to return.

Mr. Chris Patten: Two ODA advisers worked in India in connection with the pre-appraisal of this project from 1 to 12 February. One returned on 15 February and I expect the team leader to return on 23 February.

Tanzania (Population Census)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the East African development division of the Overseas Development Administration to complete its assessment of the request for financial assistance with the preparation of the Tanzania 1988 population census; and if he will take steps to ensure that the census is not put in jeopardy as a result of the time taken by the Overseas Development Administration to deal with this request.

Mr. Chris Patten: The British development division in Eastern Africa will complete the assessment in question by the end of this month. This timetable is compatible with the plans of the Tanzanian authorities to hold the population census later this year.

WALES

Agricultural Services

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for the future provision of offices providing agricultural services in north Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. I consider the existing provision to be suitable for present purposes.

Community Councils

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to include community councils in the distribution of resources to local government from Government grant and the national uniform business rate.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Community councils will meet their expenditure requirements by drawing on a collection fund maintained by the district council.

Sheep Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when monitoring of live sheep on a general basis was introduced in the restricted areas of Wales following the Chernobyl accident;

(2) how many scintillators were available to, and used by, his Department for the live monitoring of sheep in the restricted areas of Wales in each month from May 1986 to May 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: The option of live-monitoring sheep became generally available to producers in the north Wales restricted area from the beginning of October 1986. From October 1986 to February 1987, a total of 10 live monitoring machines were generally in use and from March 1987 to May 1987 there were 15 machines.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Unfunded Students

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of unfunded students at universities in (a) Wales and England and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years; and what is his policy towards such students.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the form requested, but I will write to the hon. Member.

Primary and Secondary School Pupils

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils have been enrolled at each primary and secondary school in the Eddisbury constituency in each of the past 10 years; and what has been the pupil-to-teacher ratio in each year.

Mr. Dunn: Information on pupil numbers for areas smaller than local education authorities is not available centrally. The number of pupils on roll in all maintained primary and secondary schools in Cheshire and the pupil-teacher ratios within these schools in each of the last 10 years is given in the table.

January each year	Primary schools[1] Pupils[2]	Pupil-teacher ratio	Secondary schools[1] Pupils	Pupil-teacher ratio
1978	100,846	24·0	77,542	17·4
1979	97,858	23·5	78,945	16·9
1980	94,592	23·5	79,671	16·7
1981	90,753	23·6	79,567	16·7
1982	86,454	23·3	79,306	17·1
1983	81,917	22·6	78,796	16·8
1984	79,127	22·7	77,481	16·9
1985	77,396	22·8	76,201	17·0
1986	77,227	22·7	73,816	17·0
1987	80,957	23·2	70,861	16·7

[1] Includes middle schools as deemed.
[2] Full-time equivalent pupils, part-time pupils counted as 0·5.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a copy of Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on the effects of abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: No.

Community Schools

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision he is making to ensure that the community and adult functions obtain full and comprehensive representation on the governing bodies of community schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 provides for school governing bodies to comprise representatives of parents, teachers, the local authority, the foundation in the case of voluntary schools and, by co-option, the community served by the school. In making their co-options, governing bodies will be able to secure such representation of other interests as is considered appropriate in the light of the school's circumstances.

Rates (Cleveland)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the amount in money terms by which that part of the rates bill in Cleveland attributable to educational buildings will increase in 1988-89.

Mr. Dunn: None. Authorities finance their expenditure from a variety of sources. It is not possible to attribute any element of the rates bill to a particular item of expenditure.

St. Bartholomew's, Swanley

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has received on new buildings for St. Bartholomew's Roman Catholic junior, middle and infants school, Swanley, Kent; and when he expects to make a statement about those schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has paid grant in respect of the provision of a mobile classroom at the school. We have received no other proposals from the Kent local education authority, though we understand that a second mobile classroom has recently been provided.

University Funding

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) of 11 February, Official Report, column 313-4, what is the percentage change in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1988-89, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates (a) including and (b) excluding additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) of 11 February, Official Report, column 313-4, what is the percentage change in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1988-89, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant, changes in the level of local authority rates, additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available to make the requested deductions. In any event, like would not be being compared with like since my announcement related only to initial allocations for 1988-89.

Morley College

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has developed any proposals for financing Morley college when the Inner London education authority is abolished.

Mr. Jackson: Adult education is one of a number of issues arising from the abolition of the ILEA on which my right hon. Friend has made it clear that he will wish to seek the views of the boroughs. In doing so he will naturally wish to consider the situation of Morley college.

Orthotists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision his Department is making to ensure an adequate supply of orthotists and prosthetists in the short and long term; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Courses are provided by the Paddington college and the practical training is provided by the London School of Prosthetics and by individual companies.

The Disablement Services Authority is responsible for the provision of prosthetic services and it is holding discussions with the Orthotic and Prosthetic Training and Education Council about the most suitable arrangements for the future supply of trained practitioners in these disciplines in England and Wales.

Core Subjects

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the proportion of school time currently spent on core subjects in (a) inner London and (b) England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information about the percentages of pupil time spent on core curriculum subjects in England is given in the table. No figures are available for indivdual local education authorities in England. Education in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	Junior classes	Secondary year groups 1 to 5
English	26·7	13·8
Mathematics	22·3	13·3
Science	6·5	13·9
TOTAL	55·5	41·0

Notes:

1. Junior classes do not include infant classes, but do include secondary-age classes in middle schools deemed primary.
2. The junior figures are as at March 1987, taken from the Primary School Staffing Survey.
3. The secondary figures are as at January 1984, taken from the 1984 Secondary School Staffing Survey.

Research Organisations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the names, locations and broad areas of work covered by the 10 largest public research organisations in the United Kingdom ranking these according to staff numbers, turnover and net cost to the United Kingdom in 1986-87.

Mr. Jackson: I will write to the hon. Member.

New Schools (East Sussex)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many new schools have been opened in east Sussex since 3 May 1979 and how many between 3 May 1971 and 3 May 1979.

Mr. Dunn: Since 3 May 1979, nine new schools, including nursery and special schools, have been opened, five of which are replacement schools. From the reorganisation of local government on 1 April 1974 to 3 May 1979, a total of 24 schools were opened, of which nine were replacements. Numbers before 1974 are not available. Replacements include transferred schools and schools opened following school reorganisation.

Teacher-Pupil Ratios

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the teacher-pupil ratio on the latest available date for infant, primary and secondary schools in England, in east Sussex and in the borough of Eastbourne; and what were the comparable figures for the available date closest to 3 May 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratio in maintained infant, primary and secondary schools in England and east Sussex in January 1979 and January 1987 are given in the table. Information for areas within local education authorities is not available centrally.

Pupil-teacher ratios within schools

	England		East Sussex
	January 1979	January 1987	January 1979	January 1987
Infant	21·7	21·2	22·1	21·6
Primary[1,2]	23·1	21·9	23·4	22·4
Secondary[2]	16·7	15·6	17·1	16·4

[1] Includes infant schools.
[2] Includes middle schools as deemed.

Examination Results

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has made further progress since 1984 in analysing local educational authority examination results, taking into account socio-economic factors.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has not published any further analysis of the effects of socio-economic factors on local education authority examination results since statistical bulletin 13/84 — "School Standards and Spending: Statistical Analysis".

Education Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, in the event of Inner London education authority abolition, what arrangements he intends to make for the supplies service and the percentage of customers who are local education authorities outside inner London.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that we wish to discuss with the inner London boroughs the future arrangements for services currently provided by ILEA on a Londonwide basis. The Supplies Organisation will be one such service. Information on the customers of the Supplies Organisation is not held centrally.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for the providing of research and planning resources currently provided by the Inner London education authority should that authority be abolished.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 February at column 648.

PRIME MINISTER

Dollar (Value)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her statement on the meeting of the European Council, 15 February, Official Report, columns 705-17, whether she will publish in the Official Report the value of the dollar agreed for exceptional circumstances; and what call would be made on the contingency reserve if the nominal rate for the dollar fell to reduce the real rate, in terms of relative export prices for manufacturers, to the average for 1978-80.

The Prime Minister: The dollar reference rate for the operation of this reserve has yet to be determined, but the assumption which the Commission has used in revising its preliminary draft budget for 1988 is $1 = 0·85 ecu.

On the basis of relative GDP/GNP price movements, this exchange rate appears to imply a real rate of exchange similar to the average for 1978-80. It follows that there would be no call on the monetary reserve in the circumstances postulated.

EC (Financial Contribution)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her statement on the meeting of the EEC Council, 15 February, Official Report, columns 705-17, whether she will include in the Official Report her estimates of the amount now made available to the EEC under our reserves, including the United Kingdom rebate, in terms of the original value added tax contributions.

The Prime Minister: The new ceiling on the Community's own resources, excluding the United Kingdom's abatement, of 1·2 per cent. of Community gross national product is equivalent to a 1·9 per cent. value added tax ceiling defined as at present to include the United Kingdom abatement. The corresponding abatement-exclusive VAT figure is 1·72 per cent.

EC (Spain and Portugal)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister why Spain and Portugal have been excluded from some of the agricultural arrangements agreed by the EEC Council of Ministers; whether their output will qualify for other kinds of support; what is their production of the items in question and whether it is expected to increase; and whether the EEC will provide any money to support production or dispose of the surpluses.

The Prime Minister: Separate arrangements apply to Spain and Portugal either because of the provisions of the accession treaty or because of special decisions of the European Council. Although Spain and Portugal currently operate many of the common agricultural policy support arrangements, this is on a transitional basis. Data on production are contained in Document COM(87)1 Final, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she took into account the increase in the value of the pound sterling against the deutschmark in the negotiations in Brussels on 11 to 13 February; what value is placed on the pound sterling in the present level of common agricultural policy prices; to what extent United Kingdom common agricultural policy prices will have to be changed to reflect the value of the pound sterling against the deutschmark; and what would be the effect on United Kingdom common agricultural policy prices if the real value of the pound sterling, measured in terms of relative export prices for manufacturers, fell to the level which obtained in the fourth quarter of 1976.

The Prime Minister: All relevant considerations were taken into account during the recent negotiations in Brussels.

Common agricultural policy prices are set in ecus and converted into sterling using green rates and not market rates of exchange. The United Kingdom green rates are currently:

Arable products—1 ecu = £0·656148
Beef—1 ecu = £0·710546
Pigmeat—1 ecu = £0·694266
Sheepmeat—1 ecu = £0·652575
Other sectors—1 ecu = £0·665557

Common agricultural policy prices in the United Kingdom are not directly affected by the sterling/deutschmark exchange rate. However, under arrangements agreed in 1987, green rates will be altered following any European monetary system realignment if the net effect of the realignment of the central rates of all EMS currencies including the deutschmark is to widen the gap between green and market rates of exchange. Apart from these arrangements, there is no mechanism directly relating to CAP prices in the United Kingdom to any particular market value of sterling.

Alternative Land Use

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the definition of arable land used in the set-aside scheme referred to in her statement on the meeting of the European Council, 15 February, Official Report, column 706; how the area of arable land is to be assessed in each case; and what checks there will be against fraud.

The Prime Minister: Discussions are continuing on the details of the set-aside scheme agreed in principle by the European Council, including the points referred to by the hon. Member.

Commodity Stabilisers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report the agreement on stabilisers for the eight commodities referred to in her statement on the meeting of the European Council (Brussels), 15 February, Official Report column 705.

The Prime Minister: As I made clear in my statement to the House on 15 February, agreement on stabilisers for eight commodities — those other than cereals and oil seeds—has been delayed by France until the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 22-23 February. The text to be adopted appears as points 4 to 11 of document SN 461/88 which has been placed in the Library of the House.

EC (Overspending)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the legal and binding controls which have been agreed for expenditure under the common agricultural policy will operate to terminate the price guarantees once the money has been used up or whether the EEC will be allowed to borrow against the next year's provision or make other arrangements outside the budget of the kind used to finance overspending in the past.

The Prime Minister: The detailed European Council conclusions provide for legally binding limits on agricultural expenditure, supported by automatic stabiliser mechanisms in the individual product regimes.

They further provide that when there is a risk of agricultural expenditure exceeding the budget limits, the Commission shall take remedial action whether by use of its own management powers—including the operation of the new stabilisers—or by making additional proposals to the Council. The Council is committed to acting within two months in order to remedy the situation.

EC Stocks (Depreciation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her statement on the meeting of the EEC Council, 15 February, Official Report, columns 705-17, why the cost depreciation on EEC stocks has not been written off under the guidelines; and under what provision of the treaty of Rome the Commission was entitled not to include real depreciation in the annual budget.

The Prime Minister: The cost of depreciating old stocks is to be met outside the financial guidelines in order to restrict the resources available within the guidelines and hence to limit agricultural spending for the future. The cost of depreciating old stocks has built up because there has been no legal requirement on the Commission systematically to depreciate stocks to their market level.

Agricultural Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the arrangements for agriculture agreed at the Brussels meeting of the EEC Council of Ministers is expected to reduce the difference between common agricultural policy prices and world prices, having regard to the expected increases in yields and labour productivity; and if she will provide a forecast of the effect in each of the principal products.

The Prime Minister: Reductions in levels of common agricultural policy support consequent upon the agreement reached at the Brussels European Council will result in the difference between Community prices and world prices being smaller than they otherwise would have been. The precise effect cannot be forecast because it will depend on a larger number of factors which cannot be predicted accurately including actual Community and world levels of production.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what she expects the United Kingdom contribution to the EEC budget to be in each of the next five years on the basis of the decisions made at the EEC Council in Brussels; and if she will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated gross contribution under the four heads of (a) the rebate, (b) the amount paid directly for the benefit of farmers, (c) the amount paid indirectly for the benefit to farmers and (d) the amount paid for other purposes.

The Prime Minister: The overall effect of the agreement reached at the European Council will be to increase the United Kingdom's net contribution after abatement by an estimated £200 to £300 million a year compared with the existing own resources ceiling, and by an estimated £100 to £200 million a year compared with the effective level of spending in 1987. The outcome on individual budget lines will depend on a range of factors, including detailed decisions still to be taken.

EC (Vegetable Oil and Oilseed)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what were (a) the EEC guaranteed thresholds and (b) actual output for vegetable oil and oil seeds over the past 10 years; what is the formula agreed by the EEC Council of Ministers for reducing output; what assessment has been made of its effect on production; and what assessment has been made of its expected effect on imports from (i) the developing countries and (ii) other countries;

(2) what is the estimated cost of the new arrangements for agriculture agreed at the Brussels meeting of the EEC Council of Ministers for oil seeds in 1988 and for each succeeding year; what extra payments have been or will be made to Spain and Portugal in respect of agricultural production; what other payments will be made outside the agricultural chapter; what assessment has been made of the expected effect of the price regime on agricultural production; and if she will publish in the Official Report agricultural output figures for the EEC over the past 10 years.

The Prime Minister: The information requested on output is as follows for the three principal oil seeds. (Details of oil output are not readily available but vegetable oil content of rape seed, sunflower seed and soya beans is about 39 per cent. 40 per cent. and 17·5 per cent. respectively).

	Rapeseed	Sunflowerseed	Soya beans
1978	1,230	125	5
1979	1,205	222	22
1980	1,995	307	18
1981	1,999	513	21
1982	2,679	746	31
1983	2,492	977	89
1984	3,477	1,200	156
1985	3,729	1,776	343
1986
EC–10	3,651	2,262	912
EC–12	3,665	3,135	918
1987[1]
EC–10	5,901	2,780	1,440
EC–12	5,911	3,860	1,447

Note: All figures are in '000 tonnes, and relate to EC–10 except where otherwise stated. Data are from EC Management Committee statistics.

The maximum guarantee quantity systems for rape seed and sunflower seed were introduced in 1986 with EC-10 MGQs of 3·5 million tonnes and 1·7 million tonnes respectively, and with a 5 per cent. limit on price reductions. In 1987, this limit was increased to 10 per cent. and a similar system was introduced for soya beans with an EC-12 MGQ of 1·1 million tonnes.

The European Council agreed that each 1 per cent. excess production of rape seed, sunflower seed or soya beans over respective MGQs of 4·5 (EC-10), 2·0 (EC-10) or 1·7 (EC-12) million tonnes would lead to a 0·45 per cent. price reduction in 1988-89, and to a 0·5 per cent. price reduction in 1989-90 and 1990-91, with no limit on the price reductions.

No detailed assesment has been made of the effect on production or on imports of the new system the primary function of which is to stabilise expenditure. At current world prices and exchange rates full year expenditure relating to these three oil seed MGQs would be stabilised at about 2·6 becu compared to estimated 1987 full year expenditure of 3·5 becu.

For Spain and Portugal it was agreed that an adjustment would be made to the MGQs for rape seed (10,000 tonnes for Spain; 1,000 tonnes for Portugal) and sunflower seed (1·2 million tonnes for Spain; 53,500 tonnes for Portugal) corresponding to those agreed for the EC-10. No extra payments were agreed for Spain or Portugal on oil seeds either within or outside the agricultural part of the budget.

Agricultural Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report (a) details of the ceiling on agricultural spending in each of the next five years, (b) her estimate of the maximum amount of spending which would have been permitted if the arrangement agreed at Fontainebleau had been adhered to; and if she will make a statement on what will happen under the new formula when the ceiling is reached if there are outstanding liabilities.

The Prime Minister: The financial guidelines has been set at 27·5 becu — about £19 billion for 1988 and its annual rate of increase must not exceed 74 per cent. of the growth in Community gross national product. No estimates are available for the actual level of the guidelines after 1988. The guideline calculated under the previous arrangements would have been around 23 becu—about £16 billion—for 1988.

Expenditure in excess of the guideline would be permitted within limits set by the European Council only in the event of a substantial in-year fall in the dollar/ecu exchange rate which had a budget effect of more than 400 mecu — about £280 million. There is no provision for other exceptional circumstances.

Milk

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements were agreed for milk at the meeting of the EEC Council of Ministers in Brussels; what is her estimate of the increase in price to the United Kingdom consumer per gallon of milk as a result of the quota regime; what is the capital value of the United Kingdom quotas on the basis of the transactions known to have been carried out in 1987; and what is the highest recorded value in pounds sterling per cow in terms of a cow with (i) average milk yield and (ii) upper decile yield.

The Prime Minister: Final decisions on milk are subject to confirmation by the Foreign Affairs Council on 22-23 February; they are set out in document SN 461/88, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. It is impossible to isolate the effect of quotas on consumer prices, but as supplies for the liquid market remain adequate I would not expect it to be great. The information sought in the remainder of the hon. Gentleman's question is not available.

Wheat

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in deciding the level of the co-responsibility levy, the EEC Council of Ministers took into account the fall in the cost of production of wheat; what assessment has been made on whether the levy will stop production from rising further; and if she will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the difference between the EEC price and the world price of bread wheat and other wheat, (b) EEC production figures for wheat for each year since 1973 and (c) the cost of storing and financing surpluses.

The Prime Minister: The European Council took account of a wide range of factors in determining the level of the additional cereals co-responsibility levy. The additional levy, together with the reductions foreseen in intervention prices for cereals, will reduce the level of producers' returns and so restrain the production of cereals.

The information requested is as follows:

Agricultural Surpluses

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister when was the outset to which she referred in her statement on the European Council (Brussels), 15 February, Official Report, column 705, and whether she will publish in the Official Report a list of the foodstuffs for which effective measures have now been agreed to reduce agricultural surpluses below the level which obtained in the year which preceded that time.

The Prime Minister: The outset to which I referred was the start of the future financing negotiations in early 1987. The package on which agreement was reached at the European Council in Brussels contains both general measures to reduce surpluses and specific stabiliser measures for cereals, oil seeds and protein crops. The agreement on stabilisers for other products — sugar, wine, fruit and vegetables, tobacco, milk, sheepmeat, olive oil and cotton — is to be confirmed by the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 and 23 February.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the expected cost of depreciating surplus stocks of agricultural products outside the agricultural guideline under the terms agreed at the meeting of the EEC Council in Brussels; which departmental Vote will bear this and over what period of time; whether the same procedure will apply to new surpluses; and how these will be funded.

The Prime Minister: The expected cost of depreciating existing surplus stocks outside the financial guideline is 6,800 mecu—£4,750 million—spread over the years 1988 to 1992. This amount will be paid to member states from the Community budget in the normal way to reimburse them for the loss in value of stocks which they have purchased. In future new stocks will be systematically depreciated within the guideline to prevent a build-up of commitments.

EC (Farming Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate she has of how much expenditure wholly or mainly for the benefit of farmers is to be carried in the future on the non-EC budget as a result of the decisions made at the meeting of the EC Council in Brussels; and what is her estimate of the amount so earned in 1987.

The Prime Minister: The European Council agreed to accept a new scheme for setting aside agricultural land with a sliding scale of Community contribution depending on the level of provision set by the member state. The cost of this scheme to member states will depend on the levels of premium and the uptake by farmers.

President Waldheim (Wartime Record)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the light of her reply to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Rhodes James) of 16 February, Official Report, columns 521-22, she has anything to add to her answers of 23 October and 7 November 1986 to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when it is expected that the inquiry into the six wartime commandos who were executed by the Nazis will be reporting; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A report will be made to the House when the review of the results of investigations carried out in 1986 by the Ministry of Defence into the fate of captured British service men is complete. I can give no precise dates.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she now proposes to find out if there were documents being held in the United Kingdom regarding Dr. Waldheim's wartime activities prior to his being appointed Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: The review into the results of the investigations carried out in 1986 by the Ministry of Defence into the fate of captured British service men will investigate this.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if the Yugoslav authorities have been asked if they can assist the inquiry being conducted into the position of the six wartime commandos interrogated by Lieutenant Waldheim between their capture and execution.

The Prime Minister: No. It is unlikely that the Yugoslav authorities would hold records relating to the activities of German Army Group E—Waldheim's unit—in relation to the treatment of captured British service men captured in the eastern Aegean in 1944.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if the Defence Ministry and the Foreign Office are now actively seeking documentation from the United States of America and any other Governments that would help to clarify the full position over what occurred at all stages to the six wartime commandos interrogated by Lieutenant Waldheim between their capture and death.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Rhodes James) on 19 February, at column 752.

Wartime Commandos (Murders)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the relevant correspondence between the Defence Ministry and the relatives of the six wartime commandos murdered by the Nazis, the relatives were given all the information that was due to them over what had occurred.

The Prime Minister: It was the policy to pass on to next-of-kin all reliable information. Where there was conflicting information it was the normal practice, if possible, to resolve the conflict before writing to avoid the distress that a wrong account could cause. The more painful details were omitted unless there was pressure from the next-of-kin for a detailed account of what happened.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fornight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Eggar: The provision for staff employed at home and abroad by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration, is 9,860.

There is no set standard working week for diplomatic wing staff serving overseas. Aid wing staff serving overseas normally work 41 hours each week, but this may vary according to local practice. Conditioned hours for all staff in London are 41 hours gross a week.

In the diplomatic wing, flexible working hours were introduced in London during 1987 on a voluntary basis. Currently, staff in 21 Departments are operating the scheme. There are no staff operating job-sharing schemes.

In the aid wing, 1,021 officers take advantage of flexible working hours and 26 staff operate job-sharing schemes.

Neither wing has staff on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight.

With the exception of a few short-term contract staff, all staff in both wings participate in the principal Civil Service pension scheme and, as such, are entitled to full pension rights at 60 years.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often the Council of Ministers has discussed the location of the seat of the European Parliament during the past 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: The conclusions of the European Council in the Netherlands in March 1981 record that "the Heads of State and of Government decided unanimously to confirm the status quo in regard to the provisional places of work of the European institutions".
There has been no other discussion.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimates the Council of Ministers has made of the cost of its failure to determine a single seat for the work of the European Parliament.

Mrs. Chalker: No such estimate has been made.

Alexei Leim

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet Government the case of Alexei Leim, who wishes to join his sister in Israel.

Mr. Mellor: My right honourable and learned Friend last made representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of divided Soviet families during his visit to the Soviet Union from 14 to 17 February. Yevgeny Leim, father of Alexei, was included on a list of refuseniks which was handed to the Soviet Foreign Minister at Brize Norton in December.

El Salvador

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on death threats to British subjects in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no reports of death threats to British subjects in El Salvador.

Turkey

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Economic Community's endorsement of the trade agreement with Turkey.

Mrs. Chalker: Additional protocols to the EC/Turkey association agreement, consequent on Spanish and Portuguese accession, were signed in July 1987. The Commission has recently initialled, on behalf of the Community, a voluntary restraint arrangement covering imports of textiles from Turkey.

United Nation's Resolutions

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances resolutions passed by the General Assembly of the United Nations are not binding on member states.

Mr. Eggar: Generally the power of the General Assembly is limited to making recommendations. In certain specific cases, however, it is authorised by the United Nations charter to make decisions binding on the member states — for example, approval of the budget (under article 17) and admission of new members (under article 18).

Mr. Hor Nam Hong

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why he has refused a visa to Hor Nam Hong, the Kampuchean ambassador to Moscow.

Mr. Eggar: We have no diplomatic relations nor official dealings with the PRK. Our normal policy is not to grant visas to PRK officials, although we consider every application on its merits. Hor Nam Hong is the PRK ambassador in Moscow and it would be inappropirate to issue a visa for him.

Visas

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards consulting foreign Governments about applications for visas to enter the United Kingdom from representatives of states which Her Majesty's Government do not recognise.

Mr. Eggar: It is not our practice to consult Foreign Governments in the circumstances described.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been any change of policy as to refusal of entry to the United Kingdom to Dr. Waldheim on the grounds that it would not be conducive to the public good for admission to be granted.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Islamabad

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations and complaints he has received about delays in completing explanatory statements at the British embassy at Islamabad.

Mr. Eggar: Representations about individual cases, from any source, are kept on the appropriate case file. No analytical record of the nature of such representations is maintained.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many extra staff have been sent in the last 12 months from the United Kingdom to the British embassy in Islamabad to tackle the backlog of explanatory statements; when such staff were sent; when he expects the backlog to be reduced; and what scale of backlog he regards as tolerable.

Mr. Eggar: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 December 1987, at columns 115-16. In addition, during December 1987 three temporary additional entry clearance officers were sent to Islamabad in order to help clear the backlog by the start of the busy summer season. Future performance will be closely monitored in an effort to minimise future delays.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements, setting out the reasons for refusing entry clearance to the United Kingdom, are awaiting completion at the British embassy in Islamabad and what has been (a) the shortest and (b) the longest backlog in completing such explanatory statements in each quarter in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The latest figures available relate to the end of November 1987. The number of outstanding explanatory statements was then:

	Number
Settlement	528
Non-settlement	613

The relevant statistics have been kept since November 1986 only.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken in writing an explanatory statement at the United Kingdom's embassy at Islamabad; and what is the average time taken between completing and despatching explanatory statements from the post.

Mr. Eggar: An average writing time is not available. Each case is different. Once an explanatory statement has been completed, despatch is effected by diplomatic bag within a few days.

ENERGY

Dungeness Nuclear Stations

77. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department has made of the possible danger to the Dungeness A and B nuclear plants of the near collision of British Airways and Balkan Airways aircraft overhead on Saturday 5 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 16 February 1988, at column 592.

Nuclear Transport Ltd

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the percentage ownership by BNFL of Nuclear Transport Limited; what information he has as to what other partners have a stake in NTL and in what proportions; and what information he has as to the percentage ownership of NTL by Transnuklear GMBH of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the shares in Nuclear Transport Ltd are held equally by British Nuclear Fuels plc, Transnucleaire of France and Transnuklear GMBH of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Energy Management Panels

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet on 23 November 1987, Official Report, column 23, how often the energy management panels set up by Government Departments responsible for the civil estate have met; what is the total annual energy bill for which they are responsible; what capital investment budget has been set aside for energy efficiency improvements; and if he will report on progress in energy efficiency in Government buildings.

Mr. Parkinson: The energy management panel for the civil estate has met twice since it was established last autumn. The total annual energy bill for the civil estate is about £60 million. The Property Services Agency is directing about £3·5 million in both 1987-88 and 1988-89 to capital improvements in energy efficiency. This is in addition to spending by individual Departments within their own works programmes and further energy efficiency improvements which arise from substantial planned maintenance expenditure by the PSA.

The panel is monitoring developments across the estate and will advise Departments on how to build on the significant progress already achieved.

Energy Forecasting

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those research reports, conference papers and statements made by (a) his Department's officials, and (b) United Kingdom Atomic Energy Agency staff on energy forecasting, including any specific forecasts made for the United Kingdom over the past five years; and if he will place a copy of each in the Library.

Mr. Parkinson: A complete list of relevant research reports, conference papers and statements made by my Department's officials would cost a disproportionate amount to prepare. However, the most important papers on forecasting produced by the Department in recent years have been:

(i) Proof of evidence for the Sizewell 'B' public inquiry DEN/P/1. October 1982.
(ii) Department of Energy Paper on energy projections methodology DEN/S/7. 1983.
(iii) Department of Energy Paper on investment in energy use, DEN/S/3. January 1983.
(iv) Paper given to the SSRC conference on strategic planning in the nationalised industries by Dr. K. J. Wigley. September 1983.
(v) Energy Efficiency Office paper on combined heat and power. 1986.
(vi) Energy Technology Support Unit background papers relevant to the 1986 appraisal of United Kingdom energy research, development and demonstration.

I understand that the UKAEA has not published any relevant reports, papers or statements during the period referred to.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what changes are proposed for insurance cover and liability for nuclear installations operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board, South of Scotland Electricity Board and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, in the light of the forthcoming privatisation of the electricity supply industry; if he will set a working group to examine this issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We will announce our proposals on the future structure of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales in due course. The South of Scotland Electricity Board is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Coal Production (Subsidies)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average level of Government subsidy per tonne of deep-mined coal each year since 1978 in each European Economic Community country and in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is set out below. It has been obtained from European Commission publications. The United States of America does not provide financial support to its coal industry.

THE ARTS

Inner Cities

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the Arts Council has discussed with him initiatives to encourage the arts in the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 10 February 1988, at column 283.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: I have visited Liverpool twice in recent weeks. On 26 November I visited a wide range of arts facilities and on 16 February I participated in two television programmes on the arts. I am impressed by the range of performing arts and museum and gallery facilities in Liverpool.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Brooke: There were 3,164 staff in post in the Treasury on 1 February 1988, including 852 part-time staff — each counted as half a post. Full-time staff work conditioned hours. Information is not held centrally on the hours of staff working part-time, nor on the schemes under which they do so. Six hundred and thirty-three staff were on flexitime. Most full-time and part-time civil servants are currently members of the principal Civil Service pension scheme — the main exceptions are those who work less than 15 hours a week and casual staff — and are able to retire at 60 years with pension rights related to their final salary and their full length of service, which varies case by case, up to that age.

Agricultural Support Costs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what figures he based the claim, contained in the Economic Progress Report No. 194, February 1988, that agricultural support is costing the average European Economic Community family £550 per year; what the overall annual cost would be (a) in Britain and (b) in the European Economic Community as a whole, based on £550 per family of four; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Economic Progress Report article made it clear that the estimate of up to £550 a year in higher food prices together with higher levels of taxation was drawn from figures produced by the Australian Department of Primary Industry, published in the Political Economy of International Agricultural Policy Reform, Canberra 1986. The figure is broadly in line with the results of other studies. Figures for total costs borne by consumers and taxpayers in the United Kingdom or any other individual European Community country are not available. Whatever the difficulties of measurement, there are substantial costs to consumers and taxpayers. The Government's long-term strategy is to reduce these costs.

Employees (Union Activities)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, by union and Government Department, for 1976, 1986 and 1987, (a) the number of employees entitled to time off with pay for union activities, (b) the annual number of hours taken off and (c) the annual cost of employee's salaries for the hours when they are engaged in union activities,

Mr. Brooke: Details are not available for 1976, and are unavailable in the form requested for 1986 and 1987 except at disproportionate cost. However, I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave respectively to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 23 January 1987, at column 782, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 22 October 1987, at column 856.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the facilities provided for union officials in each Government Department, in order that they may undertake their union duties; and if he will give the estimated value of such facilities in each Department in respect of each union.

Mr. Brooke: The facilities available for union officials are set out in the Civil Service National Whitley Council agreement on facilities for industrial relations duties and trade union activities in the non-industrial Civil Service. This was revised in 1982 and a copy is to be found in the Library of the House. The agreement is used as a model by many Departments in framing departmental agreements with their trade union sides. The precise value of these facilities provided by each Department to individual unions cannot be identified except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that facilities provided for union officials within Government Departments are used for their proper purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The facilities provided for union officials in Government Departments are covered by the national facilities agreement and departmental agreements and arrangements. It is the responsibility of individual Departments to ensure that facilities are used for their proper purposes.

Brussels Summit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update table 3.3 of the Public Expenditure White paper to take account of the decisions reached at the Brussels summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 February 1988]: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has stated, the overall effect of the agreement reached at the European Council will be to increase the United Kingdom's net contribution after abatement by an estimated £200 to £300 million a year compared with the existing own resources ceiling, and by an estimated £100 to £200 million a year compared with the effective level of spending in 1987. The outcome on individual budget lines will depend on a range of factors, including detailed decisions still to be taken.

Nurses' Pay

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for 1987 and 1979 at 1987 prices the average and minimum take-home pay after tax and national insurance payments of nurses who receive only the single person's tax allowance with no mortgage or other tax allowances for the following grades of nurse (a) student nurse, (b) nursing auxiliary, (c) enrolled nurse, (d) staff nurse and (e) sister II.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 February 1988]: I regret that information on average earnings is not available for 1979 and not in the form requested for 1987. Levels of take-home pay at constant 1987 prices for nurses at the minima of their pay scales and earning only basic pay are shown in the table.

Take home pay at constant 1987 prices

£ per annum

	1979	1987	Percentage increase
Student nurse	3,396	3,790	12·0
Nursing auxiliary	3,451	3,813	10·5
Enrolled nurse	3,830	4,996	30·4
Staff nurse	4,161	5,732	37·7
Sister II	4,976	6,925	39·2

Notes:
For 1979 gross pay is at 1 June. For 1987 gross pay is current level payable from 1 April 1987.
Take home pay is gross pay less income tax, assuming only a single person's allowance, and contracted out NICs.
The 1979 income tax regime used is that in the "caretaker" Budget of May 1979.
Constant prices calculated using RPI for July of the relevant year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Clothing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total output of clothing, the percentage exported and the proportion of the domestic market taken by imports in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany and (c) Japan in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is as follows:

Portugal

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates he has made of the effect of the industrial modernisation of Portugal on the United Kingdom balance of trade with Portugal; and if he will publish in the Official Report details of the overall balance with Portugal in each of the past 15 years and the balance of trade in manufactures.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas) on 12 February, at column 375. The many factors contributing to the changes in these balances have not been quantified.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Butcher: There were 12,763 permanent civil servants employed in the Department of Trade and Industry on 1 January 1988. The average paid working hours, including lunch breaks and overtime, of the 12,259 full-time staff is 42·0. The extent of unpaid overtime working is not known. The 504 part-time staff work, on average, 21·4 hours per week, excluding lunch breaks.

Flexible working hours is a facility open to all staff in the Department. It is authorised locally by line management and there is no record kept centrally. The number of those actually working FWH could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Some of the part-time staff share full-time jobs, but details are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Thirty-one of the part-time staff work between 29 and 33 hours per week, excluding lunch breaks, that is, broadly the equivalent of a four-day working week or a nine-day fortnight.

Maximum pension entitlement is earned after 40 years of reckonable service. Statistics are not readily available of the number of staff who, assuming service continued to normal retirement age, would reach maximum entitlement.

Engagements

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list the public engagements or meetings with persons outside the Government or the Civil Service which he has held in his capacity as Minister responsible for the inner cities since 13 January.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have had many meetings with business men and organisations involved in inner city regeneration including Business in the Community, the CBI and the Industrial Society. These meetings have shown that there is a range of ways in which companies, voluntary organisations and local communities can contribute constructively to making inner cities better places in which to live, work and invest.

Commercial Barriers (Removal)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what provisions will be made to draw the attention of the public to the new conditions creating new opportunities within the European Economic Community after 1992, as a result of the proposed removal of commercial barriers in Europe.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are preparing a sustained national campaign so that everyone involved in business in this country knows about opportunities which will come from completing the single European market. Full details will be announced shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Vaccination

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage the uptake of (a) measles, (b) triple vaccine, including whooping cough, and (c) poliomyelitis vaccination falls short of the target level of 90 per cent. in each of the health authorities in England for each of the last six years.

Mrs. Currie: I have placed in the Library tables showing the available differences between the two year uptake rates and the 90 per cent. targets in 1984, 1985 and 1986. Due to NHS restructuring in 1982, comparable figures are not available for the years before 1984.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has of a change of behaviour patterns following his Department's AIDS advertising campaign; and if he has any plans to improve the response to his Department's campaign.

Mr. Newton: In mounting the AIDS public education campaign the Government, and now the Health Education Authority, have adopted a step-by-step approach, with detailed monitoring and evaluation at each stage. The first stages of the campaign aimed to raise the general level of public awareness about AIDS and HIV and to provide basic factual information about the disease. The second phase of the campaign was aimed specifically at combating the spread of HIV through injecting drug misuse, with a parallel campaign aimed at discouraging young people from experimenting with drugs at all. The latest stage of the campaign was launched on 17 February by the Health Education Authority, which is now responsible for the United Kingdom-wide mass media elements of AIDS public education, working in close collaboration with sister agencies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The new campaign seeks to build on progress already made by reinforcing, among the population as a whole, knowledge of the disease and awareness of safeguarding actions which the individual can take, and by targeting specific groups who may be at particular risk, starting with business travellers.

Independent market research in the first year of the campaign revealed a very high level of awareness which was a particular objective of this phase. There was some evidence of a wider use of condoms. The research has also indicated that many homosexual men claim to have made changes in their sexual behaviour; this is supported by indirect evidence that they may have done so.

Evaluation of the second phase of the campaign is being carried out and the results are awaited. The Government and the Health Education Authority will continue to monitor closely the effects of the campaigns already undertaken and now underway and to use the results in developing policy on AIDS work in general and on campaign activity in particular.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the average cost to the National Health Service of treating an AIDS patient for the duration of the illness.

Mr. Newton: There is no detailed information available about the total cost to the NHS of treating a patient with AIDS. From research, hospital costs of in-patient treatment are estimated at £17,600 from diagnosis to death. In addition, the average cost of maintaining a patient on Retrovir (AZT) is £4,600 per year.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the expenditure of the National Health Service for 1960,1970, 1980, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and what percentage of the gross domestic product these expenditures represented.

Mr. Newton: Data on net NHS expenditure, excluding NHS charges, for readily available years are shown in the table. The data have been derived from Central Statistical Office national accounts.

Net expenditure of the National Health Service in total and as a percentage of GDP

	Net expenditure £ million	Percentage of GDP
1970	2,031	3·9
1980	11,939	5·2

1986	19,939	5·3

Notes:
(a) Before April 1 1974 local authorities incurred both capital and current expenditure on the National Health Service. The table contains all readily identifiable elements of such expenditure.
(b) Data beyond 1986 are not available.
(c) There are slight rounding differences between these figures and those published by the OECD for purposes of international comparisons.

Departmental Deputy Secretaries

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the numbers and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Portillo: The responsibilities of grade 2—deputy secretary level — officers in the Department and the number and grades of staff reporting to them are given in the table. In addition, approximately 4,500 staff work in the special hospitals, Disablement Services Authority, youth treatment centres, artificial eye unit and Medical Practices Committee, and a further 1,500 staff, mainly working for the independent statutory authorities, do not report through lines of command to grade 2 officers.

Wound Dressings

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the net cost of introducing, on prescription, those high technology wound dressings which have recently been submitted to the drugs committee of his Department.

Mr. Newton: Several new wound dressings are currently being evaluated. No estimates are yet available of the effect on overall NHS expenditure of making these dressings available on GP prescription.

Health Care

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of Britain's gross domestic product was devoted to both public and private health care in each year from 1958 to 1988.

Mr. Newton: Data on net public expenditure, excluding NHS charges, and private expenditure as a percentage of GDP for the period 1965 to 1986 are shown in the table. They have been derived from Central Statistical Office national accounts and relate to the United Kingdom as a whole. Complete data on a consistent basis are not available for earlier years.

(c) There are slight rounding differences between these figures and those published by the OECD for purposes of international comparisons.

National Health Service Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the different frequencies and the number of times individual consultants see National Health Service patients in respect of the 10 most common hospital treatments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not collected centrally. How often, and how many times, an individual patient is seen by the consultant is a matter for the latter to decide in the light of his clinical assessment of that patient's condition.

Child Benefit

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many overseas students resident in the United Kingdom for over 26 weeks are claiming child benefit on behalf of their children also resident in the United Kingdom; how many children are concerned; and what is the cost to public funds.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of mentions of mental retardation in the mother on the notification forms for abortions carried out at or after 18 weeks gestation during 1986.

Mr. Newton: During 1986 there was one abortion notification which mentioned mental retardation in the mother, where the abortion was performed at 18 weeks or more gestation.

Donor Organs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department first considered the significance of required request as a method of increasing the number of donor organs; what studies have taken place on this matter; when a decision can be expected; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have followed with interest the American experience of required request legislation, which began in 1985. In May 1986 the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health visited New York to examine the operation of the laws. More recently the working party on the supply of donor organs set up by the medical royal colleges considered the introduction of legislation. They recommended an alternative non-legislative approach towards improving the availability of donor organs. I announced our decisions on the recommendations in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 18 December 1987, at column 934.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies have been made relating to contracting in or contracting-out of any scheme to increase the supply of donor organs for transplant; and if he is now in a position to make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Successive Governments have considered and rejected contracting out schemes under which organs could be removed after death from anyone who had not registered an objection. Current legislation, as set out in the Human Tissue Act 1961, regards organ donation as a positive gift made by the donor during life or by surviving relatives after the donor's death. We have no plans to amend the Act.

Proposals for national contracting-in schemes are usually associated with computerised registers of potential donors. We are being kept informed of the progress of Lifeline Wales, a computerised register of potential donors with links to intensive care and neuro units in Wales. A national register covering England would be expensive to establish and maintain, and we would only consider making the necessary investment if the Welsh experience showed it to be clearly effective.

Prosthetists

Mr Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the needs for additional prosthetists; what support and advice his Department is giving about the need for additional prosthetists and the retraining of prosthetists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority to which the hon. Member should address his questions.

Drug Testing

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of the drug testing scheme results for European Economic Community-manufactured general drugs in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give details of the drug testing scheme results for the European Economic Community-manufactured and non-European Economic Community-manufactured proprietary drugs for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that no information is available about the country of origin of the drugs tested under the scheme for testing drugs dispensed by Community pharmacies. The information available for England in the period 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 is as follows:

	Number of samples tested
	Proprietary	Non-proprietary
Total:	1,875	2,598
(i) No action taken	1,843	2,560
(ii) Faults and deficiencies in manufacture of proprietary products or faults and deficiencies which cannot be checked by independent analysts	8	9
(iii) Minor error in dispensing	9	7
(iv) Referred to pharmaceutical service committee	15	22

Drug Recalls

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of the drug recalls of European Economic Community-manufactured and non-European Economic Community-manufactured general drugs for the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give details of the drug recalls of European Economic Community-manufactured and non-European Economic Community-manufactured proprietary drugs for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret information is not available in the form requested. Generally, pharmaceutical companies have their own arrangements for recalling batches of defective medicines which they identify. During 1987 they involved the Department in the recall of specific batches of nine generic and five proprietary products, all manufactured in the European Community. We are not aware of any recalls in 1987 involving non-EC manufactured products.

Prostoglandin Abortions

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the other agents used in some prostoglandin abortions; and how many prostoglandin abortions were performed in England and Wales in 1986 (a) with and (b) without the use of other agents, respectively.

Mr. Newton: Doctors are asked to specify the other agents used in prostoglandin abortions on the notification form which must be submitted to the chief medical officer for every abortion performed. An analysis of this information could be provided, only at disproportionate cost, but I understand that the agents normally used are oxytocin and urea. The numbers of prostoglandin abortions in England and Wales in 1986 are as follows:

	Number
Prostoglandins only	3,616
Prostoglandins with other agents	5,570

Pay Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the answer of 12 February 1988, Official Report, columns 409-10, giving the number of pay beds in England at 31 December 1979 as 3,171, he has anything to add to the answer of 19 December 1986, Official Report, column 795, which gave a figure of 2,404; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the figure of 3,171 authorised pay beds given in my reply to the hon. Member on 12 February 1988, at columns 409-10, was incorrect. The number of authorised pay beds in England at 31 December 1979 was 2,405. The percentage bed occupancy figure thus increases to 62·7 per cent.

Eli Lilley

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the drugs supplied to the National Health Service by Eli Lilley.

Mr. Newton: The following drugs are supplied by either this company or its subsidiary, Dista Products Ltd.:

Allegron
Amytal
Aventyl
Brietal Sodium
Capastat
Cinobac
Dimelor
Distaclor
Distaquaine V-K
Fenopron
Haelan (excluding Haelan Tape)

Humulin Z
Humulin Zn
Keflex
Keflin
Kefzol
Nebcin
Nu-Seals
Progesic
Seconal Sodium
Sodium Amytal
Tuinal
V-Cil-k.

The following products are also supplied, but prescriptions must be written in the generic name and pharmacists are free to dispense a generic product which need not necessarily be this company's.

Distalgesic
Cologel Doloxene.

Management Consultants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the cost to his Department of employing management consultants for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Moore: The Department's expenditure on consultants is recorded in budget years from April to March. It is not possible to isolate expenditure on management consultants alone as there is considerable overlap with computer consultancies. The expenditure on management and computer consultancies for 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and the estimated expenditure for 1987-88 are as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	3·623
1984-85	7·600

	£ million
1985-86	13·646
1986-87	16·962
1987-88	[1]25·827

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the current waiting period for social security appeals to be heard by tribunals in the Nottingham region; what is the current number of appeals awaiting determination; and what steps are being taken to reduce the backlog.

Mr. Portillo: The latest available administrative statistics for the midlands region of the office of the president of social security appeal tribunals, which covers the Nottingham area, are for the second quarter of 1987. At June 1987 there were 27,398 appeals awaiting a hearing and the average time from lodgment of an appeal to the hearing in that quarter was 21·2 weeks. The president advises that in the midlands region at 12 January 1988 there were 17,301 appeals awaiting a hearing.

Responsibility for the administration of social security appeal tribunals rests with the president, his hon. Judge Byrt, QC. In response to a request from officials earlier this month, he has written a note to describe the difficulties which his organisation faces and his proposals for resolving them. Copies of that letter have been placed in the Library.

Worth House Children's Home

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by name and function, all those persons of whom the social services inspectorate made inquiries during his investigations concerning the operation and administration of Worth house children's home, Herne Bay.

Mrs. Currie: The inspection of Worth house children's home was a joint one with Kent county council social services department. The inspectors spoke to individuals and groups of staff and shared meals and recreation periods with the young residents; the premises were inspected and records were examined. It is not normal practice to reveal the names of individuals of whom inquiries are made in the course of inspections by the social services inspectorate.

Registration of Death (Travel Costs)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost in each of the last five years to assist claimants with the cost of travel to register a death; and if such claims for assistance will be accepted after April of the current year.

Mr. Portillo: No specific provision exists in the supplementary benefit scheme to help with the cost of travel to register a death. However, provision did exist in supplementary benefit single payments to help claimants to meet the cost of travelling to arrange a funeral. Such help continues to be available under the social fund funeral payment arrangements which replaced the single payments provision in April 1987.

Details of the amounts of such payments are not available.

Death Grant

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the United Kingdom died in each of the last five years; and in how many deaths the death grant was paid.

Mr. Portillo: The available information is as follows. Deaths recorded in the United Kingdom include a minority of visitors from abroad who did not qualify for a death grant.

Year	United Kingdom
	Deaths recorded	Death grants paid[1]
1983	659,101	614,000

Birmingham Children's Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private heart operations requiring intensive care beds at the Birmingham children's hospital were carried out by consultants from the Birmingham children's hospital during the week beginning 14 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that one heart operation was performed on a private patient at the Birmingham children's hospital last week. There is a long-standing arrangement at the children's hospital whereby any private patients are admitted to the hospital on the basis of clinical need and do not take priority over National Health Service patients.

Registration of Deaths

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to enable funeral directors to register deaths on behalf of the bereaved to remove the requirement on the bereaved to register a death at the registrar's office for the area where the death occurred.

Mrs. Currie: At present, information for the registration of a death may only be given to the registrar of the sub-district in which the event occurred.

A change to enable a death in England and Wales to be notified to any registrar of deaths in those countries was recently recommended for consideration in the efficiency scrutiny into the registration service which reported in 1985. Following my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's announcement in the other place on 3 December 1987—Official Report, House of Lords, column 1230—consultations have been opened on the scrutiny recommendations and on wider issues including the list of persons qualified to register deaths. It is as yet too early to predict the outcome of those consultations.

Drugs (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people who suffer significant long-term adverse reactions after taking pharmaceutical drugs; and approximately what percentage this is of those taking drugs each year.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 12 January 1988]: Although it is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the number who suffer significant long term adverse reactions after taking pharmaceutical drugs or of the percentage that the latter represents of all who take such drugs in a year, it is clear that the percentage must be extremely small. The number of suspected adverse reaction reports received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in 1986 was 15,527 of which 5,006 were judged serious. Of the latter, the duration of the reaction was known for 2,039 and of these only 144 exceeded three months. There is no reliable estimate of the number of people who take drugs for a medicinal purpose in a year although it must represent a significant proportion of the population if both prescription and non-prescription drugs are included.

National Insurance

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the national insurance contributions paid by a man on the national average wage goes to support the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: In 1988-89 a man is expected to earn an average £225 per week: the NHS contribution from class 1 national insurance contributions will be 0·95 per cent. of earnings up to the upper earnings limit of £305 per week, and 0·8 per cent. of earnings from employers. The NHS contribution will fund 15 per cent. of the gross cost of the NHS in Great Britain in 1988-89. The table provides the information sought.

Estimated amount of weekly National Insurance contributions paid to the National Health Service (average male earnings)

	Weekly earnings	Total NIC	NHS contributions (0·95 per cent. of earnings)	Percentage of NIC paid to NHS
Not contracted out of SERPS	225·00	20·25	2·14	10·6
Contracted out of SERPS	225·00	16·57	2·14	12·9

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures for National Health Service expenditure per annum on (a) hospital running costs, (b) hospital capital costs, (c) general practice medical services, (d) general practice dental services, (e) general practice pharmaceutical services and (f) general practice ophthalmic services for 1979 until the last year the figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Information for 1986-87 is shown in the table.

For the earlier years I refer the hon. Member to the summarised accounts of health authorities and family practitioner committees in England which are published annually as a House of Commons paper. HC20 1986-87 covers the financial year 1985-86—the latest published.

Hospital Services—Revenue Expenditure	8,255,383
Hospitals—Capital Expenditure	706,563
General Medical Services	1,134,612
Pharmaceutical Services	1,696,073
General Dental Services	530,550
General Ophthalmic Services	130,725

Continence Nursing Advisers

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what progress has been made in providing additional continence nursing advisers; what support his Department is giving to providing training for such advisers; if he will increase training facilities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what official training facilities are available for nursing continence advisers; what support his Department is giving for validating such training and qualifications; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will consider giving nursing continence advisers special payments for training, skills and responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting as the independent statutory body charged with the responsibility for the regulation and education of the nursing professions in England provides a curriculum for a course on the promotion of continence and the management of incontinence. It is for health authorities to determine the appropriate levels of training required for particular posts. The Nurses' Pay Review Body is currently considering appropriate rates of pay for a new clinical grading structure which will provide more scope to reward and recognise nurses who have advanced clinical skills.

Intramuscular Injections

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department regards the administration of intramuscular injections by trained nurses as part of a nurse's ordinary duties; and what instructions his Department gives to hospital administrators if nursing officers insist that it is not.

Mr. Newton: The administration of intramuscular injections is part of the duties of a trained nurse and this skill is taught as part of basic training. This is not a subject on which the Department would normally give advice. Any disagreement would be a matter for local management to resolve.

Blood Samples

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department regards the taking of blood samples by appropriately trained nurses as part of a nurse's ordinary duties; and what instructions his Department gives to hospital administrators if nursing officers insist that it is not.

Mr. Newton: This particular task is not included in basic training but it has been accepted by a number of health authorities as being a suitable task to be delegated to appropriately trained nursing staff. Advice is given on delegation to a nurse of tasks not included in basic training in HC(77)22, "The Extended Role of the Clinical Nurse Legal Implications & Training Requirements". A copy is being placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sea Birds (Carbis Bay)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the destruction of sea birds in Carbis bay, Cornwall, through entanglement in nylon monofilament fishing nets; if he will take steps to ban the use of these nets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have received representations from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds about the recent deaths of sea birds in Carbis bay, Cornwall, through entanglement in fishing nets. Under normal circumstances the use of monofilament nets does not present a significant threat to populations of sea birds. However, in recent weeks, the adverse weather has driven sea birds inshore and prevented local fishermen from setting their nets further out to sea. Additionally, there has been a particular abundance of small fish, notably sprat, in the area. These factors, taken together, have resulted in unusually high fatalities among sea birds. We are keeping the situation under review.

Food for Needy People

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are being made for the distribution of free food for the needy, in the current year.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 9 February, at column 158, to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay).

Chile

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment was made by the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), the implications of the degree of economic stability of Chile for the prospects of trade between the United Kingdom and Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: On my visit to Chile between 11 and 17 January 1988, I was accompanied by a team of business men representing a good cross-section of the United Kingdom's agro-industry. I can inform my hon. Friend that the team, who made a significant number of new business contacts, were highly impressed by the economic stability of that country and the prospects for bilateral trade in agricultural and fisheries products. I share that impression.

As I made clear to the various Ministers of the Chilean Government whom I met, I am a firm supporter of the initiative they have taken to privatise the agricultural sector. I was able, with my business team, to meet many agricultural entrepreneurs, particularly in the horticultural and fisheries sectors, who have expressed the wish to improve trade with the United Kingdom.

Nevertheless I also made it clear to representatives of the Chilean Government, as well as to the leading members of the Opposition, that, while admiring their economic progress, we could not overlook Chile's consistently poor human rights performance. I also emphasised that Her Majesty's Government would wish to see an orderly and peaceful return to democracy as soon as possible.

Water (Nitrate Levels)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action his Department is taking to restrict nitrate levels in water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has well-established programmes of research, publicity and advice aimed at encouraging the farming industry to adopt practices which limit the scope for nitrate leaching into water resources. In addition, we have recently launched a campaign in association with other interested organisations to raise awareness among farmers of how they can help to reduce the problem, particularly in areas where the levels of nitrate in the public water supply are significant.

EC (Food Statistics)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 22 July 1987, Official Report, column 236, if he will update the details of (a) the total agricultural support for the European Economic Community, (b) overall European Economic Community expenditure and (c) total European Economic Community agricultural exports, to the latest date for which information is now available.

Mr. MacGregor: Final outturn figures for 1987 are not yet available. Budget provision for expenditure on market support and structural measures under the common agricultural policy was 24,101 mecu (£16,854 million); in addition some 4,512 mecu (£3,155 million) of expenditure on agricultural market support in November and December 1987 could not be met from the 1987 budget and will fall on the 1988 budget.

The total Community budget for 1987 including agriculture (but excluding the carry over) was 36,168 mecu (£25,292 million) compared to 34,219 mecu (£22,169 million) outturn in 1986.

Details of the value of agricultural exports from the Community in 1987 are not yet available.

Rapeseed

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been (a) the EEC guarantee threshold and (b) actual output for rapeseed compared with EEC output over the past 10 years; what assessment he has made of why the reduction of 10 per cent. in the guarantee price in 1987 did not result in a fall in output; what assessment has been made of the effect a further reduction in price of 8 per cent. will have on output; at what stage further price reductions will be triggered; what contribution these arrangements have made towards reducing agricultural surpluses; and what effect the EEC subsidies have had on imports from (i) the developing countries and (ii) other countries.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. The 1987 price reduction could not have affected rapeseed output this year since the decision was taken after the crop was planted. The additional estimated price reduction of 8 per cent. for 1988 is based on the Commission's assumed production for this year. If, however, 1988 or subsequent production proves higher than expected, additional price reductions will be introduced automaticaly in line with the objective of budgetary stabilisation.

There is no overall Community oilseed surplus, only a need to reduce and stabilise support expenditure.

Agricultural Commodities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the increase in production of agricultural commodities in the EEC for the next five years; what estimates have been made of the effect this will have on the trade of third countries; and what assessment has been made of the implications for United Kingdom exports of manufactures to these countries.

Mr. Gummer: A range of projections of Community agricultural production and trade is contained in the Commission communication COM(87)1 final, 4 March 1987 (pp B4 to B85), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The projections are based generally on past trends. Actual production in future years will depend on the reactions of the Community's 9 million farmers to the many factors influencing their decisions, including the new stabiliser arrangements, set-aside and Community decisions on agricultural support generally. Developments in world food trade will depend also on changes in agricultural support, production and consumption in other countries. Prospects for United Kingdom exports in manufactured goods will depend primarily on the competitive position of our manufacturing sector.

New Forest (Keepers' Strike)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the rent strike by keepers of the New Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have had no such representations.

Sheepmeat Stabilisers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if there is to be a separate scheme for Great Britain under the European Community proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers;

(2) what is the maximum guaranteed quantity figures for ewes under the European Community proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers in (a) Great Britain and (b) the rest of the Community, including Northern Ireland;

(3) what are the relevant percentage price reductions over the maximum guaranteed quantity, under the European Community proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers for (a) Great Britain and (b) the rest of the European Community, including Northern Ireland;

(4) if he will make a statement on the implications of the proposed sheepmeat stabilisers for (a) Great Britain and (b) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 19 February 1988]: The European Council at its meeting on 11-12 February had before it proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers which would provide for guarantee thresholds to be set at the estimated ewe numbers in 1987 of 18 million ewes for Great Britain; and of 44 million for the rest of the Community (including Northern Ireland). The texts provide that if these thresholds were exceeded subsequently, the basic price would be reduced — separately in Great Britain on the one hand and in the rest of the Community (including Northern Ireland) on the other—by 1 per cent. for each 1 per cent. overrun. The separate arrangement for Great Britain would be linked to the application of the variable premium scheme. The Foreign Affairs Council is expected to endorse the non-arable sector stabilisers at its meeting on 22-23 February.

Other operational details, including the starting date for applying the proposed stabiliser mechanism and the precise percentages for the first basic price reductions, will be dealt with in implementing regulations which the EC Commission has yet to bring forward.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether, under the European Community proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers, there are any arrangement for minimum import prices;

(2) what arrangements have been made, under the European Community proposals for sheepmeat stabilisers, for country imports into (a) Great Britain and (b) the rest of the European Community, including Northern Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 19 February 1988]: The importation of sheepmeat into the Community from third countries is governed by voluntary restraint agreements between the EC and the main supplying countries. The VRAs make no distinction as between Great Britain and the rest of the Community, including Northern Ireland. Texts on the sheepmeat stabiliser proposals before the European Council at its meeting on 11-12 February include suggestions as to the points which might form part of the Community's eventual negotiating mandate for discussions with third countries about their future imports. One such point is that third countries should respect import price discipline.

Coniferous Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his policy is with regard to coniferous woodlands being planted in areas of outstanding natural beauty under the farm woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 February 1988]: Every application for the farm woodland scheme which falls within an area of outstanding natural beauty will be carefully considered to ensure that it is compatible with that designation. This is irrespective of whether the proposed planting consists predominately of conifers or broadleaves or comprises a mixture of the two.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will collate regular statistics on the handling of applications by each local authority in England, indicating their performance in the execution of their duties under legislation on council house sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department currently requires detailed monthly reports from 11 local authorities whose processing of right-to-buy applications is unsatisfactory. Other authorities submit quarterly returns of applications received and sales completed, and may be brought within the formal monitoring arrangements if complaints received indicate that this is justified.

Rate Levels

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the amount, in percentage terms, by which the 1988-89 rate levels in (a) Middlesbrough, (b) Langbaurgh, (c) Stockton and (d) Hartlepool will exceed average wage increases over the past 12 months.

Mr. Chope: Based on provisional information, the percentages by which domestic rate increases in 1988-89 will exceed wage increases over the past 12 months are shown below. No information is available yet for Langbaurgh.

	Percentage
Middlesbrough	−2
Hartlepool	+4

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the amount by which in percentage terms the 1988-89 rates levels in (a) Middlesbrough, (b) Langbaurgh, (c) Stockton and Hartlepool will exceed the retail price index increase over the past 12 months.

Mr. Chope: Based on provisional information, the percentages by which domestic rate increases in 1988-89 will exceed the retail prices index increase are shown below. No information is yet available for Langbaurgh.

Middlesbrough	3
Stockton	10
Hartlepool	9

Cleveland County Council

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the increase in the number of employees engaged by Cleveland county council in each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: The numbers employed by Cleveland county council and the increase in each of the past five years is as follows:

(Number employed—full and part-time)

June	Total	Change
1983	25,189	—
1984	24,799	−390
1985	24,664	−135

Domestic Rates

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the likely average household increase in rates in cash terms of ratepayers living in (a) Langbaurgh, (b) Middlesbrough, (c) Stockton and (d) Hartlepool for 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: Based on provisional information, the likely average household rate increases in cash terms in 1988-89 are shown below. No information is yet available for Langbaurgh.

	Average domestic bill (£) 1987-88	Average domestic bill (£) 1988-89	Increase £

Rating Reform

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional staff he estimates on average district councils will need to recruit in order to implement the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: It is not possible to estimate an average figure. Different authorities will choose to adopt different computer systems some of which be relatively capital intensive while others will be relatively manpower intensive.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average cost to a district council of preparing for the implementation of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The explanatory and financial memorandum attached to the Local Government Finance Bill contained an estimate of between £70 million and £90 million on the establishment of the register and preparation of new billing and collection systems. Those figures would equate to an average cost of between £174,000 and £223,000 for each collecting authority.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish revised exemplifications of community charge levels for all English and Welsh authorities for 1987-88, taking into consideration (a) rates of Government estimates for likely evasion and other non-collection rates in each local authority area, and (b) the use of rate fund balances by authorities.

Mr. Howard: The Government have made no estimate of evasion and non-collection rates. The exemplifications we have published do take account of the use of balances.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received from members of the public since 1985 (a) in support of and (b) opposed to the community charge.

Mr. Howard: A summary of 1,271 responses received by my Department before 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. Since June 1987, my Department has received some 3,800 letters, including about 3,400 from individual members of the public. The letters contain a variety of comments on specific aspects of our proposals or requests for further information, and for this reason do not readily lend themselves to an analysis of correspondents' views.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether poll tax registrars will have access to family practitioners committee lists of patients;

(2) whether poll tax registrars will have access to district health authority lists of patients;

(3) whether poll tax registrars will have access to the Department of Health and Social Security/National Health Service central register list of patients;

(4) whether poll tax registrars will have access to the lists of women patients being used to call and recall women for cervical cancer screening.

Mr. Howard: Community charges registration officers will have access to none of these lists.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce the figures in figures 6 to 11 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge, on the basis of the rebate system currently in operation being applied to all figures.

Mr. Ridley: No. By the time the community charge takes effect the new housing benefit system which Parliament has approved will have been in operation for two years.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made as to the proportion of the total number of people eligible for rebate in respect of the proposed community charge in England and Wales who will already be in receipt of means-tested benefits;

(2) what is his estimate of the increase in the total number of people, including claimants and their dependants, who will become entitled to means-tested benefits following the introduction of the community charge in England and Wales; and what estimate he has made as to the numbers who will then be eligible for a community charge rebate but will not claim it.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that it is not possible to provide estimates in the form requested. The Government's Green Paper "Paying for Local Government," published in 1986, estimated the community charge rebate case load in Great Britain at 7·66 million, 1·17 million above the rate rebate case load. No detailed estimates using more up-to-date assumptions are available. The Green Paper figures were based on potential entitlement and did not take account of failure to claim benefit. Nearer to the time we will be publicising the availability of community charge rebates.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extract from the data used in the construction of figures 9 to 11 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge in England (1) the number of households receiving rate bills, (2) the total value of their gross bills, (3) the number of households receiving rebates, (4) the total value of such rebates and (5) the total value of the net bills for the households receiving rebates, the figures to be provided (a) for all households in England and (b) separately for (i) one adult (non-retired), (ii) one adult (retired), (iii) a pensioner couple, (iv) other two adult households with or without children, (v) three adults with or without children and (vi) four or more adults, with or without children.

Mr. Ridley: The estimates requested are as follows:

Household type	Number receiving rate bills (millions)	Total value gross rate bills (£million per annum)	Numbers entitled to rebates (millions)	Total value rebates (£million per annum)
Single pensioner	2·5	795·7	1·6	321·6
Other single adult	2·2	723·5	0·7	167·2
Two adults	11·1	4,471·3	2·2	421·2
Three or more adults	2·5	1,060·7	0·5	67·3
All	18·3	7,051·3	5·0	977·5

The total value of the net bills for the households receiving rebate is not readily available.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce the figures in figures 7, 8, 10 and 11 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge, splitting the data for two adult households into pensioner couples and others.

Mr. Ridley: The following tables split the figures for two-adult households and tax units in figures 7, 8, 10 and 11 of the Department's note of 13 January 1988 on the relationship between local taxes and income, showing the results for "pensioner couples" and "other couples" separately.

North Tyneside Borough Council

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if North Tyneside borough council's grant-related expenditure allocation and grant relief entitlement for 1985-86 onwards will be adjusted to reflect the acceptance by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that the level of estimated emigration for 1982-83 requires adjustment to reflect the estimated population figures in subsequent years.

Mr. Chope: The policy of the Secretary of State is to use the population of an area and the numbers of persons of particular ages in the area estimated by the Registrar General and certified by him for rate support grant purposes. However, the Secretary of State will consider representations made to him concerning revisions to population estimates before making his decisions for future supplementary reports for 1985-86 and later years.

Pikehall Farmhouse, Derbyshire

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it took him to come to a decision on the planning application in respect of the outbuilding near Pikehall farm, Pikehall, Hartington Nether Quarter, Derbyshire; and if he will give the reason for this length of time.

Mrs. Roe: A listed building consent application for demolition of the stable block of outbuildings at Pikehall farm was determined by the Secretary of State on 12 November 1983 in just under 12 months from the date when it was removed from the jurisdiction of the Peak Park planning board.

Suitably qualified and experienced inspectors are in short supply, and inquiries often take some time to arrange. A decision was further delayed in this case because the inspector adjourned the inquiry to allow parties to produce further information.

Estate Action Schemes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the £75 million set aside for Estate Action schemes in 1987-88 has been finally approved to date; what proportion of this total to date has been approved for continuing schemes; and how much has been finally approved for new schemes in 1987-88.

Mrs. Roe: Of the £75 million additional resources available to Estate Action in 1987-88, £74,635 million has been formally allocated to local authorities, 53 per cent. has been allocated to continuation schemes and 47 per cent. to new schemes. The remaining £360,000 is on the point of formal allocation to continuation schemes.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what sums have been put into Estate Action schemes by private developers since 1985-86; and how many schemes to date have been supplemented by resources from private developers;

(2) how much council-owned property had been sold to private developers as part of Estate Action schemes since his Department began targeting the housing investment programme via estate action in 1985-86.

Mrs. Roe: To date some 4,600 council dwellings have been, or are in the course of being, disposed of to the private sector as part of Estate Action packages to revitalise rundown estates. Forty two schemes have been accompanied by private investment. It is not possible to say precisely how much money each private investor has contributed.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors his Department has taken into consideration in dividing the total Estate Action allocation of £75 million between regional offices; and how much of the allocation has been allocated to each regional office.

Mrs. Roe: Estate Action resources are distributed regionally on the basis of the quality and number of individual schemes submitted by local authorities in each region. The amounts allocated for schemes in each region in 1987-88 so far are as follows:

Region	£ million
Northern	8·040
Yorkshire and Humberside	10·898
North-west	21·948
Merseyside Task Force	3·934
West midlands	10·669
East midlands	4·085
Eastern	0·362
South-east	0·058
South-west	0·497
London	14·144
	74·635

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of Estate Action's continuing schemes have been finally approved to date by each of his Department's regional offices.

Mrs. Roe: The number of Estate Action continuation schemes which have received additional resources this year to date is shown below:

Continuation schemes in 1987-88

Region	Number
Northern	16
Yorkshire and Humberside	13
North-west	21
Merseyside task force area	6
West midlands	5
East midlands	4
Eastern	1

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the criteria for approvals of Estate Action schemes which his Department used in (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87 and (c) 1987-88; and what the criteria for the approval of Estate Action schemes will be in 1988-89.

Mrs. Roe: The criteria used in assessing Estate Action proposals submitted by local authorities have been constant since the programme was launched in June 1985 and remain the same for the coming financial year. They are spelt out in detail in the annual reports published in 1986 and 1987, copies of which are in the Library. Each application is considered on its merits with priority given to those proposals which offer residents greater choice and control over their living conditions and environment and which take full advantage of any opportunities for combining public and private sector skills and resources; under estate action's homelessness initiative additional resources are made available to help local authorities bring vacant properties on estates back into use to benefit homeless people.

ACE Funding

Mr. Allen Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what way he gives assistance to agencies in the United Kingdom for the purposes of securing funds under the European Commission's Action by the Community in the Environment regulations; and if he will make a statement on his policy toward the European Community level of ACE funding.

Mrs. Roe: My Department is in regular contact with agencies interested in applying for funds under ACE regulation, offering advice and guidance. We supported adoption of the regulation in the Environment Council and its renewal in 1987, and are satisfied with the level of funding being offered.

English House Condition Survey

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage of dwellings in the English house condition survey where the temperature in the interview room was below 21 degrees Celsius; and what were the temperatures on the stairways and the percentage of retirement pensioner households involved in the survey.

Mrs. Roe: This information is not yet available.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the amount of expenditure incurred by the Nature Conservancy Council in England, Scotland and Wales, expressed as a figure per hectare of land designated as a site of special scientific interest, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The NCC does not maintain records of expenditure in the form requested and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received a response from the Nature Conservancy Council on the possibility of selling off reserves.

Mr. Moynihan: No. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) on 17 February, 1988, at columns 959-60. The NCC is conducting an internal review of its national nature reserve policy, which is due to be completed later this year.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each outstanding planning application submitted by the Property Services Agency, giving details of address, development applied for and size of site in respect of land declared surplus to requirements by other Government Departments, noting the Department for which the Property Services Agency is acting in each case.

Mr. Chope: The information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will supply details of (a) private sector and (b) Government funding for the Tyne and Wear development corporation for each year since its formation and the number of jobs created.

Mr. Chope: Tyne and Wear development corporation has received £1·83 million in Exchequer grant-in-aid all in 1987-88. The corporation was established on 15 May 1987. It is too early to make accurate estimates of the private sector investment stimulated or the number of jobs created.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the distributable revenue balances as set out by the London residuary body in its 1987-88 budget has been distributed.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 13 January 1988, at column 275.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff were employed by the London residuary body for the purpose of carrying out its functions as of 31 March 1986; how many are currently employed; and how many he estimates will be employed in the coming 12 months.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body did not inherit its functions from the former GLC until 1 April 1986. On that date the LRB employed 3,580 staff. It currently employs 2,114 staff. Future staffing levels are a matter for the LRB to determine having regard to its remaining functions and workload. On present forecasts, it estimates that staff numbers will have fallen to 900 by the end of 1988-89. All figures are full-time equivalents.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was received by the London residuary body from the sale of the motor vehicle registration number ALC 1, previously used by the chairman of the Greater London council.

Mr. Chope: The sum is £2,500.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the London residuary body's current estimate of capital assets awaiting disposal.

Mr. Chope: None.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what dates in each case 1986-87 revenue balances and capital receipts were paid to London boroughs; what were the amounts; and how each payment varied from the original estimates.

Mr. Chope: The amount of revenue balances and capital receipts distributed by the LRB to London boroughs in 1986-87 is published in LRB's annual report and accounts available in the Library. The estimates of amounts to be paid were contained in LRB's published budget, copies of which I am arranging to be placed in the Library. Timing of payments is the responsibility of the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date 1987-88 revenue balances and capital receipts will be paid in full to the London boroughs.

Mr. Chope: The payment of capital receipts by the London residuary body to the London boroughs is governed by the Local Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) Order 1987, SI 1987/118. This provides that the residuary body shall use its best endeavours to secure that payments are made on or before the last day of the financial year in question. Any part of a payment not so made shall be paid no later than 30 June in the next financial year.

The date for payment of revenue balances is a matter for the LRB.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 13 January, Official Report, columns 275-77, what percentage of former Greater London council assets which passed to the London residuary body are now estimated to have been disposed of.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body has disposed of Thamesmead and the industrial portfolia. Substantial progress has been made towards the disposal of the seaside and country homes and properties in Covent Garden. County hall and about 500 residential units are being marketed. Of the remaining 1,620 properties which the LRB inherited and are considered marketable, terms have been agreed in about 50 per cent. of cases. Properties required by successors for functional purposes will be transferred to them.

MOD Properties (Sales)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Ministry of Defence houses in (a) Scotland and (b) Renfrew, West and Inverclyde have been sold in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The figures are as follows:

	Number
[1]1979-81	Nil
1981-82	7
1982-83	13
1983-84	12
1984-85	12
1985-86	13
1986-87	15

[1] Inclusive.

Green Belt

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the area of designated green belt land in the St. Albans constituency (a) in 1979 and (b) at the present time.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 17 February 1988]: Prior to the approval of the Hertfordshire structure plan in September 1979 approximately 3,000 hectares of land in the St. Albans constituency were designated green belt. Following approval of the structure plan, approximately 8,300 hectares of land are now designated as green belt.

Northern Development Agency

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the amounts spent on industrial, investments and environmental improvements by the northern development agency in the Blyth Valley constituency, in each year since 1983.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The Northern Development Company (NDC) has been in existence only since July 1986. In the current financial year this Department has made available £908,000 to the NDC for its inward investment promotion activities, and a further £210,000 for a wider range of activities aimed at the regeneration of the region's economy. The NDC does not engage directly in industrial investment or environmental improvement activities. The NDC's total budget for this year is £1,844,000. However, information is not available on the geographical spread of NDC expenditure.

The NDC's predecessor was the North of England Development Council, which was concerned solely with inward investment and export promotion.

Building Workers (Accident Statistics)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about (a) the number of accidents and (b) the number of fatal accidents involving building workers employed on sites in London's docklands in the past six years.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Olympic-Standard Swimmers (Training)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the training facilities available for Olympic-standard swimmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Most training for Britain's Olympic swimmers takes place at club level, using local swimming facilities. Preparation also includes training and competition experience in 50-metre pools of which there are currently 8 indoor and 23 outdoor in England and Wales. Britain's Olympic swimming squad trains as a group at one of these pools at the Crystal Palace national sports centre. The Sports Council is currently reviewing its strategy on swimming pool provision in discussion with the Amateur Swimming Association, and will be looking at the provision of training facilities for Olympic-standard swimmers and of pools for international competition.

Treasure Trove

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the review body on treasure trove laws and those organisations whom he proposes to consult.

Mr. Moynihan: There is no review body as such. On 11 February I announced the issue by the Department and the Welsh Office of a consultation paper on arrangements for reporting archaeological finds. Responses to this will be evaluated by officials, who will take into account the conclusions of a recent paper by the Law Commission on the law of treasure trove and a review by an inter-departmental group of officials under Treasury chairmanship of the arrangements for payment of awards to finders of treasure trove. Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to a number of interested individuals and to the representative organisations as set out. We shall be happy to provide further copies to any other groups or individuals who wish to contribute to the review.

Housing Needs Index (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he received any representations from Nottingham city council regarding the effect of a reduction in the council house waiting list on the housing needs index, causing a £3·5 million reduction in anticipated income to housing associations in Nottinghamshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Waiting list figures are not included in the housing needs index and my right hon. Friend has had no representation from Nottingham city council on the subject. I understand, however, that doubt has arisen over the calculation of certain Nottingham indicators and that the matter is under discussion between the Department and the Housing Corporation.

Nuclear Installations (Decommissioning)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current status of research on decommissioning of nuclear installations under European Council decision 84/60 Euratom of 31 January 1984, specified in terms of section A, projects one to seven, section B and section C.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 February 1988]: I have placed a copy of the latest available progress report published by the European Commission "The Community's research and development programme on decommissioning of nuclear installations", report EUR 11112 EN, in the Library of the House. This covers the period up to the end of 1986. When the 1987 version is available I will place that in the Library also.

Olympic-standard Swimming Pools

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those Olympic-standard swimming pools in England and Wales which are under local authority control; and which of them are open-air facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no Olympic-standard swimming pools in England or Wales which are under local authority control or are open-air facilities.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services (London)

7. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss the effects on the economy of the level of rail services to the City of London.

29. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss the effects on the economy of the level of rail services to the City of London.

46. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss the effects on the economy of the level of rail services to the City of London.

52. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee, he will discuss the effects on Britain's economy of the level of rail services to the City of London.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Transport Subsidies

11. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had any discussions with EEC Transport Ministers concerning the harmonisation of public transport subsidies.

Mr. Channon: No.

21. Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards harmonising public transport subsidy levels across the EEC by 1992.

Mr. Channon: There is already a degree of harmonisation in the form of EEC directives on public service obligations and the granting of state aids for transport by rail, road and inland waterways. I see no need for further harmonisation in these areas.

28. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase the level of subsidy to public transport in major cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The objective of this Government has been to achieve a better balance between the interests of those who benefit from public transport subsidy and the ratepayers and taxpayers who must pay for it. As a result of our policies, annual revenue support for local bus and rail services in the English metropolitan areas has been reduced by about £85 million since 1985-86. This represents a considerable saving to both ratepayers and taxpayers, without any diminution in the overall level of service.

39. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the subsidy levels to public transport in each capital city of each member state of the EEC, expressed as a percentage of total revenue.

Mr. David Mitchell: None, except for London, in which connection I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 18 January at column 528.

Rillington Bypass

13. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on plans for a route for the Rillington bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Bids will be invited shortly from the consulting engineers for the contract to identify the preferred route for the scheme.

Driving Test

14. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking changes in the driving test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We regularly receive ideas from all quarters. The changes most often suggested are for the test to include motorway driving and night-time driving, a written test on the highway code and a different test of eyesight.

Rail Services (Quality)

15. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss the quality of rail services.

23. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss the quality of rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Members to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Haynes).

Road Tolls

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the use of road tolls.

Mr. Channon: A number of motoring and freight transport organisations have expressed opposition to the introduction of road tolls. Some construction and financial organisations have expressed interest in building privately financed roads which might involve charging. I have no plans to impose tolls on existing roads.

27. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any recent proposals from the private sector for the construction of new toll roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Costain has recently put forward in outline ideas for a road tunnel under the Thames and for a second tier on the M25. These plans do not as yet constitute firm proposals. As we said in the 1987 White Paper, the Government are keen to encourage initiatives by the private sector for adding to the level of transport infrastructure wherever this is the most cost-effective way of providing the facilities concerned. We shall be pleased to look at any firm proposals in that light.

Safety Standards

17. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to revise the enforcement of transport safety regulations in passenger transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I attach great importance to all aspects of passenger transport safety and its enforcement. At present I have no plans to make revisions to the system of enforcement.

24. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority is given to safety standards in the formation of his Department's passenger transport policies.

Mr. Channon: Safety is one of my top priorities.

38. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve safety standards in passenger transport operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Effective and appropriate safety standards must be a continuing preoccupation of any Secretary of State for Transport. My right hon. Friend regularly reviews and improves them where this is justified.

London Underground Stations

18. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has held any recent discussions with the chairman of London Regional Transport on the future staffing of London underground stations; and if he will make a statement.

26. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has held any recent discussions with the chairman of London Regional Transport on the future staffing of London underground stations; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has held any recent discussions with the chairman of London Regional Transport on the future staffing of London underground stations; and if he will make a statement.

48. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport, he held any discussions on the future staffing of London underground stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have not discussed underground staffing matters; they are for management, in accordance with its statutory duty to operate safely and efficiently. Within that framework, I would expect staff levels to reflect the manpower required to do the job.

Network SouthEast

19. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the volume of service on Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman on 11 February and discussed a wide range of matters of current interest.

Commuter Services

20. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to revise his policy towards commuter transport in the light of the report from the City Commuter Services group, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Our policy is that BR should provide its customers with an attractive and reliable service meeting the quality standards I have set, while reducing its call on the taxpayer. I see no reason to change that.

Rail Services (London to Holyhead)

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss railway services between London and Holyhead.

Mr. David Mitchell: Rail services on particular routes are a matter for BR management. Hence I have no plans to discuss the London-Holyhead service with the chairman in the near future.

Transport Supplementary Grant

25. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the capital allocations for transport and transport supplementary grant allocated to each London borough for the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The list for the 33 boroughs is in the table. The total capital allocations for London are 1986-87 — £104 million, 1987-88 — £108·8 million and 1988-89—£122·9 million.

London borough councils—Transport capital allocations 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 (£ million)

Runway Capacity (South-east England)

30. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on runway capacity in the south-east of England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd 9542) set out the pattern of airport development to meet the demand for air travel into the mid-1990s. We naturally keep the adequacy of capacity, including runway capacity, under review — as does the Civil Aviation Authority which has a statutory duty to make formal recommendations to my right hon. Friend on such matters.

Main Line Service (St. Pancras-Sheffield)

31. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how Government financial targets and guidelines have affected British Rail's investment in improving the midland main line service between St. Pancras and Sheffield.

Mr. David Mitchell: This service is part of BR's Inter-City network on which it is expected to earn a commercial rate of return. The board's confidence in the future of the line is demonstrated by its recent investment in a new pullman service and a £25 million resignalling programme.

Aircraft (Near Misses)

32. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many official reports of near misses involving aircraft in British air space there have been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest Civil Aviation Authority statistics for air miss incidents involving all types of military and civil aircraft in United Kingdom air space over the last five years for which complete figures are available are:

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
A. Definite risk of collision	20	13	21	14	21
B. Possible risk of collision	55	62	57	52	50
Total risk-bearing (A + B)	75	75	78	66	71
C. No risk of collision	96	92	93	77	104
Total air misses (A + B + C)	171	167	171	143	175

Garden of Remembrance (Theydon Bois)

33. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a grant to the Theydon Bois parish council to defray the expense of tree planting to shield the garden of remembrance at the local burial ground from noise from the M11.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are prepared to consider the possibility of a tree planting scheme under the terms of section 253 of the Highways Act 1980. The Department's regional office will get in touch with the parish council for a discussion.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

35. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to make an announcement about the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: As soon as all necessary consultations are complete.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current local authority contribution to (a) the provision of the diesel multiple unit service on the Settle to Carlisle railway, (b) the upkeep and maintenance of the line, (c) the advertising and publicity of the line and (d) express passenger services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that during 1987-88 local authorities have contributed about £70,000 in general revenue support for the line (not attributable to individual services) and nothing towards the upkeep and maintenance of the infrastructure of the line, although some parish councils do give some general assistance towards the upkeep and general tidiness of their local stations. I also understand that local authorities contributed about £9,000 towards publicity for the line in 1987. During the next two financial years, revenue support from local authorities is expected to rise to about £130,000 if the line is retained. I have asked each authority to consider carefully the level of support it should give to the line— towards both the costs of operations and the cost of repairing the Ribblehead viaduct — in view of the importance it attaches to retaining it.

London Regional Transport

36. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects London Regional Transport to publish its draft strategic plan for future operations; and over what period it will be open for consultation.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that LRT intends to issue a consultative document shortly; to allow some eight weeks for responses; and to publish a new statement of strategy before the end of June.

Air Traffic (London Area)

37. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, he will raise with him the possible overcrowding of the skies around London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend frequently meets the chairman of the authority to discuss matters of mutual interest, including air space issues affecting the London area, for which the authority is reponsible. My right hon. Friend will be visiting the London air traffic control centre in the near future to see the current provision of air traffic services and to discuss the plans of the national air traffic services for the future.

Car Telephones

40. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the road safety implications of the use of telephones in cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a number of representations. Most expressed concern at the safety implications of using in-car telephones in moving vehicles. The revised highway code, issued in March 1987, tells drivers not to use a hand-held telephone while their vehicle is moving, except in an emergency. Anyone who can afford a car telephone can afford, and should use, a hands-free microphone.

Bus Services (London)

41. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss London bus services.

51. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss bus services in Greater London.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I last met the chairman of London Regional Transport on 4 February to discuss a number of issues, including bus services.

43. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy towards privatising London bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said during the recent debate on the London Regional Transport (Levy) Order 1988 that we intend to see Londoners enjoying the benefits of deregulation as soon as practicable, and that accordingly we have asked London Regional Transport to bring forward early proposals for the restructuring of London Buses Ltd. into smaller units which will be able to operate commercially in a competitive environment.

King's Cross Station

42. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, on how many occasions the London fire brigade has been called to King's Cross underground station because of a fire or suspected fire since 18 November 1987; on which dates these calls were made; how many appliances attended on each occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from London Underground Limited that since 18 November 1987, the London fire brigade has been called to King's Cross underground station on five occasions. Three calls were false alarms — on 17 December, 10 January and 4 February. The other two calls were on 8 January and were in connection with tests carried out in connection with the formal investigation into the causes of the fire on 18 November. No record is kept by London Underground of the number of fire appliances attending calls.

Central Transport Consultative Committee

44. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Central Transport Consultative Committee to discuss its recent reports.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend met the chairman last December and discussed a range of railway matters.

Tyre Treads

45. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to implement the EEC recommendations on minimum tyre tread depth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The European Commission has proposed a directive on minimum tyre tread depth for cars and light vehicles used throughout the Community. The question of implementation will arise only if this directive is adopted by the Council of Ministers. It has not yet been considered by the Council. In our view the Commission's proposals would impose unnecessary costs on motorists in the United Kingdom amounting to £70 million per year, with no significant benefit to road safety. I have placed a note in the Library summarising the cost and safety issues.

London Buses Ltd.

47. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the policy guidelines issued to London Regional Transport concerning London Buses Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government's broad objectives for London Regional Transport remain those set out in a letter of 20 July 1984 to the chairman. In the case of London Buses Ltd., my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has more recently asked LRT to bring forward early proposals for its restructuring into smaller units in preparation for the eventual deregulation of bus services in London.

Rail Services

49. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Transport Users Consultative Committee to discuss rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet him.

Staff Dispersal

50. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many divisions within his Department have been relocated out of London since 1979; what plans he has for further relocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 80 per cent. of the Department's present staff of 14,000 is located outside London and, where practicable, work is already carried out in regional and local offices. In 1987, seven posts dealing with policy on driver licensing and vehicle taxation moved from London to Swansea and six posts in the vehicle inspectorate technical training school moved from Stanmore to Bristol. Some 20 posts from the vehicle inspectorate's workshops and stores at Borehamwood will move to Bristol later this year. The Department keeps the question of what further blocks of work it might be cost effective to relocate under continuous review.

Air space (Isle of Wight)

53. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many days in the last 12 months for which figures are readily available the Civil Aviation Authority has been notified that the danger area south of the Isle of Wight is safe for use by civilian aircraft and civil aircraft operators were notified and actually used the airspace.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The area to which my right hon. Friend refers consists of a number of separate danger areas within which activities dangerous to the flight of aircraft take place at different times. Unauthorised entry into danger areas is prohibited. Commercial flights normally fly in the controlled air space of the airways that go round the danger areas in question, but do not cross them. This enables such traffic to connect safely with the continental airways system.

If my right hon. Friend requires more detailed information he would do best to approach the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority which is responsible for air traffic control.

Liverpool Airport

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of Liverpool airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under section 15 of the Airports Act 1986, my right hon. Friend last September proposed modifications to the Merseyside passenger transport authority's original scheme for the future ownership of Liverpool airport. The main modification proposed was that the PTA should not become a shareholder in the new airport company. Since accepting this, the Merseyside local authorities have been given extra time to work up various schemes for running the airport, but this has not resulted in the PTA putting forward an alternative. My right hon. Friend is now about to proceed with a scheme based on his September proposals.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvement in safety, as measured by the number of fatalities and serious injuries to motor cyclists, there has been from the restriction of motor cycle learners to 125 cc machines and from the restriction of 16-year-olds to 50 cc machines limited to 30 mph.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 30 mph maximum speed restriction for 50 cc machines was introduced in 1977. The number of 16-year-olds killed or seriously injured (KSI) on mopeds has dropped from 1,691 in 1976 to 789 in 1986 — a reduction of 53 per cent. After taking account of the reduction in the number of registered mopeds in that period, the reduction in 16-year-old KSI casualties is 36 per cent.

The maximum engine size for learner motor cycles was reduced from 250 cc to 125 cc with effect from 1 February 1983. A study by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory — RR106 "The Effect on Motorcycling of the 1981 Transport Act" — suggests that the restriction on engine capacity for learner motor cycles has led to a reduction of one quarter in casualties even allowing for the declining number of motor cyclists. This is equivalent to a reduction of 7,010 in motor cyclist casualties during the first year the restriction was in force, 2,430 of whom would have been killed or seriously injured.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what grants are available to people living near to major airports towards the installation of double glazing; when this grant was last increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Except at Heathrow and Gatwick, noise insulation grants are a matter for the airport operator. We understand that several airports pay such grants.

The Government have designated Heathrow and Gatwick for noise insulation grants purposes and have made various noise insulation grant schemes. The most recent schemes for these airports which provided for grants to be paid by the British Airports Authority (as it was then) were introduced in 1980. The amounts payable were increased in 1981, and the schemes effectively ended in March 1985.

As promised in the 1985 airport policy White Paper (Cmnd. 9542) the schemes have been reviewed. The review suggested that there were small areas outside the scheme boundary at each airport which should be included retrospectively within the scheme. There should be no change to:

the description of dwellings to which the scheme applied, the qualifications for eligibility,
the specification for the work to be done,
the residential qualification date.

Any additional grants would be paid, as before, by BAA plc. The amount of grant payable would be adjusted to current prices.

We are discussing with BAA plc the suggested small adjustment to the scheme boundaries and we shall make an announcement when these discussions are completed. We have no plans to introduce new schemes at these airports. We are committed to introducing a new scheme at Stansted when the airport reaches 2 million passengers per annum.

Air Traffic Movements

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what has been the level of air traffic movements at Stansted airport during each of the last five years;

(2) what has been the level of air traffic movements at Gatwick airport during each of the last five years;

(3) what has been the level of air traffic movements at London airport, Heathrow, during each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total number of aircraft movements including general aviation, positioning flights and so on, for each of the last five years at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports is shown in the table:

Aircraft movements[1]

	Heathrow 000's	Gatwick 000's	Stansted 000's
1982-83	274·9	151·2	33·4
1983-84	286·9	152·8	34·9
1984-85	298·8	159·8	40·4
1985-86	312·2	170·8	41·2
1986-87	318·8	173·8	46·8

[1] One movement is a single taking off or landing.

Shrewsbury Bypass

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a start date and completion estimate for the A5 Shrewsbury bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to completion of the outstanding statutory procedures which include the compulsory purchase order, construction of the A5 Telford-Shrewsbury and A49 Shrewsbury bypasses is expected to start in the autumn of 1989 and take about two years.

Lorries (Spray)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to reduce rear and frontal spray from lorries on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations were introduced in November 1984 requiring from various dates heavy lorries and trailers to be fitted with spray-reducing devices complying with British Standards BS AU 200. The situation is improving as the number of heavy vehicles fitted increases. Lorry drivers should slow down in heavy rain to reduce spray and for reasons of safety.

Chandler's Ford Bypass

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a start upon upgrading the Chandler's Ford bypass to motorway standards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the outcome of outstanding legal proceedings in respect of one of the orders, we hope to let a contract later this year.

Rail Crash (Colwich)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire on 22 January, Official Report, column 905, if he can now give a final date for the publication of his inspector's report on the rail crash which occurred at Colwich, Staffordshire, in September 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is anticipated that the consultations, to which I referred in my answer to the hon. Member on 22 January, will be completed by the end of the month. The report will then be printed with a view to publication at the end of March.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the provision of rail links between the regions and the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of representations about this issue. It is British Rail's responsibility to plan the provision of rail links to the tunnel. Section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act requires it to publish a plan setting out its proposals by the end of 1989.

Unmanned Level Crossings

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State how many accidents involving motor vehicles have taken place at unmanned level crossings in each year since 1980.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of road/rail collisions at unmanned public road level crossings protected by road traffic light signals for each year from 1980 to 1986 is as follows:

	Number
1980	4
1981	12
1982	13
1983	9
1984	12
1985	24
1986	19
[1]1987	20

Greece (British Visitors)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had discussions with his Greek counterpart regarding that country's attitude to British visitors on inclusive tours or seat-only arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paul Channon: I have had no such discussions. But I understand that the tour operators' representatives are actively involved in discussions with the Greek authorities.

Motorway Contraflows

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the regulations on traffic contraflows on motorways, particularly as they apply to heavy vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. We are reviewing this as part of our current review of motorway safety. We hope to announce our conclusions in the spring.

Search and Rescue Helicopters (Solent)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about search and rescue helicopter coverage in the Solent area.

Mr. Channon: At present, daytime search and rescue helicopter coverage in the Solent and central English Channel area is provided by Royal Navy helicopters based at Lee-on-Solent. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has been reviewing the deployment of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters around the coast: full details of the new deployments will be announced shortly, but they will involve the withdrawal of the Royal Navy Wessex flight from Lee-on-Solent and its replacement by a Royal Navy Sea King flight at Portland. In addition, the deployment of military aircraft at other bases will be adjusted to provide significantly better overall coverage in the English Channel—especially at night and in bad weather. The new military deployments will meet virtually all my normal requirements for civilian SAR coverage, but in view of the exceptional volume of shipping and air activity in the area I have decided to supplement the military service by inviting tenders for the provision of a civil search and rescue helicopter, probably based at Lee-on-Solent. The RAF will temporarily station one of its helicopters at Lee in the intervening period.

Breeches Buoy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reviewed the use of breeches buoy rescue equipment by Her Majesty's coastguard; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: With the progressive improvement of lifeboat and helicopter search and rescue services, the use of the breeches buoy as a method of rescuing stranded mariners has progressively declined, and, as I recently informed my hon. Friend such equipment has been used for rescue purposes only twice in the past five years. I have now concluded that the provision of this equipment for use by HM Coastguard is no longer justified, and it will shortly be withdrawn.

I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the many past and present regular and auxiliary coastguards who have perfected the use of the breeches buoy apparatus, and to assure them that its removal in no way diminishes the importance of the service which they provide.

Breathalysers

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether, in the light of current experience in Australia, the United States of America, Canada, Germany and France, he will introduce legislation to facilitate the installation of coin-in-the-slot breath-testing devices in hotels, clubs, public houses and any licensed premises in which alcohol is consumed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether, in the light of current experience in Australia, the United States of America, Canada, Germany and France, he will introduce legislation to facilitate the installation of breathalyser ignition locks in motor vehicles generally and Government-owned vehicles in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We view with interest the development of devices to deter drinking and driving and seek to assess experience of their operation. Self-testing devices can encourage drivers to drink up to the legal limit and underestimate the effects of the alcohol consumed. Ignition locks and other technological developments may have a role to play in the longer term. The best course of any driver is not to drink alcohol at all before driving.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Firms Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost, including an estimate of all overhead costs, of answering each inquiry to the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: It is not possible to allocate costs solely to inquiries, since management of both the inquiry service and counselling service is closely interlinked. The small firms service in England in 1986-87 cost £4·7 million, excluding accommodation, dealt with 283,537 inquiries and provided 38,210 counselling sessions.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time staff equivalents are employed in responding to inquiries to the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: Inquiries are handled in the main by inquiry officers of administrative officer grade. There are 58 such officers currently in post in the small firms service in England. Their duties however involve other responsibilities such as the management of the counselling service.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the anticipated costs of the small firms service in the financial year 1988-89, to the nearest £100,000; and what was the comparable expenditure on the small firms service in each of the last four financial years.

Mr. Cope: The provision for the small firms service in England in 1988-89, is £6·3 million. For 1987-88 the expected outturn expenditure is £5·9 million. In 1986-87 the small firms service cost £4·7 million. These figures exclude accommodation costs. The small firms service was managed by the Department of Trade and Industry until September 1985 and figures for 1985-86 and 1984-85 are not available on a comparable basis.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures of output he uses to assess the efficiency of the small firms service in responding to inquiries.

Mr. Cope: The small firms service uses several indicators to assess the efficiency of the inquiry service. Figures for the total number of inquiries are collected, and compared with prior years and against set targets. In 1986-87 inquiries totalled over 283,000 a 11·1 per cent. rise on the previous year with no significant increase in staff.

An indicator of the usefulness of the information given is the percentage of inquiries from previous clients, or as a result of recommendations. In 1986-87 inquiries from these sources accounted for some 30 per cent. of the total number.

These figures relate to England only. The small firms service in Scotland is administered by the Scottish Development Agency while the service in Wales it is administered by the Welsh Development Agency.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Lee: There are 63,630 permanent civil servants employed in the Department of Employment group. Except for 5,499 working part-time (of which 176 are working on job-sharing schemes) all are full time and work a net 36 hours per week in the London pay area and a net 37 hours outside London. Almost all staff work on a flexitime basis and in those offices where staff do not work flexitime it is largely due either to personal preference or because the offices are small—for example, one or two staff—or part-time offices where it would be difficult to operate flexitime arrangements. The precise arrangement of hours for each part-time worker varies according to circumstances and it would be prohibitively expensive to find out how many work a four-day week or a nine-day fortnight. Of the total staff, 62,846 are able to retire with full pension rights at age 60 years.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will show the increase in the retail prices index between 1979 and 1985 in annual averages, with rates and indirect taxes excluded.

Mr. Lee: The estimation of movements in the retail prices index excluding indirect taxes raises a number of conceptual and practical difficulties and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Domestic rates and water charges are readily excluded from the index and the results are as follows:

RPI excluding domestic[1] rates and water charges 12-month increases percentages

January	Per cent.
1981	12·7
1982	11·5
1983	4·7
1984	5·0
1985	4·9
1986	5·3
1987	3·5
1988	3·1

Ports

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the operation of employment legislation as it affects British ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: As regards registered dockworkers covered by the 1967 dock workers employment scheme, the Government's position remains as stated in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) Official Report, Tuesday 17 November 1987, at column 915. There are no plans to review the operation of other employment legislation as it specifically affects British ports.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage rate of decline in the number of registered dock labour scheme employees since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The total of registered dockworkers declined from 25,770 at the end of 1979 to 9,945 at the end of 1987, a reduction of 61 per cent. This has been achieved through voluntary severances with Government financial assistance.

Coalfield Communities Campaign

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Coalfield Communities Campaign concerning the promotion of employment in coalfield areas.

Mr. Lee: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a recent letter from the Coalfield Communities Campaign, but it did not refer to the promotion of employment in coalfield areas.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Corridor

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he now expects to receive the Jarvis plc/Manpower Services Commission report on the Settle to Carlisle railway corridor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I expect to receive the report at the beginning of March, and intend that it will be published very shortly afterwards.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors have (a) resigned and (b) retired in 1987; how many new recruits have been employed in the same year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: During 1987, a total of 30 of the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectors resigned, 12 retired and 32 were recruited. A further 35 candidates were successful at the autumn 1987 recruitment competition for factory and agricultural inspectors.

Chelsea Girl Ltd.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the closure of Chelsea Girl Ltd., Ealing, upon job opportunities in Greenford and Northolt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have received no advance notification of such a closure and thus have made no assessment of the impact upon local job opportunities. A range of employment, enterprise and training measures operated by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission is available to help anyone who becomes unemployed due to any closure.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the total number of claimants in Scotland who have been refused unemployment benefit pursuant to the recommendations of the claimants investigation team (Scotland); and if he will break this figure down according to the reasons for withdrawal of benefit for each year from 1979 to 1987, and for each unemployment benefit office;

(2) what is the total number of claimants in Scotland who have been refused unemployment benefit pursuant to the recommendations of local claimant investigation teams; and if he will break this figure down according to the reasons for withdrawal of benefit for each year from 1979 to 1987 and for each unemployment benefit office.

Mr. Lee: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the Department of Employment's fraud investigators. While these investigators may in the nature of their work raise questions as to a claimant's entitlement to benefit, they have no authority to disallow a person's claim. That can be done only by independent adjudication authorities. It is, of course, the case that, following an investigation of possible benefit fraud, some claimants decide to modify or withdraw their claims.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the total number of unemployment benefit claimants referred to local claimant investigation teams for each of the unemployment benefit offices in Scotland for each year from 1979 to 1987;

(2) what is the total number of unemployment benefit claimants referred to the claimant investigation teams (Scotland) for each of the unemployment benefit offices in Scotland for each year from 1979 to 1987;

(3) what is the total of unemployment benefit claimants referred to the claimant investigation team (Scotland) in Scotland; and if he will break this figure down according to the reason's for referral, for each year from 1979 and for each unemployment benefit office;

(4) what is the total number of unemployment benefit claimants referred to local claimants investigation teams in Scotland; and if he will break this figure down according to the reasons for referral, for each year from 1979 and for each unemployment benefit office;

(5) what is the total number of unemployment benefit claimants referred to local claimant investigation teams and the claimant investigation team (Scotland) in Scotland; and if he will break this figure down for each unemployment benefit office for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lee: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the Department of Employment's fraud investigators. Information is not available on the number of referrals to such investigators in the form requested. For Scotland as a whole, the total number of cases referred for investigation since 1984-85 is as follows:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	[1]1987-88
To centrally based fraud investigators	n.a.	405	448	365
To locally based fraud investigators	6,880	11,799	14,561	10,433

n.a. Not available

Note:

It is not possible to break these figures down by reasons for referral. In addition to the cases shown fraud investigators will have examined a number of other claims on their own initiative.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will place in the Library copies of any guidelines or rules of procedures issued to local claimant investigation teams relating to the interviewing of unemployed benefit claimants;

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of any guidelines or rules of procedures issued to the claimant investigation team of Scotland relating to the interviewing of unemployed benefit claimants.

Mr. Lee: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to guidelines or rules of procedure issued to the Department of Employment's fraud investigators. I will place copies of the code of conduct issued to all such investigators in the Library. It would not be appropriate to make public the more detailed procedural guidance issued to staff.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current proportion of staff within the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate engaged upon work related to (a) the long-term safety reviews of Magnox reactors, (b) generic work in relation to advanced gas-cooled reactors, (c) the safety of spent fuel reprocessing, (d) the pressurised water reactor and in particular Sizewell B and the application for Hinkley C, (e) general nuclear safety inspection of installations, (f) radioactive waste management (excluding reprocessing) and (g) the fast breeder reactor.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 13 January 1988, Official Report, at column 262. Currently, no staff are engaged on work directly related to the fast breeder reactor.

Tourism

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were engaged in tourism in each of the travel-to-work areas covered by South Lakeland and Eden district councils at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lee: The latest estimates, which relate to September 1984, are shown in the table. Those travel-to-work areas shown in brackets only cover small proportions of the local authority district under which they are listed.

Employees in employment in tourism-related industries September 1984

Travel-to-work areas	Number
South Lakeland local authority district
Kendal	1,800
Windermere	2,100
(Settle)	(400)
Eden local authority district
Penrith	1,400
(Keswick)	(900)
(Hexham)	(1,200)

Note: The figures do not include the self-employed.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of overnight visits to Cumbria by overseas visitors and what was their expenditure, over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the number of visits and expenditure by overseas visitors in Cumbria in the years 1982 to 1986 are as follows:

	Number of visits (000s)	Expenditure (£ millions)
1982	177	16·0
1983	205	17·2
1984	213	21·9
1985	220	26·9
1986	216	25·1

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current estimates and projections of the population of working age (a) men aged 16 to 64 years and (b) women aged 16 to 59 years, by standard region including Greater London for 1979, 1983, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lee: The figures requested are in the following table.

Travelling People

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the permanent and temporary legal sites for travelling people in Northern Ireland, giving the services provided, the number of families accommodated on each and the sources of funding in each instance.

Mr. Needham: In respect of permanent and temporary legal sites for travellers, district councils receive grants of 100 per cent. towards the reasonable capital costs from the Department of the Environment.

There are four permanent legal sites and two temporary legal sites as follows:

Permanent sites	Families	Services
1. Newry: Albert Basin	20	Contract is approaching completion to provide full facilities to Design Guide standards.
2. Coalisland	16	Full site Design Guide standards together with an adjacent serviced transit site with communal facilities.
3. Omagh: Ballinamullan	4	Full facilities to Design Guide standards.
4. Omagh: Tattykeel	9	Prefabricated toilets, running water and electricity supply to individual surfaced pitches.
Temporary sites
1. Londonderry: Letterkenny Road	6	Communal toilet and ablution block, hard-standing, water supply. Plans are in hand for a permanent site for 10 families and this is expected to be completed in 1988.
2. Londonderry: Labre Park		Limited communal facilities but site no longer occupied.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he was given to the work being undertaken by the Northern Ireland Council for Travelling People; and what plans he has on their future level of funding.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland Council for Travelling People is a voluntary body which receives financial aid from the Department of Health and Social Services. It is currently negotiating with that Department on future levels of grant.

The council was represented on the 1984 Department of Environment working party of travelling people. The working party produced recommendations which are the basis of current Department of the Environment policies for travelling people. The council has three representatives on the advisory committee on travellers which advises me on the implementation of traveller policy and takes an active role in promoting that policy.

Rubbish Dump, Magheramorne

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will rescind his previous decision granting planning permission to Blue Circle and require Blue Circle to readvertise its proposals for Magheramorne quarry so as to make clear its intention to infill the quarry with rubbish.

Mr. Needham: Planning permission has not been granted to Blue Circle Industries plc for landfill and reclamation of its former limestone quarry at Magheramorne, Larne.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish his reasons for not agreeing to hold a public inquiry regarding the proposal by Blue Circle to develop a rubbish dump at Magheramorne limestone quarry in East Antrim.

Mr. Needham: In view of the representations received from Larne borough council, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is currently reconsidering whether or not a public inquiry into this proposal should be held.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to ensure that poisonous leachate will not travel through cracks in rock into Larne lough or underground fresh water systems if dumping at Magheramorne proceeds.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is currently considering an application for consent under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 in connection with a proposal to develop a waste disposal facility at Magheramorne. The determination of such applications is designed to prevent water pollution and consents invariably contain rigorous conditions.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the consumption of alcohol in gardens of remembrance, public parks and on the streets of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans at present to make it an offence for an adult to consume intoxicating liquor in public areas in Northern Ireland. It is already an offence for those under 18 years of age to consume alcohol anywhere other than within private residential premises and for any person to be drunk in any public place or road.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the grants made by Departments under his control to voluntary organisations, in each of the last two years, with the amount in each case and the names and addresses of the recipient organisations.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as set out. I will write to the hon. Member with the addresses.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what notice was given to Her Majesty's Government of the visit of a Minister from the Government of the Irish Republic to a school and British Army post outside Newry on 8 February; and if he will make a protest to the Government of the Irish Republic about this incident.

Mr. Tom King: We were told the previous day that he would be visiting the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon).

Gas Connections

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the rate of charge to new Housing Executive tenants by the Department of Health and Social Security for gas connections in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: No such charge is levied by the Department nor is assistance available under the supplementary benefit scheme towards any gas connection charges which might be imposed by anybody.

Training Centres

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many places there have been in adult training centres for mentally handicapped people in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Viggers: No places are made available specifically for mentally handicapped people in training centres. However, disabled persons, including the mentally handicapped, who are capable of undertaking training can participate in the range of courses available to everybody in these centres.

Farm Incomes

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to reverse rapidly falling farm incomes and fight unfair European competition, especially in the pig industry.

Mr. Viggers: Apart from the weather-affected years of 1985 and 1986, farming income in Northern Ireland has been relatively high during the 1980s. Preliminary information indicates that, after allowing for inflation, the average income per holding in 1987 was at its second highest level since 1978. This has been helped by strengthening of sterling and changes in the green pound secured by the Government over the past year so that monetary compensatory amounts are some 14 to 17 points lower than a year ago. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has made clear his recognition of the difficulties facing the United Kingdom pig industry. He has indicated his support for the European Commission's objective of removal of monetary compensatory amounts by 1992 but that this should be accomplished without further escalation of the cost of the common agricultural policy.

Students

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the number of students aged 16 years or over in respect of whom child benefit was paid in each of the past five years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 February 1988]: The information is available only as at 31 December in each year:

	Number
31 December 1982	40,002
31 December 1983	40,390
31 December 1984	40,022
31 December 1985	39,714
31 December 1986	40,250

Cloghogue Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the status of the visit to Cloghogue primary school near Newry on Monday 8 February by Mr. Wilson, the Minister for Tourism and Transport in the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 12 February 1988]: We were informed in advance of the visit of Mr. Wilson and that he would be seeing the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon). On the understanding that it would be a private visit, I made clear that he would of course be welcome.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the criticism of the Army security presence at Cloghogue primary school which was publicly expressed by Mr. Wilson, a Minister from the Republic of Ireland, on Monday 8 February.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 12 February 1988]: Mr. Wilson was on a private visit to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon). The hon. Gentleman had already raised with me his concern about the location of the permanent vehicle check point, which was the one recommended by Newry and Mourne council.

Social Fund

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement explaining the method used to determine the allocation of social fund budgets to each social security office in Northern Ireland, giving examples of how the formula was applied to given offices.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 February 1988]: An explanation of the basis of the allocations, together with an example for one office falling within the hon. Gentlemen's constituency, has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the factors used in determining the contingency reserve in the social fund budget and explaining the conditions of its use.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The contingency reserve was set at approximately 1 per cent. of the gross budget, as for the rest of the United Kingdom. It will be used where a social security office budget needs to be increased to cope with exceptional demand resulting, for example, from a major local emergency.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the social fund budget allocation consequences for future years (a) if a social security office's allocation runs out and (b) if it is not used up.

Mr. Needham: [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The arrangements for controlling social fund expenditure are designed to ensure that social security offices will not overspend during the year. The aim will be for payments to approach the budget for the year as closely as possible without exceeding it. If an allocation is not fully spent, the surplus will be carried over to the social fund for the following year.

Mr. Hume : To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what means will be used to monitor social fund expenditure by social security offices; and what means will be used to influence the pattern of that expenditure if monitoring suggests that there are discrepancies.

Mr. Needham: [holding answer 15 February 1988]: Social security offices will monitor their expenditure against a monthly profile for loans and grants which will take into account any particular foreseeable local factors. In the light of actual expenditure, it may be necessary from time to time for offices to adjust their plans by spreading any deficit or excess over the remaining months of the year.

Housing Associations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's tendering policy for contracts for work under the various voluntary housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 February 1988]: For schemes financed through housing association grant (HAG) the Department normally requires registered housing associations to use a single stage selective tendering procedure as laid down in the code of procedure issued by the National Joint Consultative Committee for Building (NJCC). However, where circumstances justify an alternative approach, other forms of building procurement such as a negotiated contract or design and build package deals may be considered for approval. These latter arrangements are proving useful in enabling associations to secure projects particularly suited to the specialist needs for which they provide.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his departmental policy towards planning applications from voluntary housing associations for developments which subsequently are passed on to private developers; how many applications of this type have been approved in the last three years and how many refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 February 1988]: Planning applications are considered on their merits and the Department of the Environment (NI) has regard only to the nature of the developments proposed and not to the identity of the applicants. Accordingly, information in the form requested is not available.

Provisional IRA (Arrests)

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Provisional Irish Republican Army suspects have been arrested and brought into police holding centres in Armagh and Castlereagh within the past two years and subsequently released without charges.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The total number of persons detained in Northern Ireland under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 during the period 1 January 1986 to 31 December 1987 was 2,768. Of those, 701 were subsequently charged with criminal offences and the remainder were released without charge. The figure for the numbers of those released without charge who are believed to have been members of the Provisional IRA is not readily available.

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate by district the fitness levels of those houses without electricity supply.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 February 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, the 1984 Northern Ireland house condition survey indicates that 6,905 of the 51,330 unfit houses in the Province did not have an electricity supply.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance is available to households seeking an electricity supply; and if he will indicate the total amounts of such assistance, by district, in the past five years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 February 1988]: Assistance is available from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive through the house renovation grants scheme which it operates under the Housing (NI) Order 1983. The normal rate of grant is 75 per cent. of the approved expenditure, though a rate of 90 per cent. is available if the applicant is in financial hardship.

I understand from the chairman of the Housing Executive that the executive limits the approved expenditure to £1,020 (10 per cent. of the current maximum eligible expense for renovation grants).

Details of the assistance directly related to the provision of an electricity supply under the renovation grants scheme over the past five years are not recorded separately and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dungivien Bypass

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there is now a start date for the Dungivien bypass; what is the present estimated cost; and what was the original estimated cost.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 February 1988]: No start date has been given. The present estimated cost is £2,135.00. The original estimated cost was £1,900,000.

Fluoridation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which areas of Northern Ireland have artificially fluoridated water and which areas have naturally fluoridated water supplies; and if he has any plans to increase the number of areas which will receive fluoridated water over the next three years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 February 1988]: Two areas of Northern Ireland have artificially fluoridated water supplies. These are Holywood, County Down and Tandragee, County Armagh. Fluoride occurs naturally in varying amounts in all water supplies in Northern Ireland. Decisions on the introduction of fluoridation schemes will be based on proposals from health and social services boards which must first consult district councils and the communities affected by any proposed schemes.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel (Marksmanship)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the standard of marksmanship in the forces.

Mr. Freeman: The already high standard of marksmanship in the forces is being improved significantly through the introduction of the new SA80 rifle. With SA80 a much higher proportion of soldiers than with the older weapon now achieve Army marksman standard. There is, however, no complacency where this fundamental skill is concerned and the forces continue to strive to raise standards still further through realistic training and rigorous annual tests.

Nuclear Test Veterans Association

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Nuclear Test Veterans Association concerning claims for damages.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has received numerous letters from members of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association seeking compensation for harm alleged from participation in the nuclear test programme. In addition, my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement met a deputation of hon. and right hon. Members and two officers of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on Tuesday 16 February.

Chieftain and Challenger Tanks

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to update the targeting equipment of the Army's fleet of Chieftain and Challenger tanks.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of enhancements to their main armament and associated fire control and other systems are currently in hand or under consideration for both Chieftain and Challenger. An advanced thermal imaging and observation sight is already being fitted to all Challengers and is now in production for Chieftain. Other improvements under development include a new high pressure gun and ammunition, new gun elevation gearbox and solid state control equipment, and improved computer sighting, and target acquisition systems.

Executive Responsibility Budgets

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many extra staff are being taken on to operate executive responsibility budgets in armed services (a) training establishments and (b) headquarters; and at what cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is not recorded centrally. However, it is estimated that the numbers and costs of the extra staff required to process and interpret the management information associated with executive responsibility budgets in the field of service training are as follows:

	Numbers	Cost[1]
Establishments	100	1·5
Headquarters	22	0·4

[1] £ million per year at 1987-88 prices.

The requirement has been met through the redeployment of staff within existing manpower ceilings and cash limits.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to reduce the growth in paperwork resulting from executive responsibility budgets in the armed services.

Mr. Sainsbury: Executive responsibility budgets are a key element in the MOD's response to the Government's financial management initiative and have a major role to play in the promotion of greater efficiency in the management of resources. This necessarily calls for more and better management information.

Home Service Units

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether home service units are notified of regular soldiers completing their engagements and resident in their recruiting areas.

Mr. Freeman: Recruitment into the home service force, which forms part of the Territorial Army, is the responsibility of the territiorial auxiliary and volunteer reserve associations. Associations are informed monthly by the Ministry of Defence of men who have recently left the Regular Army and are residing in their recruitment area. In addition, prior to discharge such soldiers are themselves notified of the opportunities for serving in the Territorial Army, including the home service force.

Departmental Research Establishments

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to allow research establishments of his Department to retain income derived from external sources, to defray their costs.

Mr. Sainsbury: Income generated by research establishments from the use of their facilities by external customers is already credited to their executive responsibility budgets as a receipt. Achieving greater scope for the establishments to deploy their resources on a revenue-earning basis will be one aspect to be looked at in the feasibility study of their development as an agency under the initiative announced by the Prime Minister on 18 February 1988.

RN Armaments Depots

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete his review of the Royal Naval armaments depots at Milford Haven and Trecwn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The report on the future of RNADs Milford Haven and Trecwn is still being studied by management. When their consideration is complete, a consultative document will be published. No date has been fixed for publication.

Flying Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours in 1987 for (a) British military aircraft as a whole, (b) Royal Air Force fixed-wing aircraft and (c) fast jet aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, major accident rates per 10,000 flying hours were recorded as follows:

	Number
All aircraft of the three Services	0·32
Royal Air Force fixed wing aircraft	0·29
Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft	0·84

These figures are in line with the general downward trend in recent years in the rate of major accidents to military aircraft.

Royal Aircraft Establishment Trials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature and purpose of the Royal Aircraft Establishment trials involving intense electromagnetic radiation in the vicinity of Hafren forest, Llanidloes, Powys, from July to October 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The activities to which I believe the hon. Gentleman is referring were sponsored and conducted by British Aerospace. I understand, however, that they posed no danger to the general public.

Bullying

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to implement the steps he announced to deal with Army bullying; and which of these will be given priority.

Mr. Freeman: A ban on harmful initiation ceremonies has already been issued throughout the Army, and measures to emphasise the man-management responsibilities of officers and NCOs are also being implemented. The other proposals announced — which concentrate largely on the training organisation, and on supervision of soldiers — are currently being developed within the Department for detailed approval by Ministers. This is being taken forward as a matter of urgency, although it will inevitably be some months before the process is complete. I will keep the right hon. Gentleman informed.

Stingray Torpedo

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of those companies which were given subcontract work by Marconi for the underwater systems Stingray torpedo project.

Mr. Sainsbury: The choice of sub-contractors is a matter for the prime contractor and it is for the prime contractor to provide these details.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation Victims)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 28 January, Official Report, columns 309-10, what estimate is available to him of the number of deaths during the next 10 years amongst the nuclear test participants examined during the National Radiological Protection Board's inquiry; what steps have been taken and will be taken to monitor the incidence of (a) diseases other than cancer, (b) still births, (c) infertility and (d) genetic handicaps in that group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The National Radiological Protection Board report referred to in my answer of 28 January, in column 309, is the only source of information available to me on the expected mortality of participants. Taking account of the ages of the participants, the NRPB has estimated that in the 10 years from 1984

"about 30 deaths could be expected from leukaemia and multiple myeloma and at least a further 20 cases in the participants and a similar number in the controls, if the men experienced the normal national mortality and cancer registration rates in England and Wales."

It is also estimated that approximately a 1,000 further deaths in each group will occur

"from the two diseases most closely related to smoking (lung cancer and chronic obstructive lung disease)".

In line with the recommendations of the report, it is intended that the information for the 10-year follow-up study will be derived from the same sources as were used for the original study, that is, cancer registrations and mortality statistics, including dates and causes of death, contained in the National Health Service central registers.

Departmental Houses

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discounts were available to sitting tenants purchasing his Department's houses in Bishopton, Renfrewshire.

Mr. Sainsbury: The discount available to sitting tenants purchasing surplus MOD houses at Bishopton is 33 per cent. if the period of occupation is less than four years. If the period of occupation is four years or over, the discount is 34 per cent. plus 1 per cent. for each complete year by which that period exceeds four years, but not together exceeding 60 per cent., that is, after 30 complete years' qualifying time.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's houses there are in (a) Renfrew district and (b) Inverclyde district.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD owns 23 houses in Renfrew district and two in Inverclyde district.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department's tenants, when allowed to buy their homes, are subject to the same discount policy as council tenants.

Mr. Sainsbury: When MOD civilian houses are declared surplus, sitting tenants are normally offered the chance to buy at the same discounts as offered by local authorities to council tenants, that is, up to a maximum of 60 per cent. The maximum discount allowed on surplus married quarters is 30 per cent. in line with the discounted sales scheme operated for service personnel. This is a scheme between employer and employee and not directly comparable with that operated by local authorities.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discounts are available to tenants of his Department's houses when they want to purchase (a) private designation and (b) local authority designation homes.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

4-tonne Trucks

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for 4-tonne trucks for the Army.

Mr. Sainsbury: A competition is currently in hand to select the services' new 4-tonne vehicle for the 1990s with a view to first production orders being placed in mid 1989. The question of any further orders of the services' existing 4-tonne vehicles is under active consideration.

Army Establishments (Services)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent deficiencies in privatised gardening, cleaning and catering work at Army establishments are made good by service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are currently around 200 catering, cleaning and gardening contracts running at Army establishments and a further 16 let but yet to start. Contractors have taken on work previously performed by around 140 military and 4,900 civilian staff. Contracts are monitored continuously and the great majority run satisfactorily. There have been a few instances where Army personnel have been called upon to make up for recruitment difficulties being experienced by contractors but such occurrences have been very infrequent and are generally confined to the early stages of contracts.

Breathalysers

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the light of the experience with their installation and use by the Australian armed forces, he will arrange for the installation of wall-mounted breathalysers in all service premises in which alcohol is sold for consumption by service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No consideration is being given to the installation of breathalysers in service premises.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his latest estimate of the cost of refitting the royal yacht Britannia.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 3 November 1987, at column 651. Subject to final negotiation, the cost of refitting HMY Britannia is not expected to exceed £19 million.

SCOTLAND

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women had amniocentesis tests in each of the last five years; what was the average time between the test and the results being made available, stating the information for each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of women who had cervical smear tests in each year between 1981 and 1987 and the average time between the time of testing and the time of result and made available in each year, showing the information for each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of women who had cervical smear tests are set out in the table. Data for 1987 are not yet available. The figures relate to the health board in which the examining laboratories are located, which is not necessarily the health board in which the cervical smears were taken. Information on the time taken to notify results of tests is not centrally available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to ensure that where a cervical smear test is found to be positive the woman concerned is informed immediately.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following my announcement on 10 December 1987 that a comprehensive cervical cancer screening service was to be made available to all women in Scotland aged between 20 and 60, detailed guidance was issued to health boards on the provision of such a service including the need to insitute "fail-safe" arrangements to ensure that a woman with a positive result is followed up.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of cases where there was either a failure to inform on an undue delay in informing the woman concerned of a positive cervical smear test in the Lothian health board area between 1984 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Libraries (Incentive Scheme)

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the public library development incentive scheme as it applies to Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no plans to introduce a scheme of incentive funding for libraries in Scotland similar to that announced recently for England. I shall, however, be following with interest the progress of the scheme in England.

Rating Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to provide a definition of permanency of residence in relation to the poll tax in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A person's sole or main residence will generally be a matter of fact in relation to the circumstances of each case. The only exception relates to persons undertaking a full-time course of education who are to be regarded, under section 8(4) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as being solely or mainly resident in the area of the local authority in which they are resident during term time for the purpose of undertaking the course. There is no question of my right hon. and learned Friend providing a definition of sole or main residence for community charge purposes.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the cost to local authorities of new computers for implementing the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held centrally. Additional capital allocations of £15 million will, however, be made available to local authorities in respect of 1988-89 to meet expenditure incurred in implementing the community charge. This is on top of the additional £6 million capital expenditure consent already allocated in 1987-88.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of additional staff required by Scottish local authorities to implement the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for individual local authorities to consider the manpower implications of the plans for their own areas.

Domestic Assaults

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to which police forces in Scotland produce separate figures on the number of reported domestic assaults each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no information on the extent to which statistics such as these, which are not collected centrally, are compiled by individual police forces.

Orthopaedic Consultants (Ayrshire and Arran)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many elective operations major and minor, were carried out in each year since 1980 by each orthopaedic consultant employed by the Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Operating Theatres (Ayrshire and Arran)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operating theatres there are in the Ayrshire and Arran health board area; what was the number of operations carried out in each during each of the past three years; and the percentage utilisation in terms of hours for each theatre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally.

Orthopaedic Consultants (Highland Health Board)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of elective operations, major and minor carried out for each year since 1980, by each orthopaedic consultant employed by the Highland health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Operating Theatres (Raigmore Hospital)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of operating theatres at Raigmore hospital of the Highland health authority, the number of operations done in each, for the last three years for which figures are available and the percentage utilisation in terms of hours for each theatre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios (Perthshire)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of pupil-to-teacher ratio in the schools in Perthshire in the years 1978, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Perthshire can be obtained from Tayside regional council.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios (Angus)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of pupil-to-teacher ratios in the schools in Angus in the years 1978, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Angus can be obtained from Tayside regional council.

Catering and Domestic Service Contractors

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, if he will list the names of each trade association for catering and domestic service contractors and the names of the individuals representing them, at the meeting of 2 October 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The British Hotels, Restaurants and Caterers Association was represented by Mr. T. Brannigan, Mr. E. Wilkinson, Mr. C. Bone, Mr. R. Dyson and Mr. J. Kilpatrick; the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association by Mr. J. Hall, Mr. M. Davies and Mr. A. Tucker.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, whether any informal minute or record was made by any individual at, or subsequent to, the meeting of 2 October 1987, which related to that meeting.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes; an informal report on the seminar was prepared for my information.

Johnstone Infectious Diseases Hospital, Renfrewshire

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of the original contract to build the new purpose-built block at Johnstone infectious diseases hospital in Renfrewshire; and what is the new cost for the revised plan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of the original contract to provide a support services block at the hospital was £990,882. The cost of the revised contract, including the new provision of a recreational area for patients, is still subject to negotiation, but the board is confident that it will be less than the cost of the original contract.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the cost implications to the responsible health board of halting the planned kitchen at Johnstone infectious diseases hospital, Renfrewshire.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Argyll and Clyde health board anticipates that there will be an overall saving on the contract. In addition, the future cost of providing recreational facilities for patients at Johnstone hospital will now be avoided.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the electricity and gas supplies for the now cancelled kitchen block at the Johnstone infectious diseases hospital, Renfrewshire, are still going ahead; and at what cost.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The change of use of part of the block from kitchen to recreational facilities does not affect the requirement to supply the block with electrical power or to introduce a gas supply which will fuel the heating system.

The provisional total is £14,540, which is already included in the contract price.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what compensation is to be paid to the contractor following cancellation of the building of the kitchen at Johnstone infectious diseases hospital, Renfrewshire.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Johnstone hospital provides facilities for the elderly and the young physically disabled. No compensation is to be paid to the contractor following the cancellation of the fitting out of the kitchen at the hospital.

Grampian Health Board (Correspondence)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North copies of correspondence between Grampian health board and the Scottish Home and Health Department which relate to discussions and negotiations culminating in the signing on 3 November 1987 of the efficiency savings schedule of agreements by Mr. H. Fullerton for Grampian health board and by Mr. A. McKechnie and Mr. H. McGrath for the staff side, joint staff consultative committee.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Correspondence between the Department and health boards is not normally made available to other parties.

On 22 June the Scottish Home and Health Department wrote to Grampian health board asking for details of a new bonus scheme which it understood had apparently been introduced by the board for certain ancillary staff. The board replied on 14 October confirming that a new flat-rate bonus scheme for domestic, catering, portering, linen and laundry, hairdressing and gardening staff had been introduced to replace a number of existing ancillary staff bonus schemes. The letter dealt solely with the content of the scheme and the fact that staff representatives had been involved in its preparation and introduction.

Northumberland Natural Park

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report column 482, what acreage of the Northumberland natural park was afforested with conifers in 1958, 1960 and 1965.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Year (at 31 March)	Area of productive coniferous woodland (hectares)
1958	11,000
1960	12,000
1965	15,000

NHS Staff (Telephone Fault Repair System)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether all Health Service staff required to be on emergency call are registered for British Telecom's priority fault repair system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that after April health boards will continue to pay the cost for employees on British Telecom's priority fault repair system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: British Telecom is in the process of changing the arrangements for the operation and funding of emergency repairs to telephones at NHS premises and at the homes of key personnel. The Scottish Home and Health Department is consulting interested parties, including health boards and professional associations, about the arrangements to be made. The Department aims to identify arrangements which represent good value for public money, do not conflict with the terms of service of the key personnel concerned and, above all, are effective.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the capital programme for the Scottish

Special Housing Association for each of the last five years, showing the proportion in real and percentage terms financed from capital receipts and from borrowing;

(2) if he will give the projected capital programme for the Scottish Special Housing Association for each of the next five years, showing the proportion in real and percentage terms to be financed from projected capital receipts and from borrowing;

(3) if he will give the capital receipts from house sales for each of the last five years for the Scottish Special Housing Association.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the Scottish Special Housing Association's capital allocation is determined annually within the normal arrangements for public expenditure, programme figures are not available for any years after 1988-89. It is not possible to distinguish between the sums from capital receipts and borrowings from the National Loans Fund to meet capital expenditure for any financial year.

The table shows capital programme expenditure at cash prices and at 1986-87 prices for the five years up to 1986-87; it also gives capital receipts for house sales at cash prices and expressed as a percentage of capital programme expenditure for the same five years; estimated outturn figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 have been included as appropriate.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the sums borrowed by the Scottish Special Housing Association in 1987 to finance its capital programmes, showing in each case the terms and from whom borrowed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is shown in the table. All the association's borrowings are from the National Loans Fund.

Sheep Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many scintillators were available to, and used by, his Department for the monitoring of live sheep in the restricted areas of Scotland in each month from May 1986 to May 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures are as follows:

	Number
1986
May	Nil
June	Nil
July	1
August	1
September	1
October	4
November	6
December	6
1987
January	8
February	8
March	8
April	8
May	8

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when monitoring of live sheep on a general basis was introduced in the restricted areas of Scotland following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: July 1986.

Nurses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to recruit and retain nurses within the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) of 27 October 1987, at column 104.

In the intervening period, the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council has agreed a new grading structure which recognises specific skills and will enable nurses to progress in their careers without necessarily having to move into management, will recognise post-basic clinical skills and training at all levels and provide a response to shortages in key specialisms. The Nurses' Pay Review Body has been asked to make recommendations on salaries in the new structure as part of its annual report on pay.

In addition, the launch of a joint Nursing Times/ Scottish Home and Health Department campaign on nurse recruitment and retention will take place on Monday 28 March 1988 in Edinburgh.

Geese

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what weight is given to the number of geese grazing on land when determining whether a licence to shoot should be granted; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria he applies in determining the density or numbers of geese that are deemed to be causing significant damage for the purpose of granting a licence to shoot.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Licences are granted only where white-fronted geese are regularly causing damage in concentrations of more than 200 birds on restricted areas of land carrying crops or improved grass.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what step he has taken to satisfy himself that the licensed shooting of white-fronted geese on Islay has not caused nor is likely to cause any disturbance to the wild birds in the proposed special protection area known as the Rhins.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No licences have been issued in respect of land lying within any of the SSSIs including the Rhins. Licensed shooting outwith the SSSIs would not be expected to disturb birds within the protected areas.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to procure manpower for the purpose of scaring white-fronted geese from farmland on Islay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A scheme for the scaring of geese on farmland lying outwith the protected areas has already been introduced with support from the Manpower Services Commission for the employment of scarers.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licence applications he has now received to shoot white-fronted geese; how many licences have been granted to date; and if he has received advice from the Nature Conservancy Council in respect of each licence application.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Twenty eight applications for licences to shoot white-fronted geese have been received and 10 have been granted. The Nature Conservancy Council was informed in advance of each of the licences to be issued.

Written Answers to Questions

WALES

Rate Relief

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what would be the value to the average ratepayer in Wales, in 1988-89 prices, if domestic rate relief were at 33·5 p in the pound.

Mr. Peter Walker: £42·20 (compared with the present value of £23·30) for domestic ratepayers.

Sport

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the amount of Government financial assistance to sport in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Direct central Government support for sport and recreation in Wales is provided by way of grant-in-aid to the Sports Council for Wales. From 1979-80 to 1986-87, which is the last year for which outturn figures are available a total of £22·5 million was paid in grant. In the same period central Government support of £4·3 million was provided to local authorities via the urban programme. Of this the Welsh Office met 75 per cent. of the approved expenditure, the remaining 25 per cent. being met by the sponsoring local authority.

Local authorities' gross current expenditure on sport and recreation in this period was £345·5 million. This was financed in part by the rate support grant which is unhypothocated and by specific and supplementary grants of £18·3 million.

Housing (Renovation)

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on the renovation of public and private housing stock in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Local authorities and housing associations have, since April 1979, spent £570 million on the renovation of public housing and £414 million on the renovation of private housing.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the amount of Government financial assistance to, and (b) the number of jobs created in, each enterprise zone in Wales since their designation.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office expenditure, by way of payments under the urban programme and of compensation in respect of rate relief, is estimated as follows:

	Designated	Expenditure £ million	Employment
Delyn enterprise zone	21 July 1983	6·6	+1,200
Swansea enterprise zone	11 June 1981	10·8	+1,900
Milford Haven enterprise zone	24 April 1984	6·1	+420

Regional industrial assistance paid to individual companies on the zones is not included.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the planned provision for the Welsh Development Agency, at constant prices, is expected to be from (a) rents, sales and services and (b) Government funding, in each of the years 1988-89 and 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Rents, sales and other receipts	46·1	47·5	47·8
Net provision	62·0	58·3	57·7

[1] The planning figures have been adjusted to constant 1987-88 prices using the GDP deflator.

Urban Programme

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the amount of public expenditure under the urban programme in Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Capital and revenue public expenditure under the urban programme (including urban development grant) in Wales for each year since 1979 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	4·2
1980-81	8·7
1981-82	9·1
1982-83	17·4
1983-84	15·0
1984-85	20·8
1985-86	24·9
1986-87	[1]26·5
1987-88	[1]26·7

Morriston Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will direct the West Glamorgan health authority to ensure that the names of the people undertaking the inquiry into the intensive baby care unit at Morriston hospital are made public and that the results of the inquiry are published.

Mr. Grist: I understand that West Glamorgan health authority has initiated an internal inquiry following serious allegations about the special-care baby unit, Morriston hospital. The inquiry team will consist of the chairman of the authority and two members to be specified. The intention is for their report to be presented to a meeting of the authority in March 1988. In the circumstances I have no reason to consider the issue of a direction to the authority on this question.

Glanrhyd Bridge

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about the replacement of Glanrhyd bridge on the central Wales line.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met the chairman of British Rail on 5 February 1988. I am pleased to say that the chairman informed me that he hoped a new bridge would be in place by the autumn of this year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Budget

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product was allocated to official overseas development aid in 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information will not be available until later this year.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts if has any proposals to enlarge the scope for public libraries to generate increased revenues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have today presented to Parliament a Green Paper, "Financing our public library service: Four subjects for debate." In it, I ask for views on the best means of achieving the Government's objectives of supporting the provision of the free basic library service at public expense, while at the same time enlarging the scope for library authorities to generate increased income by joint ventures with the private sector and by charging for specialised services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Earlsfield Police Station

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to close Earlsfield police station in Wandsworth, London, SW18; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there are no plans to close Earlsfield police station.

London (Policing Costs)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per inhabitant of policing London; and what is the average cost per inhabitant of policing areas outside London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Expenditure per thousand population for each police force in England and Wales is given in "Police Statistics 1986-87 Actuals" published by The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, a copy of which is in the Library.

The publication recognises that because of differences between the Metropolitan police and other forces direct comparisons of costs may be misleading.

Sentries

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what steps the police are taking to ensure that sentries on duty outside the royal palaces and royal residences, and their horses, are not subjected to unpleasant attentions from tourists and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police have the necessary powers to deal with any difficulties which may arise.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Lawn Mowers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total output of lawn mowers, the percentage exported and the proportion of the domestic market taken by imports in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany and (c) Japan in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information for the United Kingdom is shown in the table. That for West Germany and Japan could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

£ million

	Sales[1]	Exports	Imports
1975	40·4	10·4	1·5
1979	86·9	17·2	9·0
1980	98·1	18·3	10·4
1981	108·6	18·1	12·4
1982	99·2	17·3	14·9
1983	101·8	15·7	12·6
1984	103·6	20·1	20·0
1985	115·7	22·9	20·5

[1] Output figures relate to sales by manufacturers in the United Kingdom with a minimum employment of 25 in years up to 1980 and 50 from 1981 onwards.

Red Cross Emblem

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has given his authority under section 6(2)(b) of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 for the use by the Labour party of a design so nearly resembling the Red Cross designated in section 6(1) of the Act as to be capable of being mistaken for or understood as referring to that emblem.

Mr. Butcher: No authority has been given in the matter by either the Secretary of State or by the Board of Trade.

Marmosets

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on attempts by the Danish Government to secure marmosets from the United Kingdom for the purpose of chemical warfare research; whether he intends to take steps to prevent those animals being exported for such purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 February 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has no information on attempts by the Danish Government to secure marmosets from the United Kingdom for the purpose of chemical warfare research.

ENERGY

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Parkinson: Numbers employed fluctuate over time; currently the Department employs around 1,000 civil servants whose normal hours are 41 per week for full-time staff, and of whom 10 per cent. are on flexitime. Four are on job-sharing schemes and two are on a four-day working week. All except casual staff acquire the pension rights provided by the principal Civil Service pension scheme; last year five out of 34 officers who retired qualified for a full pension.

Hinkley Point Power Station

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the reports of incidents at Hinkley Point power station from 1985 to date, indicating (a) in which cases the alarm was sounded and (b) in which cases the alarm failed to sound.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1985 there have been three incidents at the Hinkley Point site reported to the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate under the arrangements reported to Parliament on 26 July 1982 and revised on 30 April 1987. These occurred on 25 October 1985, 29 November 1985 and 31 October 1986, and details are included in the Health and Safety Executive's quarterly statement on nuclear incidents, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Only the incident on 29 November 1985 included the declaration of a site incident requiring the sounding of the site's sirens, and I am advised that they performed satisfactorily.

Deep-mined Coal (Subsidies)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the average level of Government subsidy per tonne of deep-mined coal in each year since 1978 in each of the member states of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 11 February 1988]: The OECD does not publish details of aid to member states' coal industries. The information in the table has been obtained from European Commission publications.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what, according to his best estimate, is the proportion of the whole amount of money spent on student grants is accounted for (a) in theory and (b) in practice by parental contributions for each year since 1979 until the latest year for which the Government can estimate.

Mr. Jackson: The information relates to mandatory and full-value discretionary awards made by local education authorities in England and Wales. Assessed parental contributions are expressed as a percentage of the combined total of all assessed contributions (from parents, spouses and students themselves) and LEA expenditure on maintenance awards.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent there is a shortfall in providing examiners and moderators for the forthcoming GCSE examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE examining groups are responsible for recruiting and employing GCSE examiners and moderators, and I understand that they are currently reviewing progress.

English Grammar

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the teaching of English grammar; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government attach great importance to the study of English language. Last year my right hon. Friend established a committee under the chairmanship of Sir John Kingman to advise on what, in general terms, children need to know about how the English language works, and in consequence what they should have been taught and be expected to understand on this score at ages 7, 11 and 16. The committee's report is expected next month. Under our proposals for a national curriculum, English will be a core subject. A working group will be established after Easter, following and building on the work of the Kingman committee, to advise on attainment targets for ages 7, 11, 14 and 16 and the associated programmes of study for all aspects of English.

Education Reform

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, where the physical capacity of a school is above the 1979 intake, he will then allow that capacity to be the determining factor in deciding how many pupils should be admitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Under the existing legislation, admissions authorities for maintained schools are at liberty to set admissions limits above the standard number of such schools if they so wish.

Under the provisions of chapter II of the Education Reform Bill, if admissions to a school are higher than the existing standard number in the school year immediately prior to implementation of the new legislation, that number will become the new standard number for the school and therefore the number up to which the school must be prepared to admit. If LEAs and governors agree that a school can admit pupils in excess of the standard number, they will be able to do so without reference to the Secretary of State, and if there is no agreement, there is provision in the Bill for the matter to be referred to the Secretary of State for decision.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many more staff he expects to employ at his Department for the purposes of recalculating grants for the 12 inner London local education authorities;

(2) how many more staff he expects to employ in his Department for the purpose of administering capital expenditure bids for the proposed 12 inner London local education authorities following the abolition of the Inner London education authority;

(3) whether he is able to make any estimate as to additional staffing requirements in his Department in connection with the administration of grant-related in-service training after the proposed date of transfer of the functions of the Inner London education authority to the inner London boroughs;

(4) whether he will estimate the staffing implications for his Department of the monitoring and approval of local management schemes proposed by inner London boroughs prior to the proposed transfer of functions to them after the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 18 February 1988]: My right hon. Friend is setting up a special unit in the Department of Education and Science to advise and assist boroughs in preparing to take over responsibility for education. The unit will be mainly formed by the reallocation of existing staff, but two new posts have been allocated.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out his estimate of the aggregate of the appropriate levels of spending for inner London councils on the education service in 1990-91; and what is the Inner London education authority's estimated spending in 1987-88 in cash terms and in volume terms.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 18 February]: It will be for each council to determine the appropriate level of spending on the education service in 1990-91. The Inner London education authority's budgeted spending for 1987-88 at outturn prices, as shown in its published estimates, is £1,024·7 million.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many extra staff will need to be employed, and at what cost, to provide returns under statutory requirements to collect statistics and information in the proposed 12 inner London local education authorities, following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 18 February 1988]: It will be for each inner London council to determine the staffing they consider appropriate for the collection of statistics.

Teachers (Assessment and Testing Report)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will initiate a study on the implication for teachers' working time arising from the recommendations of the assessment and testing group's report;

(2) if he has assessed the cost and resource implications of the task group's report on assessment and testing; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the cost of implementing the recommendations of the assessment and testing group, arising from his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 205.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has invited the task group on assessment and testing to undertake a more detailed study of arrangements for implementing and administering the national assessment system proposed in its recent report. The group's advice on this, and public reaction to its report, should enable the organisational and resource implications to be gauged.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was (a) the expenditure per pupil and (b) the average size of classes in (i) infant, (ii) primary and (iii) secondary schools in (1) England, (2) East Sussex and (3) the borough of Eastbourne on the available date closest to 3 May 1979; and what are the equivalent figures for the latest available date, adjusted in the case of expenditure for inflation.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is given in the table. Information in respect of separate districts within local education authorities is not held centrally.

	Nursery schools	Primary schools	Secondary schools
Net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil (£)[1]
England
1979-80[2]	1,305	609	980
1985-86	1,370	815	1,175
East Sussex
1979-80[2]	1,295	670	970
1985-86	1,190	760	1,085
Average class size[3]
England

1985-86	not available	25·5	20·3
East Sussex
1979-80	not available	25·2	21·4
1985-86	not available	26·3	21·0

[1] Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The cash prices for 1979-80 have been repriced to 1985-86 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

[3] The analyses are in respect of classes taught by one teacher in a specified period on the day of the census count in January each year and may not be representative of the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

School Meals

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of children who will no longer qualify for free school meals on the Isle of Wight after 1 April (a) numerically and (b) expressed as a percentage.

Mr. Dunn: Children currently receiving free school meals at the LEA's discretion or because the family is in receipt of family income supplement will no longer do so when the Social Security Act 1986 comes into effect on 11 April. In October 1986, the latest date for which data are available, the number of children receiving free school meals in these two categories was 446, or 6 per cent. of the total number of pupils taking meals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much time has been spent by arms control officials in his Department on work specifically relating to naval arms control during the last six months.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to quantify separately the time devoted by FCO officials to different arms control issues. However, naval matters constitute one aspect of their work.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list any naval arms control proposals put forward by the Government during the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: A bilateral agreement was concluded with the Soviet Union in 1986 on preventing incidents at sea. The text of this agreement was laid in the House as Command Paper No. 57 in January 1987.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what naval arms control measures he is putting forward in response to Mr. Gorbachev's statement in October 1987 that nuclear weapons should be withdrawn from the Soviet Baltic fleet and from the Baltic and Leningrad military districts, that an Arctic peace plan should be drawn up, that there should be a Nordic nuclear free zone and that consultations should begin on limiting military activity in the Baltic sea, North sea, Norwegian sea and Greenland sea.

Mr. Mellor: We have made clear in the course of bilateral contacts that proposals aimed at limiting freedom of movement on the high seas would create difficulties for the Alliance given its need to reinforce Europe by sea in times of crisis. As far as the proposal for a Nordic nuclear-free zone is concerned, our view is that such a zone would do little to enhance international security because of the direct relevance to the Nordic area of nuclear and conventional forces stationed elsewhere.

San José IV Ministerial Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the San José IV ministerial conference.

Mr. Eggar: We will make available to the House the economic and political communiqués which we expect the conference to adopt once it has taken place on 29 February to 1 March.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Governments of (a) the United States of America, (b) the other countries of the EEC, (c) Argentina and (d) other countries, regarding the proposed military exercise in the Falkland Islands from 7 to 31 March; and what has been the nature of the representations in each case.

Mr. Eggar: We have had discussions with a number of interested Governments regarding the reinforcement exercise to take place in the Falkland Islands from 7 to 31 March. The content of these discussions is confidential.

ENVIRONMENT

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the London Docklands development corporation's budget has been spent using its powers under the Inner Urban Areas Act to give grants and loans to existing firms in docklands.

Mr. Chope: LDDC has spent £1,984,253 to date — which is 0·5 per cent. of its grant-in-aid.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money the London Docklands development corporation has received to date.

Mr. Chope: To date the London Docklands development corporation has received £387·1 million grant-in-aid.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is responsible at the London Docklands development corporation for liason with the Docklands Forum following the dismissal of Mr. John Mills.

Mr. Chope: The LDDC board is to consider which of its members should represent the corporation on the Docklands Forum.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to appoint a new deputy chairman of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Chope: Consultations are continuing and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Ridley: On 1 February 1988 there were 32,820 staff employed in my Department (including the PSA); 741 of these work part-time, including job-sharers. Separate figures for job-sharing schemes are not available. Non-industrial staff in central London work 41 hours per week (gross); elsewhere 42 hours. Industrial staff work 44 hours per week, gross. The average weekly hours of part-time staff is 19·7 hours.

Most full-time staff work a five-day week — except those working shifts. Numbers of staff working a four-day week or nine-day fortnight are not readily available.

Flexible working hours agreements operate on a local basis; there are currently 115 local schemes in operation. Staff are free to participate in them, or not to do so, if they wish. Figures for participants are not kept centrally.

All staff are entitled to retire on pension at age 60. Maximum pension rights normally accrue after 40 years total service; 4,128 of present non-industrial staff would have 40 years service by age 60. Those with shorter service do, however, have the opportunity to purchase some additional qualifying years for pension purposes. Corresponding figures for industrial staff are not readily available.

Nuclear Waste Disposal Dumps

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans Nirex has to create nuclear waste disposal dumps in Lancashire and Cumbria, other than Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend expects UK Nirex Ltd to make proposals early in 1989 for a deep dual-purpose disposal facility for two-level and intermediate-level radioactive waste, after evaluation of the response to the discussion document "The Way Forward" and scientific studies. At this stage neither Nirex nor the Government has any firm proposals for the siting of a radioactive waste repository and no part of the country can be ruled out.

Local Authority Property Assets

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to compel those local councils which are not using, under-using, inefficiently managing, or wasting £100 billion of assets, as identified in the recent Audit Commission report on local authority property assets, to dispose of those assets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 17 February 1988 at column 660.

Moore Manor Park Development, Runcorn

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision about the Moore Manor park development near Runcorn.

Mrs. Rae: I hope to do so shortly.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 968, he expects to announce the areas he intends to designate as urban development corporations; and if he will detail the locations under consideration.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend expects to make a further announcement shortly.

Northamptonshire Structure Plan

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the revised Northamptonshire county structure plan.

Mrs. Rae: The modifications which the Secretary of State proposes to make to the submitted replacement plan will be published in the near future. There will then be an opportunity for representations to be made on them to my right hon. Friend before he makes his final decision on the plan.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the composition of the community charge implementation unit; what are its terms of reference; and if it will publish guidance for local authorities.

Mr. Howard: The implementation sub-group of the community charge working group was established in November 1987 to provide a forum for discussion of issues arising from the implementation of the community charge.

The group comprises officials of the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health and Social Security and the Welsh Office, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, Association of District Councils, Association of County Councils, the London Boroughs Association and the Association of London Authorities.

The terms of reference of the group are to consider the practical issues arising from registration for, and billing, collection and recovery of the community charge, with a view to (a) providing an input to the preparation of regulations; (b) providing advice to local authority practitioners; (c) assessing the resource implications of implementing rate reform.

The sub-group will produce a series of practice notes on the implementation of the community charge for use by local authorities, professional bodies and other interested parties.

St. George's Hospital Site

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the recent planning consent granted by Westminster city council for the redevelopment of the St. George's hospital site, Hyde park corner, for the implementation of the conditions laid down in his appeal decision of 21 December 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that Westminster city council has resolved to grant planning permission and listed building consent for the redevelopment as an hotel and offices of the St. George's hospital site. The planning permission is subject to a section 52 agreement and the listed building consent to further procedures, including consideration by HBMC and possible notification to the Secretary of State. If permission is subsequently granted it is for the owner to decide whether to take up the new permission or that granted on appeal in 1982, provided the latter is still valid.

MOD Properties (Sales)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Ministry of Defence houses in (a) Scotland and (b) Renfrew, West and Inverclyde have been sold in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1988, c. 62]: The answer given to the hon. Member on Monday 22 February was not given in full. The complete answer is as follows:

a. Scotland	Year	b. Renfrew, West/ Inverclyde

PRIME MINISTER

NHS Hospitals (Visits)

Q5. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a National Health Service hospital.

The Prime Minister: I visit a number of hospitals during the course of each year, but I have no immediate plans for further visits at present.

Confectionery Industry

Q86. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on Government support for the confectionery industry.

The Prime Minister: The confectionery industry continues to be important both to the economy as a whole and to our exports. The Government's policies seek to promote a climate within which industry is encouraged to compete effectively, and with special and increasing emphasis on the opportunities offered by the wider internal market of the Community.

Currently food manufacturers are eligible to apply for assistance towards new capital investment under Government schemes administered by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment. These include a variety of measures described in the recent White Paper "DTI — the department for Enterprise". The industry is also covered by a range of measures from information and counselling to financial incentives designed to assist small business, including those in the confectionery manufacturing sector.

Poland

Q104. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister, what plans she has to visit Poland.

The Prime Minister: I hope to visit Poland this year.

Year 2000

Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister what plans the Government have to celebrate the year 2000.

The Prime Minister: None as yet.

Engagements

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to the Channel tunnel.

The Prime Minister: I visited Shakespeare Cliff on 5 February and met representatives of Eurotunnel and the various contractors working on the Channel tunnel. I was most impressed by the substantial progress they have clearly made with this most exciting civil engineering project.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of entrants to the job training scheme have obtained a credit or qualification as a direct result of their time on the scheme since its inception.

Mr. Cope: Information on credits or qualifications is not yet available. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey which will give information on qualifications. The results should be known in the spring.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will show by region, including Greater London, and by male and female, the numbers of people who were (a) without jobs and who looked for work in the four weeks before their labour force survey interview and were available to start work within two weeks, who wanted full-time jobs, the number who wanted part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (b) unemployed according to the standard labour force survey definition who were looking for full-time jobs and the number looking for part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (c) in part-time jobs who were looking for a different job with longer hours or looking for an additional job, (d) looking for a different job with shorter hours, (d) claimants not unemployed by the definition using broad International Labour Organisation guidelines on the grounds that they were employed and (f) claimants not unemployed by the conventional labour force survey definition on the grounds that they were employed.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The available information from the preliminary results of the 1987 labour force survey is as shown in the following tables:

It is estimated that there were 114,000 male and 80,000 female claimants employed in Great Britain in spring 1987. However, a reliable analysis of employed claimants by region is not available.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances and which categories of claimants are issued with the form CFN 982A at unemployment benefit offices; and what instructions are issued to benefit staff.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Form CF(N)982A is a questionnaire issued by unemployment benefit offices to claimants who do not qualify for unemployment benefit on their United Kingdom contribution record but who have been employed abroad in an EC country or a country with which the United Kingdom has a reciprocal agreement.

Completed questionnaires enable inquiries to be made to establish whether any contributions paid abroad may assist claimants to qualify for unemployment benefit. Completed forms are forwarded to the overseas branch of the DHSS.

"Training for Employment"

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the IFF Research Ltd. survey of 1,400 employers referred to in the "Training for Employment" White Paper (Cm. 316).

Mr. Cope [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I plan to publish details of the results of the IFF Research Ltd. survey, quoted in the White Paper, "Training for Employment" (Cm. 316) in the Employment Gazette shortly.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the unemployment totals for Cunninghame, North constituency by ward in (a) January 1983, (b) January 1987 and (c) January 1988.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment statistics on a ward basis are available only from June 1983. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants by ward in the Cunninghame, North parliamentary constituency for January 1984, 1987 and 1988.

	Unemployed claimants

These figures are not directly comparable due to a change in the compilation of the statistics in March 1986.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of unemployed people in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area who are (i) under 25 years, (ii) between 25 years and 35 years, (iii) between 35 and 50 years and (iv) over 50 years on the latest available date.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The number of unemployed claimants on 8 October 1987 is given in the table.

Age group	Dundee, East constituency Total	Dundee travel-to-work area Total
Under 25	2,510	5,051
25-34	1,729	3,524

NHS (Voluntary Contributions)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give what information he has about voluntary and charity contributions to the Health Service for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on voluntary contributions to the Health Service is not held centrally.

Hospital Charges

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums were collected by each health board from non-United Kingdom residents for hospital charges in 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what is the estimated net sum after deductions of costs of administration.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The amounts collected are given in the table. The administrative costs associated with the collection of income are not separately identifiable.

Afforestation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the area of land newly afforested in the United Kingdom in 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the year to 31 March 1987, the Forestry Commission planted 5,342 hectares and grant-aided the planting of 19,147 hectares by the private sector. In addition, a total of 831 hectares was planted in Northern Ireland.

Solicitors

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have occurred since 1972 where solicitors have been found to have passed on to a third party or parties, from clients held in police custody, information which has interfered in the police investigation of the case or any subsequent prosecution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret this information is not collected centrally.

Home Security Grants

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce home security grants for tenants and home owners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Not at present.

Elderly People

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are over (a) 65 years, (b) 75 years and (c) 85 years in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The registrar general's population estimates for 30 June 1986 are as follows:

	Ages 65+	75+	85+
Scotland	742,568	308,871	56,704

Western Isles	5,644	2,885	559

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many places there are in local authority residential care for the elderly for each region; and what has been the percentage change since 1979;

(2) how many places there are in private residential care homes for the elderly; and what has been the percentage change since 1979;

(3) how many places there are in homes for the elderly owned or operated by churches, charities, housing associations or other voluntary organisations; and what has been the percentage change since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures are available separately for places in voluntary and private homes for the elderly in 1987, but for 1979 a single total only is available. There were 2,306 places in private homes and 4,441 places in voluntary homes in 1987 an increase of 30·1 per cent. over the 1979 total. The information requested on places in local authority homes for the elderly is as follows:

Health Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report his Department's staff targets for the Scottish hospital and community health services for each year from 1979 up to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department does not set annual targets as such. In medical services the establishment of senior registrars is determined annually. Targets are being negotiated with health boards for the numbers of recruits to nursing training and annual discussions take place with health boards about requirements for staff in certain professions allied to medicine. health boards are being encouraged to develop manpower planning in the context of the Department's monitoring of progress towards the priorities set out in "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties"—the SHAPE report.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the proportion of Scottish gross domestic product spent on (a) the Health Service as a whole, (b) hospital and community health services and (c) family practitioner services, for each year from 1970 until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is only available from 1974-75 and is set out in the table:

*NHS Expenditure as a proportion of Scottish gross domestic product

Widdicombe Committee

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 719, he is in a position to announce the publication of the Government's conclusions following consultations on recommendations made by the Widdicombe Committee.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are not yet in a position to announce a publication date.

Family Protection

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 716, he is in a position to announce the publication date of the report on the working of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that I cannot yet announce the publication date of the report of this research; I shall write to the hon. Member when it has been determined.

Cancelled Operations

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table showing, for the latest available year, the number of operations or theatre lists cancelled in Lothian and Fife health boards, by specialty.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally.

Housing (Improvements)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many successful applications have been made by housing authorities in relation to housing action area and improvement order declarations for an enhanced level of approved expense for grant purposes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the period from May 1983 to date, approval has been given to 626 applications by local authorities for increases in the maximum eligible expense limits in respect of 4,375 houses and non-residential premises within housing action Areas. Approvals relating to improvement order cases cannot be separately identified.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many housing action area and improvement order declarations have been made by each local authority in Scotland over the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the 10-year period to 1987 the total number of housing action areas declared by each of the Scottish local authorities and submitted to the Secretary of State as draft resolutions is set out in the table. Information on the number of improvement orders made by local authorities is not held centrally.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on assurances given by British Coal about the safety of houses which are near opencast mining works (a) in the village of Coalburn and (b) in other places affected by similar activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am not aware of the assurances to which the hon. Member refers. I understand that conditions attached to the planning permission granted to British Coal in respect of its opencast operations at Dalquhandy, Coalburn, include a requirement, prior to the commencement of work on the site, to provide an independent report into the potential effect of the proposed opencast coal development on all properties in the Coalburn area, particularly with regard to the potential loss of hydraulic pressure in former coal workings under the area and blasting.

Young Offenders

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of reports for drugs offences by children in (a) the Tayside region and (b) the Dundee area on the latest available date and for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of reports on children for offences involving handling offensive weapons in (a) the Tayside region and (b) the Dundee area on the latest available date and for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of reports for crimes and offences per 1,000 children in (a) the Tayside region and (b) the Dundee area on the latest available date for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

The rebasing of the population estimates following the 1981 census results in a discontinuity between 1980 and 1981.

Interdicts

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Lord Advocate takes, pursuant to the answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 295, when seeking interdicts, to ensure that the media are not subject to restrictions in Scotland to which they would not be subject in England.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1988]: Where Ministers decide to seek orders against the media both in England and Wales and in Scotland in respect of the same material, appropriate consultation takes place to secure that the Lord Advocate, in approaching the Scottish courts, seeks interdict in terms which are compatible with any injunction sought from or granted by the English courts.

Catering and Domestic Service Contractors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, if he will list the employing company of those making representations on behalf of the trade associations at the meeting held on 2 October 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The representatives of the trade associations which took part in the seminar on 2 October 1987 were employees of Gardner Merchant Ltd.; Gemini Taylorplan Services Ltd.; Compass Services (UK) Ltd.; Mediclean Ltd.; and RCO Contract Services Ltd. Mr. John Hall of the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association also took part.

Johnstone Infectious Diseases Hospital

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) why it was not decided until after contracts had been signed for a new kitchen that a recreation area would be built at Johnstone infectious diseases hospital at Renfrewshire;

(2) why it took 18 months to plan the new purpose-built block at Johnstone infectious diseases hospital; and why four to five weeks after the signing of the construction contract, work was stopped on the kitchen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1988]: After the Argyll and Clyde health board had let the contract, advice was received that the service to patients could be improved by the introduction of a cook-chill system for food, which would also generate revenue savings. The board therefore cancelled the part of the contract relating to the fitting-out of the kitchen, and revised the scheme to improve the recreational facilities for the patients instead. The project falls within the board's delegated limit; it is up to boards to manage the progress of such projects through the various building procedures subsequent to approval-in-principle, taking account of the availability of resources at the tender stage.

NHS Staff (Telephone Fault Repair System)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase health boards' budgets to cover the cost of maintaining health service employees on British Telecom's priority fault repair system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Health boards are given expenditure allocations which are not generally related to specific items.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I regard the reduction of the time patients have to wait for consultation and treatment as one of the urgent tasks facing the NHS. An additional sum of £3·6 million has already been allocated to health boards for this purpose during the current financial year. I am presently considering what further action needs to be taken. I hope to discuss this with health board chairmen in the next few weeks.

Nurses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the number of nurses who have left the National Health Service in Scotland for every year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1988]: This information could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Forestry Commission with regard to the rent and accommodation of (a) employees in general and (b) forest keepers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 February 1988]: In common with Government Departments generally, the Forestry Commission charges its employee tenants a "fair rent" in the spirit of the Rent Acts. Where, for management reasons, it is necessary for an employee to live in a particular commission house (a "key house") a standard rent is charged in accordance with the Civil Service pay and conditions code. The Commission's policy on accommodation is to retain only key houses and houses in locations where no alternative accommodation is available. Forest keepers in the New Forest are treated in the same way as other commission employees.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average rent charged on accommodation provided for Forestry Commission forest keepers at the latest available date; and what has been the figure on the same date for each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The information is as follows:

Year (at 1 December)	Average Weekly Rent Charged £
1983	11·56
1984	11·56
1985	13·09
1987	24·75

The rents for 1983 to 1986 were "standard rents" determined on the basis of Civil Service rules. The 1987 rent represents a full "fair rent".

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools or educational centres for the teaching of dyslexic children there are in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In accordance with the recommendations made in the report of the committee of inquiry into the education of handicapped children and young people (1978) local authorities make provision, as far as practicable, for children with special educational needs in the school system as a whole rather than in specialised establishments. Information about the number of schools providing for dyslexic children is not held centrally.

Raigmore Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of operating theatres at Raigmore hospital of the Highland health board, the number of operations done in each, for the last three years for which figures are available, and the percentage utilisation in terms of hours for each theatre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1988]: There are 11 operating theatres at Raigmore hospital. The other information requested is not available centrally.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Community Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report the annual ceiling on EEC expenditure in terms of pounds sterling at current prices and so on, estimated division between the four own resources, and the estimated United Kingdom contribution after deduction of the rebates.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to him on 22 February, at column 17, and to her second reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend East (Mr. Taylor) on 17 February, at column 613. The Commission's latest estimates for 1988 envisage yields of agricultural and sugar levies (less 10 per cent. to cover collection costs) of 2·8 becu and of customs duties (less collection costs) of 8·6 becu, and contributions in respect of VAT of 23·6 becu. The residual financing requirement will depend on decisions still to be taken on the overall level of expenditure.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the statement on the meeting of the EEC Council, Official Report, 15 February, columns 705-17, whether he will include in the Official Report his estimate of the amount now made available to EEC under own resources, including the United Kingdom rebate, expressed in terms of the original value added tax contribution.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to him on 22 February, at column 15.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has revised his estimates in the Autumn Statement of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Economic Community for the current and future financial years, in the light of the agreement reached at the European Council on 11 and 12 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding reply 22 February 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 22 February, at column 17.

VAT (Spectacles and Medical Goods)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement following the decision of the European Court of Justice in the proceedings taken against the United Kingdom over exemption from value added tax for spectacles and certain other goods supplied with medical care.

Mr. Lilley: This decision arises from the EC sixth directive on VAT, which was adopted in 1977. The Government will abide by the court's decision, but we need to study the judgment in detail, and consult interested trade bodies, before we can make any firm decisions about how to proceed. The United Kingdom has a treaty obligation to implement rulings from the European Court. Any amendment to United Kingdom law imposing taxation would have to be proposed to, and approved by, the House of Commons.

Civil Service Manpower

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if copies of the annual report by the Treasury on Civil Service manpower changes in 1986-87 will be made available to right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Major: Yes. The 1986-87 annual report has been given to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee today and copies placed in the Library of the House.

Government Departments (Staff)

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 January.

Mr. Major: On 1 January 1988 there were 583,485 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 508,628 were non-industrials and 74,857 were industrials.

Smoke Detectors and Fire Extinguishers

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue received in the financial year 1986-87 from the imposition of value added tax on (a) smoke detectors and (b) fire extinguishers; and what is the estimated figure for 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I regret that the information is not available.

Bank of England (Registrar Department)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects a decision to be reached on the relocation of the Bank of England's registrar department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The relocation of the Bank of England's registrar's department is a matter for the Bank of England.

VAT (Funeral Charges)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking the imposition of zero rate value added tax on funeral charges rather than to exempt them from value added tax; and what impact the introduction of zero-rate value added tax on funeral charges would have upon Exchequer revenue.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received no such representations. It is not possible to estimate the revenue effect of introducing zero rating of VAT on funeral charges without disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job sharing schemes, (c) on a four day working week or nine day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 1 January 1988 there were 10,357 staff in post counting part-timers as half and excluding casuals and those working fewer than 10 hours a week.

Average weekly working hours of MAFF staff are not available. However, full-time pay is normally related to "conditioned hours" for non-industrial civil servants of 36 hours per week net of meal breaks in London and 37 hours outside.

The number of staff using the Ministry's flexible working hours scheme is not available. However, use of the scheme is open to all non-industrial civil servants up to and including grade 7 with limited exceptions such as travelling officers and those employed in small units which have to be staffed throughout the day.

Thirty staff are now sharing jobs and further plans are in hand.

Nineteen staff work a four-day week; none work a nine-day fortnight.

The only officers who can retire on full pension are those who have served 40 years or have bought added years to bring them up to 40 years. We estimate that over the past three years about 8 per cent. of awards at age 60 fell in this category.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much common agricultural policy prices would rise in the event of the value of the deutschmark rising 5 per cent. within the ERM of the European monetary system against all EEC currencies; what would be the effect on the stabilisers; and how any increase in surpluses would be forced.

Mr. MacGregor: Arrangements agreed in 1987, but not yet activated by an EMS realignment, provide that green rates will be altered following any such realignment (which would take place in the circumstances the hon. Member cites) if the net effect of the realignment is to widen the gaps between green and market rates of exchange. The effect on common agricultural support prices expressed in national currencies would depend upon changes in the central rates of all EMS currencies, including those such as sterling, which are not in the ERM. It cannot be predicted in advance.

The stabiliser arrangements, which are not linked to agrimonetary considerations, will act to penalise production in excess of the thresholds set for the various commodities, and therefore help to constrain expenditure.

Food Prices

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 4 February, Official Report, column 1154, what estimate he has made of income forgone as a result of the difference between the rate of increase in food prices and all items included in the retail prices index (a) in total since 1979 and (b) for each year since 1979 assuming that the extra price of food was all passed on to the producers.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not possible to estimate the levels of farm income forgone in the hypothetical situation envisaged without making a large number of arbitrary assumptions. Such estimates would in any case be open to different interpretations.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the statement on the meeting of the European Council, Official Report, 15 February, column 711-12, whether he will explain how the milk quotas are working; and if he will give his estimate of the distribution of the benefit between the producer, the consumer and the taxpayer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: While they were not the Government's preferred solution to the problems of the dairy sector, milk quotas have acted as an effective limitation on surplus production within the Community. By comparison with the situation that would have prevailed had no action been taken, they are of general benefit.

Green Pound

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the impact of 1 per cent. change at the margin in the average rate of the green pound on (a) United Kingdom net Exchequer cost, (b) farm incomes and (c) the retail prices index.

Mr. MacGregor: The impact of a green pound devaluation designed to reduce United Kingdom monetary gaps and, where relevant, MCAs in all commodity sectors by one percentage point would depend on a number of factors, including the effects of recent changes in support arrangements. However, once all the effects had fed through a broad estimate is that it could, in a full year (a) increase United Kingdom expenditure by around £13 million (provisional); (b) add approximately £45 million to producer revenues, after taking account of increased prices of purchased feed and seed; (c) add of the order of 0·02 per cent. to the RPI.

Sheep Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many scintillators were available to, and used by, his Department for the monitoring of live sheep in the restricted areas of Cumbria in each month from May 1986 to May 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 22 February 1988]: After development and testing of suitable equipment in the period of August 1986, sets of live monitoring equipment became available to, and were used by, my Department for the routine monitoring of live sheep in the "mark and release" scheme in the Cumbria restricted area as follows:

	Total number of Ministry sets available for use	Number of sets in Cumbria restricted area

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when live monitoring of sheep on a general basis was introduced in the restricted areas of Cumbria following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The option of live monitoring sheep became generally available to producers in the Cumbria restricted area from late September 1986.

Forest Damage

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the research studies currently being undertaken (a) within his Department or (b) commissioned by him into forest damage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 February 1988]: A range of publicly funded research into this area is being carried out by the Forestry Commission and the Department of the Environment.

Farm Land and Rural Development Bill

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Forestry Commission about the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 February 1988]: One of the purposes of the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill is to provide enabling powers for the proposed farm woodland scheme. Since this scheme is to be administered jointly by the Forestry Commission and the Agriculture Departments, the Forestry Commission has been closely involved in work on the Bill from the outset.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rubbish Dumps

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has of botulism and leptospirosis affecting humans and animals being spread from rubbish dumps by rats and seagulls.

Mr. Needham: None.

Cloghogue Primary School

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what what is the distance from Cloghogue primary school of the new Army look-out post at Cloghogue, Newry.

Mr. Stanley: Approximately 400 m.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the distance from Cloghogue primary school of the new police/Army building which acts as a road check on the Newry to Dublin road.

Mr. Stanley: Approximately 400 m.

Army and Police Installations

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Army and police installations are presently situated in South Armagh and Newry; and on average how many helicopter flights are made in and out of each installation per day.

Mr. Stanley: There are 18 security force installations in the South Armagh area. Helicopter flights vary considerably with weather, operational and other factors; it is not the practice to give details of operational flights.

Fencing (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many claims for compensation have been made at Drummacavall, Crossmaglen, as a result of fencing being cut by Army and police personnel during the period from January 1987 to January 1988; and how many payments have been made by way of compensation;

(2) how many claims for compensation have been made at Creevekeeran, Crossmaglen, as a result of fencing being cut by Army or police personnel during the period from January 1987 to January 1988; and how many payments have been made by way of compensation;

(3) how many claims for compensation have been made at Glassdrummon, Crossmaglen, as a result of fencing having been cut by Army or police personnel during the period from January 1987 to January 1988; and how many payments have been made by way of compensation.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

Location	Claims for fence cutting received 1 January 1987—1 January 1988	Compensation paid	Offers made	Under consideration
Drummacavall	35	31	2	2
Creevekeeran	32	27	4	1
Glassdrummon	33	31	1	1
Totals	100	89	7	4

Note: The figures quoted in the table include claims (a) for fence damage only and (b) for fence and other damage (eg to land, crops and livestock).
Claims made against the Ministry of Defence are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Arms and Ammunition (Seizures)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many seizures of arms and ammunition belonging to the Ulster Defence Association and the Ulster Freedom Fighters have been made by the security forces during November 1987, December 1987, January 1988 and February to date; where these seizures were made; and what quantity of arms and ammunition were seized.

Mr. Stanley: Weapons and ammunition recovered by the security forces in Northern Ireland during the period 1 November 1987 to 12 February 1988 and which are believed to belong to Loyalist paramilitary organisations are as follows:

Firearms and Ammunition recovered 1 November 1987 to 12 February 1988 believed to belong to Loyalist paramilitary organisations.

Army Look-out Posts

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Army look-out posts, of the type presently being operated at Drummacavall, Creevekeeran, Glassdrummon and Cloghogue, are sited in each of the constituences of South Down, Fermanagh and South Tyrone, Mid-Ulster, Foyle and East Londonderry.

Mr. Stanley: None.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what how many Army look-out posts, of the type presently being operated at Drummacavall, Creevekeeran, Glassdrummon and Cloghogue, are sited in the constituency of Upper Bann.

Mr. Stanley: None.

Gas Connections

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase the amount of financial assistance given to new Housing Executive tenants for gas connection.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I am informed by the chief executive that the Housing Executive does not give financial assistance to new tenants for gas connection.

Units of Management

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been employed in all the administration and clerical grades in each of the last 10 years in (a) Down unit of management, (b) Newry and Mourne unit of management, in County Down and (c) Banbridge unit of management.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Hospital Casualty Services

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of hospital casualty services in Belfast.

Mr. Needham: The responsibility for managing these services lies in the first instance with the Eastern health and social services board which has only recently issued a consultative document containing proposals to rationalise casualty services. It would therefore not be right for me to comment further at this stage.

Ground Rents

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to bringing forward legislation (a) to abolish ground rents and (b) to allow house owners and tenants to buy ground rents out for a nominal sum.

Mr. Viggers: The subject of ground rents is being considered by the land law working group as part of that body's overall review of the land law of Northern Ireland. The working group produced an interim report on ground rents in 1983 which recommended the prohibition of the future creation of ground rents and a simplified procedure for buying out existing ground rents. The working group's final report is expected to be published later this year and the Government will then give careful consideration to all the recommendations contained in that report in the light of consultations which will follow its publication.

Flats

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost per housing unit for the conversion of the Russell court flats by Belfast Improved Houses; and what was the cost per housing unit of building the Belgravia flats by the Northern Ireland Housing Association.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 February 1988]: Until final accounts in respect of these two schemes have been received it will not be possible to calculate average unit costs precisely. However, based on expenditure to date, average construction and related costs per unit in the Russell court and Belgravia schemes should be in the region of £25,500 and £30,000 respectively.

Castledawson Bypass

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there has been any slippage in the original start date for the Castledawson bypass; what is now the proposed start date; and what is the present estimated cost.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 February 1988]: No start date has ever been announced for the Castledawson by-pass, and at this stage it is not possible to forecast one.

The present estimated cost is £2·5 million.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the same guidelines apply for visits into Northern Ireland for Ministers from the Republic of Ireland as apply to Ministers from other foreign countries; if there has been any change in these guidelines for Irish Ministers since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will publish the details of these guidelines.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 12 February 1988]: No such formal guidelines exist.

TRANSPORT

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the accident statistics for both the north and south-bound carriageways of the M1 between Luton and junction 1, broken down by type of vehicle and month of occurrence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total number of recorded accidents during the years 1985 to 1987 was 290 northbound and 278 southbound. Full details are in the following table:

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles are using the southern end of the M1 from Luton to junction 1, and what is the design capability of the relevant sections of the motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current annual average daily flow of traffic on the M1 between the various junctions is as follows:

	Lanes	Vehicles per day (two way)
Junctions
1-2	D3	42,000
2-4	D3	66,000
4-5	D3	77,000
5-6	D3	69,000
6A-7	N4-S3	127,000
7-8	D4	143,000
8-9	D3	117,000
9-10 (Luton)	D3	105,000

Departmental standards used in the assessment and design of roads give an upper design threshold for a new dual three-lane motorway of 79,000 vehicles per (annual average) day. There is no upper design threshold for dual four-lane motorways. The design flow for any road is less than its maximum capacity and many sections of existing motorway are currently carrying more traffic than the upper design threshold.

M40 Extension

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on 4 February, Official Report, column 683, on the relief to be given by the M40 extension to the M1, what percentage of traffic currently using the M1 he estimates will use the M40.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that between 13,000 and 15,000 vehicles per day will transfer from the M1 to the M40 in the first year after its opening. This would represent between 11 per cent. and 17 per cent. of the total traffic on the M1 between London and the M6 junction.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 1 February 1988 there were 14,492 staff employed in the Department. Eight hundred and twenty three of these work part-time, including job-sharers. Separate figures for job-sharing schemes are not available. Non-industrial staff in central London work 41 hours per week (gross); elsewhere 42 hours. Industrial staff work 44 hours per week, gross. The average weekly hours of part-time staff is 19·7 hours.

Most full-time staff work a five-day week — except those working shifts. Numbers of staff working a four-day week or nine-day fortnight are not readily available.

Flexible working hours agreements operate on a local basis; there are currently some 90 local schemes in operation. Staff are free to participate in them, or not to do so, if they wish. Figures for participants are not held centrally.

All staff are entitled to retire on pension at age 60. Maximum pension rights normally accrue after 40 years' total service. A total of 2,578 of present non-industrial staff would have 40 years' service by age 60. Those with shorter service do, however, have the opportunity to purchase some additional qualifying years for pension purposes. Corresponding figures for industrial staff are not readily available.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place between his Department, the Civil Aviation Authority and the Federal Aviation Administration of the United States of America on the introduction of airline passenger protection smoke hoods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority has statutory responsibility for aviation safety. The authority has told me that the CAA has discussed airline passenger smoke hoods with the FAA during their annual meetings. Discussions have also been held with representatives of the Transport Canada and the French Directorate General for Civil Aviation.

Tristar-Tupolev Air Miss

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the air accidents investigation branch of his Department to report on the circumstances of the air miss between a British Airways Tristar and a Bulgarian Tupolev 154 on Saturday 6 February.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The final report will not be available for some months but relevant implications will be passed to the Civil Aviation Authority, which is wholly responsible for civil aviation safety regulation, as they arise.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has reached his conclusions with regard to surface access to Heathrow, following his consultations on the Howard Humphreys and Partners study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Howard Humphreys and Partners is currently considering the proposals put forward during the consultation period, and is due to make a further report to me shortly. We shall then announce how the project is to be taken forward.

Ryde-Portsmouth Catamaran Service

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any of his Departmental surveyors inspected damage to the hull of the catamaran operating between Ryde and Portsmouth; what information he has as to the existence of any risk to passengers carried on the trip back to Portsmouth after the vessel was damaged; and whether he proposes to conduct any inquiry into the incident or to make any recommendations.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is assumed that the question refers to the incident on 31 January 1988 involving the catamaran ferry Our Lady Pamela. During the passage towards Ryde, heavy seas damaged the decking to the passenger accommodation, between the two hulls. There was some ingress of water—not, however, serious. The master, after personally inspecting the damage, decided that it was safe to complete the passage and then to return to Portsmouth at reduced speed, with the few passengers who were waiting to make the crossing.

Our Lady Pamela was taken out of service on her return to Portsmouth. Surveyors in the marine office, Southampton, investigated the incident and the craft did not resume operations until repairs were completed to their satisfaction. I do not propose any further inquiry into the incident.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons (French Vessels)

6. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart on the use of British ports by French vessels carrying nuclear weapons.

23. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart on the use of British ports by French vessels carrying nuclear weapons.

65. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart on the use of British ports by French vessels carrying nuclear weapons.

98. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart on the use of British ports by French vessels carrying nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None.

Frigates

10. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the number of frigates available for active service when publishing total figures of such vessels.

29. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the number of frigates available for active service when publishing total figures of such vessels.

34. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the number of frigates available for active service when publishing total figures of such vessels.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the number of frigates available for active service when publishing total figures of such vessels.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Following the acceptance into service last Friday of HMS Cornwall, the current total of our destroyers and frigates is 49, of which 42 are available for operational deployment immediately or within a short period.

WE-177 Nuclear Bomb

15. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the replacement of the WE-177 nuclear bomb.

42. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the replacement of the WE-177 nuclear bomb.

47. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the replacement of the WE-177 nuclear bomb.

95. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the replacement of the WE-177 nuclear bomb.

Mr. Younger: Some technical studies in this area have been and are being carried out. However, no decisions on a possible replacement have yet been taken.

Joint Projects

16. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of defence projects in which the United Kingdom and France are currently engaged in joint research, development or procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Britain and France fully support the initiatives of the Independent European Programme Group aimed at enhancing collaboration in defence research, and both countries are participating in efforts to launch 14 such projects with a variety of other partners. In development we are jointly participating in the RTM322 helicopter engine programme, and both countries participate with a variety of other partners in 13 other major development programmes.

Dog Training

17. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the future arrangements for dog training at the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire.

Mr. Freeman: Peat Marwick McLintock has been awarded a consultancy contract to cost the various options for dog training in the armed services and to recommend the most suitable arrangements for the future. The study started at the beginning of January 1988. The report is expected in the early summer.

TAVR (National Employer Liaison Committee)

18. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve national employer liaison committee.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1986 the Department has accepted a number of the committee's recommendations on the recruitment, conditions of service, training and organisation of TA officers and men. A number of other recommendations remain under consideration, notably a plan for a wide-ranging press and TV campaign to be undertaken to enlist further support from young people and employers. This proposal remains under consideration along with other measures for inclusion in the Department's programme and we hope to make a decision shortly.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces Agreement

19. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has made any further studies of the implications for the defence of Britain of the intermediate nuclear forces agreement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: NATO is still considering the force adjustments which might be required as a result of the elimination of GLCMs and Pershing missiles from Europe. No decisions have yet been taken.

Multiple Launch Rocket System

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is planned that a nuclear warhead will be developed for the multiple launch rocket system.

35. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is planned that a nuclear warhead will be developed for the multiple launch rocket system.

68. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is planned that a nuclear warhead will be developed for the multiple launch rocket system.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on Friday 19 February at column 757.

Nuclear Strategy

21. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the French Government regarding nuclear strategy.

94. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the French Government regarding nuclear strategy.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond).

39. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the West German Government regarding nuclear strategy.

46. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the West German Government regarding nuclear strategy.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short).

Air-Sea Rescue Services

22. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet completed his consideration of privatisation of air-sea rescue services.

40. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet completed his consideration of privatisation of air-sea rescue services.

41. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet completed his consideration of privatisation of air-sea rescue services.

90. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet completed his consideration of privatisation of air-sea rescue services.

Mr. Freeman: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced in this House on 11 February, we have decided that, wherever there is a military requirement for search and rescue, the service will continue to be provided by the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force.

Our consideration of the most effective deployment of our military search and rescue helicopters continues, and we shall announce the outcome as soon as possible.

32. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to give a decision on the proposals by Bristow Helicopters Ltd. to take over the search-and-rescue units currently operated by the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy.

Mr. Freeman: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced in this House on 11 February, we have decided that, wherever there is a military requirement for search and rescue, the service will continue to be provided by the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. Our consideration of the most effective deployment of our military search and rescue helicopters continues, and we shall announce the outcome as soon as possible.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends that the helicopters presently deployed at RAF Leuchars, for search and rescue operations, should be replaced by more modern equipment.

Mr. Freeman: Studies are continuing into the deployment of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force helicopters for search and rescue requirements. The results will be announced shortly.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours have been flown by each of the helicopters deployed at RAF Leuchars for search and rescue operations.

Mr. Freeman: During their time in service with the Royal Air Force, the helicopters currently deployed to RAF Leuchars for search and rescue (SAR) operations have flown 8,744 hours and 6,046 hours respectively (as of 19 February 1988). It is not possible to state precisely the proportion of time these have spent on SAR operations, but on average, Royal Air Force helicopters assigned to SAR operations in the United Kingdom fly for 470 hours each year, including training.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the dates of manufacture and of coming into service of all the helicopters deployed at RAF Leuchars for search and rescue operations.

Mr. Freeman: The in-service dates of the two aircraft currently deployed at RAF Leuchars are 1964 and 1968 respectively. The precise dates of manufacture are not readily available.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many helicopters, and of what make and type, are deployed at RAF Leuchars for search and rescue operations.

Mr. Freeman: Two Westland mark 2 Wessex helicopters.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to conclude current discussions on the future of air-sea rescue services.

Mr. Freeman: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, announced in the House on 11 February, we have decided that, wherever there is a military requirement for search and rescue, the service will continue to be provided by the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. Our consideration of the most effective deployment of our military search and rescue helicopters continues, and we shall announce the outcome as soon as possible.

Pilots

24. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current ratio of pilots entering training to those leaving the forces prematurely.

52. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current ratio of pilots entering training to those leaving the forces prematurely.

71. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current ratio of pilots entering training to those leaving the forces prematurely.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987 the ratio of students entering training as pilots to trained pilots leaving the services prematurely was approximately 2.2: 1. This ratio is derived from numbers of entries to and exits from the Royal Navy, the Royal Air Force and the Army Air Corps.

87. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current ratio of pilots entering training to those leaving the forces prematurely.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987 the ratio of students entering training as pilots to trained pilots leaving the services permanently was approximately 1.3: 1. The ratio is derived from numbers of entries to and exits from the Royal Navy, the Royal Air Force, and the Army Air Corps.

Nuclear Weapons

25. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the number and nature of nuclear weapons accidents or systems malfunctions.

67. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the number and nature of nuclear weapons accidents or systems malfunctions.

92. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the number and nature of nuclear weapons accidents or systems malfunctions.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise).

80. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the extent to which the new generation of nuclear weapons will have a lower threshold of use.

85. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the extent to which the new generation of nuclear weapons will have a lower threshold of use.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The British Government, like their NATO allies, remain firmly committed to nuclear deterrence and to the strategy of flexible response. Our policy is to ensure that deterrence is sufficiently effective to prevent any need for present nuclear weapons or future ones ever to be used. No change in strategy is contemplated which would increase the likelihood of nuclear weapons being used. In order to maintain deterrence at the minimum forces necessary, the Alliance must maintain nuclear forces which are effective, responsive and survivable.

Nuclear Test Veterans (Compensation)

26. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposed compensation to ex-service men following the recent report on United Kingdom nuclear test veterans.

28. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposed compensation to ex-service men following the recent report on United Kingdom nuclear test veterans.

30. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposed compensation to ex-service men following the recent report on United Kingdom nuclear test veterans.

93. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposed compensation to ex-service men following the recent report on United Kingdom nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: The National Radiological Protection Board published a study on the health of British nuclear tests veterans on 28 January. In the light of the conclusions of that study, which I set out in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 28 January at column 309, the Ministry of Defence does not consider there is any basis for claims for common law compensation for damage to health from exposure to ionising radiation arising from participation in the British nuclear test programme. Claims for war pensions are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

59. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the effect of nuclear weapons testing upon ex-service men who served in previous contaminated areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the report published by the National Radiological Protection Board on 28 January, which I referred to in my answer on 28 January, at column 309, to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key).

61. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the case of a judicial inquiry following the report of the National Radiological Protection Board on the incidence of cancer amongst ex-service men involved in nuclear tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement met a deputation of right hon. and hon. Members and two officers of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on 16 February, at which this proposition was raised. My noble Friend made it clear that we do not consider that a judicial inquiry would be appropriate or would serve any useful purpose in this case particularly in view of the National Radiological Protection Board's recently published study.

Frigate Building Programme

27. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the frigate building programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since the answer I gave on 26 January, at columns 181-82, the type 22 frigate, HMS Cornwall was delivered to Portsmouth by her builders, Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd., on 19 February.

Nuclear Modernisation (Conference)

31. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which representatives of his Department attended the Wehrkunde conference discussions on nuclear modernisation.

36. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which representatives of his Department attended the Wehrkunde conference discussions on nuclear modernisation.

37. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which representatives of his Department attended the Wehrkunde conference discussions on nuclear modernisation.

83. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which representatives of his Department attended the Wehrkunde conference discussions on nuclear modernisation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The theme of this year's Wehrkunde conference was United States-Soviet disarmament negotiations and their consequences. I attended, together with the permanent under-secretary of state (designate) and the deputy under-secretary of state (policy).

Trident

33. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the safety of the Trident missile programme of the recent test firing of a Trident 2 missile at Cape Canaveral.

57. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the safety of the Trident missile programme of the recent test firing of a Trident 2 missile at Cape Canaveral.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

38. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated cost of the Trident missile project to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 21 January, at column 775, the currently estimated total cost of the United Kingdom Trident programme is £9,043 million (at 1987-88 prices and £1=$1·62). Actual expenditure to the end of December 1987 was £1,370 million.

81. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: In total, fewer than 20 representations concerning the progress of the Trident programme have been received from members of the public since the general election.

Conventional Defence Improvement Initiative

43. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in the conventional defence improvement initiative.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The conventional defence improvements exercise, which is fully supported by the United Kingdom, was reviewed by NATO Defence Ministers at their December meeting. Ministers welcomed the progress made in addressing key deficiencies in NATO's defence posture.

Military Personnel (Training)

44. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what countries are currently receiving help or advice on the training of military personnel from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The countries which have received military training from the United Kingdom, either through United Kingdom training courses or the loan of service personnel to their particular Governments, in the current financial year are as follows:

Algeria
Australia
Austria
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana

Nuclear Weapons (Modernisation)

45. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had about plans for the modernisation of short-range and of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in western Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has frequent meetings with his NATO colleagues during which a wide range of issues affecting the defence and security of the Alliance are discussed, including the need to maintain effective nuclear forces.

Staff Dispersal

48. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current plans for relocation (a) within Greater London and (b) elsewhere of units of his Department.

49. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current plans for relocation (a) within Greater London and (b) elsewhere of units of his Department.

76. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current plans for relocation (a) within Greater London and (b) elsewhere of units of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith).

97. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many divisions within his Department have been relocated out of London since 1979; what plans he has for further relocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to provide this information without undue cost and effort. However, the Glasgow dispersal programme has resulted in 1,330 jobs moving to Scotland and will meet its 1,400 target later this year. The overall number of civilian employees in London has fallen by over 10,000 since 1979, though this reduction also reflects the continuing search for efficiency and economy in the Department.

Future relocation possibilities will continue to be examined; but moves must be justifiable in both operational and economic terms.

AWRE Aldermaston

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and when he expects it to be ready for production.

63. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and when he expects it to be ready for production.

82. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and when he expects it to be ready for production.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answers I have recently given to the hon. Members for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 January 1988, at column 763, and for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 1 February 1988, column 446.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and when he expects it to be ready for production.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I have recently given to the hon. Members for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 January 1988, at column 763 and for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 1 February 1988, at column 446.

Tucano Aircraft

51. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the introduction of Short's Tucano into Royal Air Force service.

89. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the introduction of Short's Tucano into Royal Air Force service.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) and for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes).

"Discriminate Deterrence" (Report)

53. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom nuclear weapons policy of the United States Department of Defence report "Discriminate Deterrence."

54. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom nuclear weapons policy of the United States Department of Defence report "Discriminate Deterrence."

86. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom nuclear weapons policy of the United States Department of Defence report "Discriminate Deterrence."

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Commission on Integrated Long-Term Strategy, which produced the report entitled "Discriminate Deterrence", is independent of the United States Department of Defence. It remains the British Government's view that the NATO strategy of flexible response provides the best basis for Alliance security.

Jet Provost

55. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of maintaining the Jet Provost planes in operation.

56. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of maintaining the Jet Provost planes in operation.

96. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of maintaining the Jet Provost planes in operation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

Polaris

58. Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent arrangements Her Majesty's Government have entered into with the United States Government governing the use of Polaris.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None.

Northern Ireland

60. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the operations of the armed forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Military operations in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary carried out by the armed forces continue to make an invaluable contribution to the fight against terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Following a review by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland of the deployment of security forces in the Province, a new brigade headquarters is to be established to improve anti-terrorist operations and patrolling in the border areas, leaving the existing two brigades responsible for supporting the police in the rest of the Province.

74. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the conditions in which soldiers are billetted in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: Some of the accommodation for the Army's permanent garrison in Northern Ireland is not up to modern standards, and a modernisation programme is in hand. However, certain accommodation which is below the normal scaled provision has been provided specifically for personnel on short tours of duty. Single men serving in Northern Ireland pay no accommodation charges and charges for married quarters are abated by the single quartering charge appropriate to rank.

Dual-Capable Aircraft

62. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft types there are in the Royal Air Force currently classified as dual-capable.

73. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft types there are in the Royal Air Force currently classified as dual-capable.

88. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft types there are in the Royal Air Force currently classified as dual-capable.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes).

Nuclear Forces (Modernisation)

64. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on developments in modernisation of nuclear forces.

99. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the programme to modernise NATO nuclear forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 24 March 1987 at column 162 and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 26 January 1988 at column 167.

Departmental Land

66. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land in the United Kingdom is owned by his Department; and what were the comparable figures five, 10 and 15 years ago.

Mr. Freeman: As at 1 October in each of the years requested, MOD land holdings (freehold and leasehold) were as follows:

	Acres
1987	592,537
1982	609,908
1977	623,245
1972	656,634

Western European Union

69. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to meet representatives of the Western European Union; whether he supports enlargement of the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement on the defence implications of such enlargement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State next plans to meet his WEU colleagues in The Hague on 18-19 April. All member countries have agreed that the WEU is not a closed shop, but that any enlargement should strengthen, not jeopardise, its cohesion. We would therefore expect any new members to accept and give concrete expression to the obligations of both the Brussels treaty and the WEU's platform on European security interests, agreed by WEU Ministers at their meeting in The Hague last October.

Personnel Training (Fatalities)

70. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have died in service in the past 10 years as a result of training.

Mr. Freeman: The number of service personnel who have died in service in each of the last 10 years, as a result of training, is as follows:

Year	Number
1978	55
1979	32
1980	38
1981	25
1982	33
1983	32
1984	29
1985	29
1986	30
[1]1987	29

[1] Provisional figures only.

Cruise Missiles

72. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to permit the basing of air-launched cruise missiles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I cannot add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member on 26 January 1988 at column 155.

French Defence Minister (Co-operation)

75. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on co-operation with the French Minister of Defence on nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 18 December 1987 at column 752.

Marconi (Contracts)

77. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of Government defence contracts placed with Marconi over the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The overall value of contracts placed by my Department with the Marconi group of companies over the past five years is approximately £2·5 billion.

European Fighter Aircraft

78. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects the European fighter aircraft to enter service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 8 December at column 142.

Racism (Armed Forces)

79. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further action he is taking to eliminate racism in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 February 1988, at column 82. Any complaint of racial discrimination brought by a member of the armed forces would be fully investigated under redress of grievance procedures provided for in the Service Discipline Acts. If proven, appropriate action would be taken against those involved.

Warsaw Pact

84. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation country counterparts on a draft mandate for negotiations on conventional stability between the members of the Alliance and the Warsaw pact; what is the date for convening of negotiations; and if he will make a statement on the implications for United Kingdom defence expenditure.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has regular discussions, which must remain confidential, with his NATO colleagues on a wide range of issues, including arms control. We hope that the proposed talks on conventional stability will begin this autumn. It would be premature to speculate on what the outcome of the talks might be or on the possible implications for United Kingdom defence expenditure.

Land Disposal

91. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will speed up the disposal of surplus Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Freeman: It is MOD policy to keep its property holdings under review and to dispose of any properties for which there is no longer a defence requirement. We have a major disposal programme in hand and in the year ending 31 March 1987 we disposed of property worth about £75 million. We hope to do at least as well this year, and even better next year.

Sentries

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to ensure that sentries on duty outside the royal palaces and royal residences, and their horses, are not subjected to unpleasant attentions from tourists and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 19 February.

Arms Control

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much time has been spent by arms control officials in his Department on work specifically relating to naval arms control during the last six months.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence does not record the time spent by officials on particular arms control issues.

Naval Operations

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what studies his Department has undertaken on the probability of forward naval operations during a time of heightened international tension, or during a war; if he will list the scenarios considered in any such studies; and if he will place a copy of such studies in the Library;

(2) if the Royal Navy has prepared any plans for attacks against Soviet ballistic missile submarines stationed in the Barent and Norwegian seas for use in the event of war.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The tasks of the Royal Navy in tension and war are described in paragraphs 404 to 406 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987". My Department carries out a continuous programme of studies into the conduct of those tasks, but, in accordance with the practice of successive Governments, I am not generally prepared to disclose details of operational plans.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had discussions with his counterpart in the United States about United States naval plans contained in the United States maritime strategy, which calls for major forward naval operations to be undertaken against Soviet ballistic missile submarines in the Barent and Norwegian seas in the event of war.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly holds discussions with the United States Secretary of State for Defence on a wide range of defence matters of mutual interest. It is not our general practice to disclose the details of such discussions.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if British nuclear submarines have exercised during the last five years in support of United States naval vessels practising the naval operations called for by the United States maritime strategy, including exercises against simulated Soviet ballistic missile submarines.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Royal navy nuclear-powered submarines regularly exercise with the navies of the United States and other NATO allies to practise their NATO wartime roles.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Authorities (Administration)

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual administration cost of the North West Thames regional health authority and of the North East Thames regional health authority since 1979.

Mr Newton: The following information is derived from the annual accounts of health authorities comprising the North West Thames and North East Thames regions it would be misleading to interpret regional health authority data in isolation from that for the districts they manage. Regions are managed in an integrated way and, therefore, to provide a more accurate picture, regional health authority and district health authority figures have been combined.

Expenditure on headquarters administration[1]

£ thousands

	Regional Health Authority	District Health Authorities[2]	Total
North West Thames Region
1979-80	3,356	22,747	26,103
1980-81	4,096	28,413	32,509

[1] Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at regional and district/area headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of secretarial and clerical support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.

[2] Predecessor area health authorities for the years prior to NHS restructuring (1 April 1982).

[3] Prior to 1 April 1985 many of the district/area health authorities within each region had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC) and those authorities' expenditure figures for the years before that date include elements relating to FPCs' administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

National Insurance

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how long it would take for (a) a married man, (b) a single man and (c) a single woman, all of whom retired on 31 December 1987, all of whom started work at the age of 16 years and all of whom were on the average national wage throughout their working life, to get back by way of retirement pension all the money they had paid in national insurance contributions, assuming that the current basic pension remains constant.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table. Line 1 represents the time taken to recover in retirement pension the whole cash value of employee national insurance contributions paid by a man or woman on average manual earnings, if the whole NI contribution allocated to benefit purposes is assumed to be available for the purpose. Line 2 assumes that only the share of NI contributions required to fund retirement pensions is available for the purpose. The figures for a married man include pension paid to his wife on his contribution record.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in the number of beds in Northumberland district health authority for each year since 1982, including whatever data are available for 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table. Over the period the number of in-patient cases treated increased by 11 per cent. from 24,973 to 27,713 and the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed increased by 23 per cent. from 6·5 to 8·0

Community Care

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards elderly patients discharged from National Health Service hospital to be cared for in the community, either in a residential home at their own cost or with relatives, who refuse to enter a home or where the relatives refuse to care for them.

Mrs. Currie: The objective of all services for elderly patients must be to provide the right care to meet the individual's needs. The decision on whether and when a patient is ready for discharge is for the clinical judgment of the doctor in charge of the case, but we would expect the planning of the discharge to be based on co-operation between all the professions involved. We would also expect there to be a multi-disciplinary assessment of future care needs, involving both the patient and his or her family. The Department is currently working on a draft circular setting out the requirements for discharge and the planning to be undertaken.

The provision of good services depends on effective co-operation at the local level between the different professions, the patient and his or her family and, where appropriate, the local authority, voluntary agencies and the private sector. If a need for residential care is assessed, the local authority has a general duty, under part III of the National Assistance Act 1948, to provide residential care where this is not otherwise available.

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the requirements for claimants of community care grants to give information on their social worker to his Department; and what kind of information social workers will be required to provide for his Department.

Mr. Scott: Applicants for community care grants are not obliged to give information on their social worker nor is there any requirement that social workers must provide information to the social fund officer. Social workers will not be asked to make decisions on applications nor to assess priorities between individual clients—that is for the social fund officer. Social fund officers may contact social workers with the agreement of an applicant but this will be done, subject to strict confidentiality rules, solely to clarify or supplement information in cases where the social services are also involved, for example on resettlement into the community.

Mastectomy

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mastectomies were performed in England and Wales for (a) female patients and (b) male patients in the latest two-month period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. Statistics in respect of the last complete year for which information is available are given in the table. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Estimated number of mastectomies performed in NHS hospitals, by sex In-patients and day cases combined, England 1985

	Estimated Numbers
	Male	Female
Partial Mastectomy[1]	730	35,630
Total Mastectomy	670	9,290
All Mastectomies	1,400	44,920

[1] Includes all excisions of breast tissue, local or otherwise (for example, removal of lumps and cysts), whether for malignant or benign conditions.

Hospital Referrals

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to rates of patient referral to hospitals by different general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: While there has been some basic research into general practitioners' referral rates, no data are held centrally on rates of patient referral by different doctors.

Rates (Cleveland)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much he estimates the rates bill borne by his Department in Cleveland will be increased in money terms, consequent upon the increase in rates determined by Cleveland county council for 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that any increase in the rates level in Cleveland for 1988-89 and, hence, the cost to this Department, has not yet been finally determined.

Royal Victoria Hospital (Newcastle)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultants are employed in the department of ophthalmology at the Royal Victoria hospital at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and what was the number five years ago.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of Newcastle district health authority for the information he requires.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he is taking to assess the effectiveness of the Government's publicity campaign against drug misuse.

Mrs. Currie: Each stage of the anti-drugs campaign in the mass media has been carefully developed to ensure credibility and effectiveness, through interviews with young people, and testing of ideas and creative materials on representatives of the target audience. The campaign has also been evaluated through a series of surveys of young people and parents.

A report of the most recent survey findings, a copy of which is available in the Library, shows that the 1986-87 stage of the campaign was very widely noticed across all media, with radio commercials having been particularly successful at reaching large numbers of young people. Awareness of the health risks of using heroin was broadly sustained, while there was an increase in awareness of adverse social consequences, particularly in the belief that heroin makes the user lose interest in the opposite sex. Overall, claimed resistance to trying heroin or cocaine remains high, with 93 per cent. of those interviewed in each case claiming that they would definitely not try the drug if offered it by a friend.

The 1987-88 stage of the campaign will be evaluated at the start of 1988, and results should be available in the spring.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, assuming a continuation of the current rate at which abortion is performed, he will give an estimate of the total number of abortions which will have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 by the 20th anniversary of the implementation of that Act.

Mr. Newton: The total number of notifications of abortions to resident and non-resident women, which will have been carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, from 27 April 1968 to 31 March 1988 in England and Wales is estimated at 2,648,000, assuming a continuation of the current rate at which abortions are performed. This estimate does not take into account any seasonal variation, nor other changes which may affect the numbers of notifications.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by district health authority of the average number of abortions performed in that district on each working day of the latest year for which figures are available, in (a) National Health Service hospitals, (b) private clinics and (c) in total.

Mr. Newton: No, for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother; and what is the latter figure expressed as a percentage of the former.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table, including all notifications received by 30 September 1987.

Total number of notifications of abortions performed under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, and the number performed under Ground 5 of the Act, England and Wales, residents and non-residents

Ground 5 of the 1967 Abortion Act states that abortions may be performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, since the passage of the Act; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother; and what is the latter figure expressed as a percentage of the former.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, statistics already available are as follows: Between 1 January 1981 and 30 June 1987, 53,682 notifications were received of abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation. Of these, 15 (0·028 per cent.) were carried out in emergency in order to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown, by regional health authority in England and Wales, of the total number of abortions so far performed under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, stating in each case how many of the abortions in each region were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother; and if in each case he will express the latter figure as a percentage of the former.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the tables. The pre-1974 hospital regions are not, with the exception of Wales and Birmingham (which became West Midlands), precisely the same geographical areas as the post-1974 regional health authorities. The data for the two groups of areas are thus presented separately.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown, by regional health authority, using his estimate of the cost of an abortion in the answer of 26 October 1987, Official Report, column 178, of the total cost to the National Health Service of all the abortions performed in that region both in National Health Service facilities and through agency arrangements, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Newton: The estimated total revenue cost of abortions performed in each regional health authority area in 1986, including abortions performed in NHS facilities and through agency arrangements, on the basis requested is as follows:

Regional Health Authority of Termination	Estimated Total Cost £
Northern	911,370

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to prevent the use of National Health Service resources for the termination of pregnancy in cases where the abortion is not performed for health reasons;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to make it an offence to receive payment for the performing of an abortion or for referring a woman for an abortion.

Mr. Newton: As my hon. Friend is aware, the Government's general policy is that legislation on abortion is for the initiative of private Members.

Health Authorities (Population)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the estimated population for each of the last 10 years for (a) the South West Thames regional health authority area, (b) the North West Thames regional health authority area, (c) Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton district health authority area and (d) Hounslow and Spelthorne district health authority area; and what estimates are available for the future.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information is given in the table. Population projections based upon the mid 1985 estimates have been produced for each year up to 2010. The projected figures for a selection of years are given in the table.

Elderly People (Care)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage change in Department of Health and Social Security payments made in respect of people in private residential care homes or nursing homes for the elderly, since 1979 and in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. Information on expenditure for all client groups was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 17 December 1987 at column 704. In that reply I gave the percentage change in expenditure since 1979 as 4,580 per cent. This should have been 4,490 per cent. Between 1984 and 1986 the increase was 129·5 per cent.

Hospital Admissions (West Midlands)

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order of frequency the 10 most common forms of surgery for which patients are admitted to hospitals in the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Regional Health Authorities (Allocations)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the allocation to each regional health authority in each year since 1982-83, adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and price deflator.

Mr. Newton: The table shows net revenue expenditure by each region in each year between 1982-83 and 1986-87 at 1986-87 prices as measured by the hospital and community health services pay and price deflator. Comparable figures for 1987-88 will not be available until after the end of the financial year.

Pensions

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many new applications for pensions have been made as a result of the publication by Thames Television of Paul Lewis's pamphlet, entitled "Pensions from the 1940s", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Shropshire Health Authority

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the capital expenditure on administrative buildings of the Shropshire health authority for 1986-87 and the figures projected in its capital expenditure programme.

Mrs. Currie: The 1986-87 annual accounts of the Shropshire health authority show capital expenditure relevant to administrative offices of the authority as £99,421. This sum represents about 1 per cent. of the year's total capital expenditure incurred on schemes within the district (£8·65 million) which is recorded mainly in the annual accounts of the West Midlands regional health authority.

For more detailed information and projected figures my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the Shropshire health authority, who may be able to assist.

Interpreters

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision there is for full-time interpreters (a) at his Department's office in Manningham lane, Bradford, and (b) at other offices of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: As an experiment, an existing member of staff at Bradford (West) local office has acted as a full-time interpreter and liaison officer to the local Asian community. This has been a successful venture and we are considering whether it can be extended to similar offices in other parts of the country.

Social Fund Forms

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provisions have been made for social fund application forms to be available in languages other than in English.

Mr. Portillo: Claim forms for the social fund, in common with other social security claim forms, will be available only in English, apart from the customary separate provision for Welsh speakers in Wales.

Funeral Costs

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the maximum grant or loan paid to applicants in respect of funeral costs after April 1988; and what will be the maximum period over which loans will have to be repaid.

Mr. Portillo: Regulations provide for a funeral payment from the social fund to cover the essential expenses of certain prescribed items commensurate with a simple funeral. After April 1988 provision will continue as before April, except that the claimant or his partner must be in receipt of income support or family credit (which replace supplementary benefit and family income supplement respectively), or housing benefit. The claimant or a member of his family must be responsible for the costs of a funeral but any payment made is recoverable from the estate of the deceased only if there is sufficient money in the estate once it is settled.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria will be used to decide whether an applicant receives a grant or a loan to meet the funeral costs of a relative or close friend; how quickly decisions will be given on such applications; and whether there will be a right of appeal against refusal to make a grant or loan.

Mr. Portillo: Regulations [The Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Regulations 1987] prescribe the criteria for payment of funeral costs. The claimant or member of his family must be responsible for the funeral costs and the claimant or partner must be in receipt of certain qualifying income-related benefits. Capital over £500 held by the claimant and partner is taken into account in assessing the amount payable, as is other money available for funeral costs such as contributions from relatives or insurance settlements. Decisions are made by adjudication officers as soon as possible and are subject to appeal, in the first instance to a social security appeal tribunal.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single childless people under the age of 25 years are on the householder rate of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Portillo: At February 1986, the latest date for which the information is available, the number was 129,000.

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the total cost of compensating claimants on (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) housing benefit for the 20 per cent. contribution to domestic rates following the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of additional public expenditure costs in 1988-89 are as follows:

(a)	280
(b)	25
(c)	64
Total	369

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much he estimates the case load for housing benefit will increase as a consequence of the proposals to deregulate the private rented sector in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to make such estimates with any degree of precision.

Health Authorities (Amalgamation)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has taken a decision on the proposal submitted to him by the North West Thames regional health authority to amalgamate the district health authorities of Brent and Paddington and North Kensington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have today approved this proposal and am arranging for orders to be laid before Parliament. We are proposing that the new authority will come into being on 1 April 1988 and will be called the Parkside health authority.

In view of the comments made on the consultation document issued last autumn I am writing to the regional chairman indicating areas to which I wish special attention to be paid. A number of respondents drew attention to the problems posed to the City of Westminster by the configuration of health authority boundaries in this part of inner London. I think that it is important to try and find a solution to these difficulties, and I have therefore asked the chairmen of NE and NW Thames regional health authorities to see what might be done.

Manchester Royal Eye Hospital

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made since the oral reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, from the Minister for Health on 16 December 1987, Official Report, column 1097, towards the institution of a day case cataract unit at the Manchester royal eye hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 17 February 1988]: I understand that the Central Manchester health authority is discussing proposals for the unit with the regional health authority.

Medical Equipment (Maintenance)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library the report on in-house maintenance of medical equipment in the National Health Service, compiled by David Fernandez; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library. The report makes a number of useful recommendations on which action has been proceeding. Some of the recommendations relating to the allocation of responsibilities for equipment management and to the commercial arrangements for maintenance contracts need further examination and in some cases more detailed development of guidelines. Work is continuing under the direction of the director of NHS procurement.

Cervical Cancer Smear Tests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many laboratories in the United Kingdom deal with cervical cancer smear tests; and what are their locations.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The available information for NHS laboratories in England is given in the table. Figures for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average period of time which each laboratory in the United Kingdom takes to send the results of cervical cancer smear tests back to patients.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I regret that this information is not held centrally in the form requested. According to Health Circular (88)1 published on 12 January, the target for laboratories is that they should aim to send the result of a cervical smear to the doctor who submitted it within a maximum of one month of receiving it. Health authorities in England reported that in December laboratories serving 56 out of 191 districts were not achieving the target. The average processing time for these 56 districts was seven weeks. Where backlogs do exist they are being tackled mainly by the recruitment and training of more staff, by the use of other laboratories and by overtime working.

Orthotists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a decision on his Department's report on the training and provision of orthotists in the National Health Service; what is his policy on the provision of additional orthotists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 22 February 1988]: There is no departmental report on this. Training of orthotists is a matter for the Orthotic and Prosthetic Training Council. I understand that the council's joint assessment panel has established a working party to consider the future of education and training. It is expected to present its final report to the council in March. Recruitment of NHS orthotists is a matter for individual health authorities. A small departmental team has undertaken a study of the arrangement for the delivery of the orthotics service, its efficiency and efficacy. Its report which considers management rather than manpower issues, is now being finalised.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education for Mutual Understanding Project

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the education for mutual understanding project, in the light of the delay in granting maintained status to fully integrated schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: In addition to various initiatives designed to improve cross-community contacts I am continuing my support for the education for mutual understanding project under the auspices of the Northern Ireland Council for Educational Development. Work on an EMU guideline for teachers is at an advanced stage and should be published in time for the start of the 1988-89 academic year.

The operation of this project has no relationship to the granting of maintained status to integrated independent schools. In order to achieve this status, these schools must be able to prove their future viability.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Stanley: There are some 23,800 non-industrial civil servants employed in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments (excluding prison officer grades). The normal conditioned hours are 41 hours a week for staff in London and 42 for staff in Belfast inclusive of meal breaks.

Taking each of the elements (a) to (d) in the hon. Member's question in turn:

(a) about 12,300 staff work flexitime;

(b) 64 staff participate in job-sharing schemes;

(c) three staff are working a four-day week, but none works a nine-day fortnight; and

(d) information about the number of staff who would be able to accrue 40 years' reckonable service for pension purposes by the age of 60 is not readily available.

Children

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the number of four-year-olds in Northern Ireland, the number of three-year-olds and the proportion of the population which is under five years old.

Mr. Needham: The latest available figures, taken from the 1986 mid-year population estimates, are as follows:

	Number
Four-year-olds	26,594
Three-year-olds	26,753
Under five years old	[1]8·7

[1] Percentage of the population.

Children (Education)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what figures are available to indicate the numbers of four-year-olds in Northern Ireland who attend (a) nursery education, (b) pre-school playgroups or (c) primary school;

(2) what figures are available to indicate the numbers of three-year-olds in Northern Ireland who attend (a) nursery education, (b) pre-school playgroups or (c) primary school.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is as follows:

Numbers of three and four-year-olds in education in 1986-87

	Age three		Age four
	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time
Nursery schools	1,232	1,464	1,321	715
Nursery classes in primary schools	1,017	361	783	215
Primary schools (primary classes only)	106	—	16,859	—

The information on pre-school playgroups is not available in the form requested. However, at 30 June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the total number of children under five years of age who attended pre-school playgroups, including playbuses, was 12,954.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the proportion of three-year-olds in Northern Ireland (a) in single parent families, (b) whose parents are unemployed and (c) whose parents receive family income supplement.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available. However the proportion of three-year-olds in families receiving one parent benefit is approximately one in 17 of all three-year-old children in families receiving child benefit.

Public Expenditure Commentary

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the Northern Ireland public expenditure commentary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The "Northern Ireland Commentary on Public Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office. This is the first Northern Ireland commentary and it aims to improve the information available to Parliament and the public by amplifying the material in the Northern Ireland chapter of "The Government's Expenditure plans 1988-89 to 1990-91". (Cm. 288-II).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been taken and convictions made under the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, section 1.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records of court proceedings held centrally.

Licensed Premises

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions to date have arisen under the Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information held centrally, which may be incomplete, is given in the table.

Persons proceeded against and found guilty under s.2 of the Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980
England and Wales

Year	Number of persons
	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty
1981	1	—
1982	9	9
1983	3	3

Police Pensions

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to rescind regulation C5 of the Police Pensions Regulations 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Regulation C5 provides for the payment of modified pension benefits to the widow of a police officer who marries in retirement, on the basis of service after 6 April 1978. To extend the provisions to cover service before that date would breach the important principle that improvements in public service pension entitlements are not made retrospectively.

Immigration (Child Benefit)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether child benefit is treated as support from public funds for the purposes of the immigration rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. The definition of "public funds" in the immigration rules deals with access only to those benefits that are means tested and non-contributory.

London (Crime Trends)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the trends in crime in London in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: I am very pleased to note that the Metropolitan police recorded 4 per cent. fewer crimes in 1987 than in 1986. The falls of 7 per cent. in theft of and from cars and 4 per cent. in burglary are an indication of what is possible and lend support to the efforts to persuade the public to take crime prevention measures. The drop of 11 per cent. in recorded rape offences is also encouraging. We are of course concerned about the increases in robbery (up 12 per cent.) and in violence against the person (up 11 per cent.), and we fully support the Commissioner's policy of concentrating resources on these types of crime.

Terrorism

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown by nationalities of people currently held under section 12 or section 13 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, or articles 4 or 9 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Order 1984;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown by nationalities of people currently held under section 12 or section 13 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, or articles 4 or 9 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Order 1984.

Mr. Hurd: On 23 February 1988 no one was detained in Great Britain under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 or the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplemental Temporary Provisions) Order 1984. Examinations at ports under article 4 of the order are recorded only where a person is examined for more than one hour. On 23 February 1988 no one was examined for more than one hour.

Crime (International Co-operation)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to furthering mutual assistance in criminal matters between the United Kingdom and other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: At present the United Kingdom can provide only limited assistance to other countries in the investigation and prosecution of criminal offences. Unlike most other European states, we are not a party to any treaties or conventions establishing mutual assistance arrangements of wide scope. The assistance we receive from other countries is inevitably limited by our inability to offer them the full assistance which we would wish. The nature of much crime — terrorism, drugs, fraud, kidnapping, racketeering and so on — has become increasingly international and we must play our part in combating it.

In November 1986 my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary set up an interdepartmental group of officials to review the position. They have concluded that there are strong arguments in favour of legislation which would enable us to accede to the European convention on mutual assistance, implement the scheme relating to mutual assistance in criminal matters within the Commonwealth adopted at Harare in 1986, and enter into bilateral arrangements of a similar nature. Their proposals are outlined in a discussion paper which has been issued today. Copies have been sent to a wide range of interested organisations, and I have placed a copy in the Library. The Government would welcome the views of hon. Members and others on the group's proposals, and we shall be glad to receive comments by 30 April.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Wines and Spirits

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has to the current price of wines and spirits in the European Economic Community and the level of duty imposed on them; and what equivalent information he has for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: Information on prices of wines and spirits in the EC member states is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Rates of excise duties and VAT in each of the member states, according to the latest information available, are set out in the table:

Country	Wine Excise Duties		Vat	Excise Duty	Spirits VAT
	Table wine not exceeding 12 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 70 cl bottle)	Fortified wine at 18 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 75 cl bottle)		Spirits at 40 per cent. alcohol by volume (pence per 75 cl bottle)
			Per cent.		Per cent.
Belgium	17	33	25	273	25
Denmark	78	154	22	[1]956	22
France	2	93	18·6	233	18·6
Germany	0	26	14	258	14
Greece	0	1	6	8	[2]6,16
Ireland	125	194	25	524	25
Italy	0	7	9	47	18
Luxembourg	[3]0·7	[4]15,22	[5]6,12	183	12
Netherlands	17	34	20	285	20
Portugal	0	0	[6]8,17	43	[7]17,30
Spain	0	0	12	83	12
United Kingdom	69	127	15	473	15

Notes:
[1] Duty on spirits in Denmark consists of a specific element (£12·57 per litre of pure alcohol) and an ad valorem element (60 per cent. of taxable value).
[2] The higher rate of VAT applies to ouzo and brandy.
[3] The nil rate applies to Luxembourg produced wines.
[4] The lower rate applies to Luxembourg and Netherlands produced wines.
[5] The lower rate applies to still wine not exceeding 13 per cent. alcohol of volume.
[6] The lower rate applies to table wine.
[7] The lower rate applies to non-aged wine brandy and grappa brandy.
Rates of exchange as at 8 February 1988.
Source: EC Excise Duty Tables.

Royal British Legion (VAT)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will exempt the Royal British Legion from value added tax on goods and services connected with its welfare activities.

Mr. Lilley: Decisions on changes in taxation are a matter for my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement.

Sherry

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the policy of the European Community Commission on excise duty distinctions between sherries out of proportion to relative alcoholic strengths.

Mr. Lilley: Although the EC Commission has tabled certain proposals on the harmonisation of excise duties, the rates charged at present are a matter for individual member states.

Customs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence there is of an improvement in the speed with which goods are cleared through customs since the adoption of the single administrative document.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The introduction of the single administrative document and the harmonised system of tariff classification on 1 January 1988 were designed to facilitate trade. The effect of the changes on customs staffing has been broadly neutral, but there should be savings in costs in the commercial sector.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his European Community colleagues about evidence of the incidence of bribery of customs officers at internal borders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: None.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the European Community Budget Council on 23 February.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 23-24 February. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached agreement in principle, subject to a reserve by Italy and clarification of some technical details, on a draft Community budget for 1988. The Italian delegation agreed to signify its assent or otherwise by Monday 29 February. The proposed draft budget reflects the conclusions of the Brussels European Council on 11-12 February.

The proposed draft provides for total expenditure of 44·7 billion ecu (becu) (£31·0 billion) in commitment appropriations and 43·4 becu (£30·1 billion) in payment appropriations, the latter being equivalent to about 1·11 per cent. of Community GDP. (All sterling equivalent figures are calculated at the rate of 1·44 ecu to the pound, used by the Commission in its latest budgetary proposals).

In keeping with the Brussels European Council conclusions, the proposed draft makes basic provision for agricultural guarantee expenditure of 27·5 becu (£19·1 billion), with a further 1·24 becu (£0·9 billion) for disposals of existing stocks and a monetary reserve of 1 becu (£0·7 billion) to be called up, as agreed at the European Council, only if changes in the ecu/dollar rate increase spending requirements by more than 400 million ecu (mecu) (£277 million). The Council agreed that budgetary provision would be adjusted if necessary later in the year to enable implementation of the new arrangements which are to be agreed for systematic depreciation of new stocks. On other compulsory expenditure, the draft provides for 3·9 becu of commitment and payment appropriations, equivalent to £2·7 billion.

On non-compulsory expenditure, the Council agreed on figures of 11·0 becu (£7·6 billion) for commitment appropriations and 9·8 becu (£6·8 billion) for payment appropriations. The increases over 1987 are 7 and 5·8 per cent. respectively, compared with the "maximum rate" of increase, calculated in accordance with the treaty, of 7·4 per cent. The European Parliament will have the right under the treaty to add a further half maximum rate "margin" to these amounts (some 380 mecu for commitment and 341 mecu for payment appropriations). The draft includes provision for the structural funds of 7·8 becu (£5·4 billion) in commitment appropriations, as agreed at the European Council, and 6·8 becu (£4·7 billion) in payment appropriations.

The Brussels European Council conclusions provided that, in order to cover the Community's 1988 budget requirements pending entry into force of the new own resources decision, member states would make available any necessary sums in excess of the existing own resources ceiling, after completion of the appropriate national procedures, in the form of non-repayable advances on payments due after entry into force of the new own resources decision.

In accordance with this, 11 members of the Council agreed to a provisional and indicative draft of an Inter-Governmental Agreement (IGA). This follows the precedent set after the 1984 Fountainebleau European Council. On the basis of the Commission's expenditure proposals, before amendment by the Council and the European Parliament, the indicative draft envisages that member states would pay a sum of some 7·7 becu (£5·3 billion) corresponding to the new fourth own resource, with a United Kingdom share of some 1,274 mecu (£884 million). This extra financing would be partially offset by smaller VAT payments, leaving total extra financing, compared with the maximum amount available under the existing own resources ceiling, of around 6·0 becu (some £4·2 billion). The intention is that member states should contribute to whatever extra financing is finally agreed in accordance with the amounts which they would have paid if the new own resources decision had taken effect immediately. I made it clear at the Council that the United Kingdom will not be able to pay over any of the additional sums unless and until the United Kingdom Parliament's approval has been obtained.

The Italian delegation argued that the GNP-based financing of the United Kingdom's abatement should be brought to account against the new fourth own resource (thus in effect increasing the proportion of the budget which would be financed in accordance with VAT shares) rather than (as proposed by the Commission) within the VAT ceiling. The delegation reserved its position accordingly on the draft budget and agreed to signify its agreement or otherwise by midnight on 29 February.

The final figures for the Inter-Governmental Agreement will be determined in the light of the total budget as adopted later in the year and of the own resources decision as finally agreed. Meanwhile, technical details are still under discussion in Brussels.

If the Italian delegation lifts its reserve, the draft budget will be sent forward to the European Parliament and the next step will be for the European Parliament to give the budget its first reading. If the Italian delegation does not lift its reserve, the German presidency hopes to arrange a further meeting of the Budget Council next week.

THE ARTS

Museums (Attendance)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts, whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1987 reported by the national museums and galleries in England for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions but comprising their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1986; and whether, in the case of such museums or galleries as charge for admission, he will in addition specify the number of tickets sold.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The estimated numbers of visitors during 1987 to the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible are as follows:

	Estimated attendance in 1987	Percentage change from 1986
British Museum	4,007,885	+ 3·6
Imperial War Museum	1,184,959	+ 0·8
National Gallery	3,566,568	+12·1
National Maritime Museum	442,005	+16·3
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	1,328,844	+14·2
National Portrait Gallery	590,841	−14·5
Science Museum	4,732,784	− 1·9
Tate Gallery	1,742,156	+51·1
Victoria and Albert Museum	1,398,668	− 2·8
Wallace Collection	168,109	− 1·6

Note:
Figures for the British Museum (Natural History) are not yet available.

Museums record visitors by a variety of methods, which in most cases are regarded as being accurate to within 5 per cent. only. This limits the interpretation of apparent annual changes in attendance, which may also be affected by other factors including, for example, the numbers of overseas visitors to London at individual museums and galleries.

Information on the numbers of admission tickets sold is not held centrally. The numbers will depend on the policies and practices and practices of individual institutions, for example as regards the number and nature of events for which admission is charged and the treatment of parties and family groups.

DEFENCE

Rapier

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to order a replacement for tracked Rapier.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is too early to say when, or with what, Tracked Rapier may be replaced. An improved mark of the existing equipment will shortly enter service to maintain the capability of the system against the threat.

Research and Development Contracts

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many contracts or agreements for research and development have currently been placed directly or indirectly with United Kingdom universities and other educational institutions by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment at Burghfield; what is their total value; and with which United Kingdom universities or other such education institutions they have been placed;

(2) how many contracts or agreements for research and development have currently been placed directly or indirectly with United Kingdom universities and other educational institutions by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment at Llanishen; what is their total value; and with which United Kingdom universities or other such educational establishments they have been placed;

(3) how many contracts or agreements for research and development have currently been placed directly or indirectly with United Kingdom universities and other educational institutions by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment at Foulness; what is their total value; and with which United Kingdom universities or other such educational institutions they have been placed;

(4) how many contracts or agreements for research and development have currently been placed directly or indirectly with United Kingdom universities and other educational institutions by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment at Aldermaston; what is the total value and with which United Kingdom universities or other such educational institutions they have been placed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Atomic Weapons Establishment has currently 41 contracts or agreements placed with 23 United Kingdom universities and other educational institutions, all arising from the work at Aldermaston. Their value is £2 million. It is not our policy to give further details of these arrangments.

Weather Forecasts (Inquiry)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when, following his announcement on 20 October 1987, he intends to publish the findings of the internal inquiry conducted by the director general of the Meteorological Office into the weather forecasts that the Meteorological Office made in the period preceding the storms of Thursday 15 and Friday 16 October 1987 over southern England; when he intends to publish the report prepared by Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer FRS, and Professor Robert Pearce; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. George Younger: Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer and Professor Pearce presented their report in January. They considered the findings of the internal inquiry by the director general.

Their report found that the lack of adequate public warning occurred because uncertainty about atmospheric conditions in the Biscay area led to a lack of agreement between computer forecasts and, although no individual was seriously to blame for this, because the forecasters did not recognise that the computer forecasts would underestimate the speed of wind over Britain.

Their report recommends changes in training forecasters, the use of more senior staff for forecasting, enhanced computer and associated facilities, and changes in menthods of working (including the way in which weather information is presented by the media).

In saying all this, their report endorses the findings and recommendations of the director general's report which are concerned in particular with the need for more and better observations, for developments in the computer models and for a review of the procedures for handling severe weather warnings to the emergency authorities.

I have accepted all the recommendations of both reports, and where further action is required, it will be taken as soon as possible.

Copies of both reports are being published; and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 540-41, why he is unwilling to call for a report from the general officer commanding British Sector, West Berlin, on the progress of police investigations into the La Belle discotheque outrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The case of La Belle discotheque bombing has already been thoroughly investigated. The Government remain satisfied that there is no evidence available implicating Syria or any country other than Libya.

Royal Navy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy artificers left the following branches in each year since 1979; and how many left early (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The numbers of Royal Navy artificers who left the specified branches in each year since 1979 are as follows:

	Air engineer	Marine engineer	Weapon/ Electrical engineer
(a) Total numbers leaving
1979	29	298	244
1980	31	340	169

1985	15	159	154
1986	18	189	184
1987	22	176	150

Notes:
1. Weapon and electrical engineers includes marine and air engineers with electrical engineering qualifications.
2. From April 1983, artificers include all mechanicians.
3. Promotions to officer are excluded from the above numbers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy artificers qualified to serve in the following branches in each year since 1979 (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The numbers of Royal Navy artificers who qualified to serve in the trained strength of the specified branches is as follows:

	Air engineering	Marine engineering	Weapon and electrical engineering
1979	27	85	138
1980	21	114	152
1981	27	107	195
1982	13	107	183
1983	32	162	319
1984	41	169	417
1985	42	180	386
1986	63	119	311
1987	33	167	402

Notes:
1. From April 1983, artificers include all mechanicians.
2. Joining the trained strength has been based on advancement of artificers to petty officer artificer, (previously artificer 2). For mechanicians the equivalent rate was mechanician 2-3 rate.
3. Weapon and electrical engineers include marine and air engineers with electrical engineering qualifications.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy mechanicians qualified to serve in the following branches in each year since 1979 (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The numbers of Royal Navy mechanicians who qualified to serve in the trained strength of the specified branches are as follows:

	Air engineering	Marine engineering	Weapon and electrical engineering
1979	25	121	168
1980	23	140	189

1985	[1]	[1]	[1]
1986	[1]	[1]	[1]
1987	[1]	[1]	[1]

Notes:
1. Joining the trained strength has been based on advancement to the old equivalent of petty officer.
2. Weapon and electrical engineers include marine and air engineers with electrical engineering qualifications.

[1] No figures are available since the merger of mechanicians with artificers in April 1983.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy technicians qualified to serve in the following branches in each year since 1979 (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: There are no technicians in any of the branches quoted, and the term "technician" is therefore taken to refer to mechanics. The numbers of Royal Navy mechanics who qualified to serve in the trained strength of the specified branches in the years quoted is as follows:

Year	Air engineering	Marine engineering	Weapon & electrical engineering
1983	125	284	785
1984	50	382	708
1985	26	255	637
1986	85	329	744
1987	95	335	626

Notes:
1. Records for the years prior to 1983 do not reliably identify the groups specified.
2. Weapon and electrical engineers include marine and air engineers with electrical engineering qualifications.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy mechanicians left the following branches in each year since 1979; and how many left early (a) marine engineering, (b) air engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

[1] "Weapon/electrical engineers" include marine and air engineers with electrical engineering qualifications.
[2] Because of the merger of artificers and mechanicians in April 1983, no separate figures for mechanicians are available for the later years.
Note: Promotions to officer are excluded from the above numbers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy technicians left the following branches in each year since 1979; and how many left early (a) marine engineering, (b) air engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: There are no technicians in any of the branches quoted, and the term "technician" is therefore taken to refer to mechanics. The numbers of Royal Navy mechanics who left the specified branches in each year since 1979 are as follows:

1987	560	129	592

Notes:
1. Weapon and electrical engineers include marine and air engineers with electrical qualifications.
2. Promotions to officer are not included.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy officers graduated in the following branches for each year since 1979 (a) seaman, (b) supply and secretariat, (c) instructor, (d) weapons engineer, (e) marine engineer, (f) pilot and (g) observer.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The term "graduated" is taken to refer to those RN officers qualifying to join the trained strength. Numbers in respect of the specialisations and sub-specialiations listed were as follows:

	Seaman	Supply	Instructor	Engineers[1]	Pilot	Observer
1979	127	36	37	45	36	15
1980	187	43	56	134	53	18

1986	181	30	24	107	42	42
1987	154	27	36	77	50	45

[1] All engineers join as engineer officers; separate figures for weapon and marine engineers are not available.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy officers left the following branches in each year since 1979; and how many failed to complete their engagement (a) seaman, (b) supply and secretariat, (c) instructor, (d) weapon engineer, (e) pilot and (f) observer.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The numbers of Royal Navy officers leaving the specialisations and sub-specialisations listed were as follows:

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken by his Department into any decrease in the value of properties adjacent to airports arising from the problems of aircraft noise.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Second Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any estimates of the likely traffic flow over the second Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultant's study of the second Severn crossing showed that for a bridge of the kind proposed, that is at English Stones with links to the M4 and M5, the high growth forecast (16-hour average annual daily flow) for the year 2010 was 14,100 vehicles for the existing bridge and 41,200 vehicles for the second crossing.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions have taken place between his Department, the Civil Aviation Authority and British industry on the specification for airline passenger protection smoke hoods;

(2) when he expects the Civil Aviation Authority to publish their draft specification for airline passenger protection smoke hoods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Road Maintenance (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the underspending on road maintenance by Hertfordshire county council in (a) 1986-87 and (b) the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Hertfordshire county council's expenditure on road maintenance in 1986-87 and its budgeted expenditure for 1987-88 are broadly in line with its share of Government provision for road maintenance as used in the calculation of its rate support grant entitlement. This grant-related expenditure assessment (GRE) is formula-based and represents the cost of providing a standard level of service in each authority.

Flying Hours

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish draft regulations regarding the flying hours of two-pilot crews on long-distance flights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why no account is taken in the cost-benefit analysis for transport supplementary grant road schemes of benefits to be derived from new industrial developments occasioned by a road improvement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department requires local authorities to provide an assessment of the costs and benefits of highway schemes submitted for transport supplementary grant. In addition to an estimate of the benefits to traffic, the assessment should cover the effects of the scheme on the local community, local industry and commerce, road safety and the environment. Departmental circular 1/87, "Transport Policies and Programme Submissions for 1988-89" provides guidance to local authorities. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report, in terms of pounds sterling per mile, the net present value returns for each transport supplementary grant approved road scheme (i) in Lancashire and (ii) for the highway authorities in the west midlands economic region, for the financial years 1987-88 and1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table lists all local road schemes supported with transport supplementary grant (TSG) in 1987-88 and 1988-89 for which the net present value is available in (i) Lancashire, and (ii) the West Midlands economic region. A number of other schemes in both Lancashire and the west midlands are similarly supported with TSG. Net present values for these are not available. It is not always practicable to calculate a net present value for a scheme, particularly in an urban area; other measures, such as first year rate of return, are often more relevant.

Tyres (Safety)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety of tyres, tyre tread depths and acceptable tread depths across the tyres.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) on 15 January, Official Report, columns 457-58 and my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 22 February, Official Report, column 74.

Passenger Transport Authorities (Financing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, from the hon. Member for Hampshire, North-West (Mr. Mitchell), of 19 February, how many of the responses to the consultation paper support his Department's proposal; and when he expects to come to a decision on the proposal.

Mr. David Mitchell: The responses so far received are, in varying degrees, opposed to the proposal. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales will be making an interim statement to Standing Committee E on 25 February. I will take into account further comments and representations in coming to a final decision before the Report stage of the Local Government Finance Bill is reached.

Victoria Coach Station

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present position on Victoria coach station.

Mr. David Mitchell: It remains the intention that Victoria coach station should be sold by the National Bus Company to London Regional Transport, so that it will stay in the public sector for the time being; as I have previously indicated, this will enable options to be kept open pending the outcome of the public inquiry into London Regional Transport's proposals for a new coach station at Paddington. The arrangements for this sale of Victoria coach station are now being made, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made a modification to the National Bus Company's disposal programme accordingly. A copy of the modification has been placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Cleveland (Rates)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the employment consequences of the 30p increase in rates in Cleveland.

Mr. Chope: The 30p in the pound charge in rates in Cleveland is a 12 per cent. precept increase. If the council had decided to budget in line with the Government spending assumptions the precept need have increased by only 1·4 per cent. Whilst it is not possible to make any specific estimate, it can only harm employment opportunities in businesses in the area.

Rate Support Grant (Sunderland)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the rate support grant paid to Sunderland borough council in each of the financal years since 1979, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms expressed in 1987-88 prices; and what percentage of the council's total spending in each year this represented.

Mr. Chope: The figure requested are provided in the table.

Expenditure figures quoted are total expenditure as defined for the purpose of the rate support grant system. Comparable figures are not available for 1979-80 and 1980-81.

The rate support grant figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not comparable with those for 1981-82 and 1987-88. For the earlier two years they comprise needs, resources and domestic elements, whereas from 1981-82 onwards they comprise block grant and domestic rate relief grant.

Figures for 1979-80 to 1982-83 are final entitlements. Figures for the later years are subject to change when RSG supplementary reports are implemented and when final entitlements to domestic rate relief grant are calculated. Real terms figures are cash figures uprated by the GDP deflator.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington, Official Report, 17 February, column 967, he will publish a table showing the cost of the use by the Property Services Agency of private contractors and consultants for each year since they were first used to the latest date for which data are available.

Mr. Chope: The costs of private contractors and consultants used by the Property Services Agency since 1981-82 are as follows:

£ million (cash)	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87

Total	1,020	1,210	1,463	1,674	1,820	1,965

Information for earlier years would be obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Associations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increases in housing association rents which would be necessary on the level of housing association grant outlined in the report of his Department's senior economic advisor on "Grant Percentage and Rents Paid by Housing Association Tenants"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

West Midlands Councils (Planning Guidance)

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish planning guidance for the metropolitan district councils in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today written to councillor Peter Kellie, chairman of the west midlands planning and transportation sub-committee of the metropolitan borough councils, to convey the Secretary of State's strategic planning guidance for the west midlands, which will provide a framework for the preparation of unitary development plans. Copies have been sent to all local authorities in the region. The west midlands is the first metropolitan area for which we have issued strategic guidance and I welcome the co-operative, constructive approach of the local authorities and everyone else involved in this process. A commencement order enabling six of the seven metropolitan boroughs to begin preparation of their plans will come into force on 29 February. Dudley has been excluded from the order for the moment, at its own request, because it is completing local plans for parts of its area. The effect of a commencement order there would be to halt work on local plans not yet completed, and to require procedural stages to be repeated unnecessarily in the preparation of the unitary development plan.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Postal Communications (Russia)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he had an opportunity to raise the subject of postal communications with the Soviet Foreign Minister during his recent visit to Moscow.

Mr. Mellor: No. However, my right hon. and learned Friend spent some time discussing general human rights questions with Mr. Shevardnadze and pressed for a more humane Soviet approach. We have made our concern about Soviet interference with postal communications known to the Soviet authorities on several occasions, notably at the CSCE meeting in Vienna where we have tabled a proposal on the privacy and integrity of postal and telephonic communication.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to the Soviet Union, he specifically raised with Mr. Shevardnadze outstanding scientific verification problems related to the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Mellor: No. The scientific problems connected with verifying a comprehensive test ban are technical and complex. They must be solved by scientists rather than politicians. That is the purpose of the ad hoc group of scientists of the conference on disarmament which is working on precisely these problems.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his meetings with Soviet officials on his recent visit to the Soviet Union, he discussed the prospects for a joint Anglo-Soviet initiative to develop the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty into a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Mellor: No. My right hon. and learned Friend discussed with Mr. Shevardnadze the progress of the United States-Soviet negotiations on nuclear testing which are aimed at step-by-step progress. It is this approach which we support rather than the impractical aim of an immediate ban on testing.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 22 February.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 22 February. The Council confirmed agreement to the package of stabilisers for eight agricultural commodities on which France had reserved its position at the European Council in Brussels. The adoption of these stabilisers, without amendment or reserve, enabled us, and our Netherlands colleagues, to confirm our agreement to all the other conclusions of the Brussels European Council and opens the way to their implementation.

The consolidated text of the European Council conclusions, distributed in Brussels on 22 February (Document SN 461/1/88), has been placed in the Library. Copies are also available in the Vote Office.

This Council thus concludes a further significant stage in the United Kingdom's long-standing campaign for effective Community action to deal with excess farm production and agricultural expenditure. The Community will now be able to concentrate on its major long-term goal; completion of the single market in goods and services by 1992.

The Council also approved textile arrangements with Egypt and Turkey and adopted a proposal, for discussion in the GATT multilateral trade negotiations, on reductions in obstacles to trade. In addition, the Council discussed preparations for the forthcoming meeting with Foreign Ministers of the Central American and Contadora group countries in Hamburg from 29 February to 1 March (San José IV). The Council also agreed to a ministerial meeting on European demographic issues; and expressed interest in a French proposal for a congress of young people to discuss European Community issues.

PRIME MINISTER

NATO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to North Atlantic Treaty Organisation headquarters in Brussels, she discussed the military implications for NATO defences of developments in the bilateral discussions in Geneva between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on negotiating a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: No. The current negotiations are aimed at agreeing a verification regime which would permit ratification of the threshold test ban and peaceful nuclear explosions treaties. Their ratification would not have military implications for NATO defences. Any further restrictions will be scrutinised to ensure their compatability with NATO security.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to NATO, she discussed the commitments made by NATO member states under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty for future nuclear weapon modernisation and adjustments within NATO.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to the NATO headquarters in Brussels, she made any initiative towards the updating of the Harmel report of December 1967 on redefining future tasks for NATO.

The Prime Minister: No. The course set out for the Alliance in the Harmel report in 1967 remains as valid today as it was then.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels, she raised the possibility of strengthening the role of the Eurogroup within NATO in terms of (a) nuclear weapons deployment, (b) conventional force deployment and (c) troop deployment in Europe and within European airspace and territorial waters.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to the NATO headquarters in Brussels, she discussed NATO's cultural and scientific programmes and the specific benefits which accrue to the United Kingdom from these programmes.

The Prime Minister: The subjects did not come up during my visit.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her most recent visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels, she raised the issue of the compatibility of the increase in warhead and strike capacity of the Trident II D-5 SLBM system with article I of the North Atlantic treaty of 4 April 1949.

The Prime Minister: No.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Discipline

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has given to evidence presented by the Professional Association of Teachers in the spring issue of the magazine The Professional Teacher, a copy of which has been sent to him, that 32 per cent. of teachers had suffered physical violence at the hands of pupils.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information provided by the association shows that 32 per cent. of the 1,500 members of the association who replied to their questionnaire which represents about 4 per cent. of the total membership, had been attacked by a pupil at some time. We are looking carefully at this and other available information in considering whether to establish a committee of inquiry into discipline in schools.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied that effective disciplinary procedures exist in schools to ensure proper teaching can take place; and if he will set out those procedures, together with any guidelines that may have been laid down by his Department for their cases.

Mrs. Rumbold: Disciplinary procedures within schools are primarily a matter for the headteacher and the governors of individual schools. The Education (No. 2) Act 1986, will strengthen their authority by giving them direct responsibility for maintaining discipline. A recently published report by Her Majesty's inspectorate, "Good behaviour and discipline in schools", which has been issued to schools, gives advice on best practice in maintaining discipline. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Schools (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools in the Inner London education authority area that he has visited since becoming Secretary of State and the date of each visit; and if he will list separately the schools in the Inner London education authority area that have been visited by any other of the present Ministers in his Department since their appointment, and the date of each visit.

Mr. Dunn: Since his appointment my right hon. Friend has visited one school within the Inner London education authority area, Notre Dame high school on 14 January 1988. On 4 November 1986 I visited Paragon Hill school, an independent school in Hampstead. Visits by other present Ministers in the Department are as follows:

	Date
Minister of State (Mrs. Angela Rumbold)
Alleyn's school (independent)	22 May 1986
Francis Holland school (independent)	13 November 1986
St. Luke's CE primary school	31 March 1987
St. Paul's girls school (independent)	6 May 1987
Mulberry girls school	25 January 1988

The Department does not maintain records for visits prior to 1986.

Schools (Collective Worship)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those organisations which responded to the consultative letter issued in July 1987 on collective worship in schools; how many of these organisations expressed a view on whether the requirement to take part in collective worship should be relaxed in the case of pupils over the school leaving age; and how many of those organisations who expressed a view on this issue (a) favoured such a change and (b) were opposed to it.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the 34 bodies formally consulted, 28 responded. A list of those responding is given in the table. Fourteen expressed a view on the application of the law to pupils above compulsory school age. Five expressed support for a change in the law, so that the statutory requirement would no longer apply to pupils above the compulsory school age. Nine were against any change in the law. Copies of the responses are held in the Library.

List of bodies which responded to consultation letter

Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association
Association of Advisers and Inspectors of Religious Education Association of Christian Teachers Association of County Councils
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
The Bishops' Conference
Board of Education of the General Synod of the Church of England
British Council of Churches
Catholic Education Council
Chief Rabbi
Christian Education Movement
Free Church Federal Council
Islamic Cultural Centre
Methodist Board of Education
Muslim Education Trust
National Association of Governors and Managers of Schools
National Association of Head Teachers
National Association of Inspectors and Educational Advisers
National Association for Primary Education
National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers National Council of Hindu Organisations
National Muslim Education Council for the United Kingdom
National Union of Teachers
Professional Association of Teachers
Professional Council for Religious Education
Religious Education Council
Sikh Education Council
Society of Education Officers

Pupil Records

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of those organisations which responded to the consultation paper on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records and expressed a view on whether references should be disclosable stated that (a) they should be and (b) they should not.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sixty one organisations commented on the disclosure of references. Twenty four favour disclosure, 27 do not. The remainder did not express a preference.

Further and Higher Education (Student Fees)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recommendations have been issued by him about fees for students on courses of further and higher education in the academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: For the academic year 1988-89 I have recommended the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community countries on full-time courses (fees for 1987-88 are shown in brackets):

Postgraduate courses	1,800	(1,730)
First degree and diploma courses	578	(556)

In relation to other courses I understand that the Council of Local Education Authorities has recommended fees for 1988-89 for home and EC students as follows (fees for 1987-88 are shown in brackets):

	Advanced further education		Non-advanced further education
	£	£	£	£
Full-time	578·00	(556·00)	390·00	(360·00)
Sandwich/block release (weekly rate)	16·00	(15·50)	11·00	(10·00)
Part-time per course hour	0·54	(0·52)	0·37	(0·34)
Part-time annual fee for one session per week	57·80	(55·60)	39·00	(36·00)

The Government's policy is that students from outside the European Community should pay fees that reflect the full cost of their education here. It is for institutions and local authorities to determine the actual fees to be charged to overseas students in the light of this policy and of their own circumstances.

For the universities, the University Grants Committee has recommended minimum fee levels for overseas students on undergraduate and postgraduate courses in 1988-89 as follows (recommended minima for 1987-88 are shown in brackets):

Arts courses	3,950	(3,690)
Science courses	5,180	(4,840)

Clinical courses in medicine dentistry and veterinary science	9,590	(8,960)

For local authority institutions in England and Wales the Council of Local Education Authorities has recommended minimum fee levels as follows (recommended minima for 1987-88 are shown in brackets):

Advanced courses	4,017	(3,720)
Non-advanced courses	2,226	(2,055)

Student Awards

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide for students attending international degree courses to receive mandatory awards.

Mr. Jackson: Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary regulations, mandatory awards will be payable from the 1988-89 academic year to eligible students attending degree courses provided by an establishment in the United Kingdom in conjunction with a university or other institution in another country. Such courses will no longer require individual designation provided that they lead to a first degree of a United Kingdom university or of the Council for National Academic Awards.

Inspectors of Education

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the number of inspectors of education in each of the outer London boroughs;

(2) how many inspectors are employed by the Inner London education authority; what areas of the curriculum they cover; how many inspectors are employed in total by outer London boroughs who administer education; and how many inspectors he estimates will have to be employed by the proposed inner London local education authorities in order to ensure effective monitoring of the delivery of the curriculum.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 18 February 1988]: Figures on local education authority inspectors are not collated centrally. The structure of local inspectorates, including the allocation of inspectors to specialisms, is a matter for each local education authority. Inner London councils will be required to publish development plans during 1989, setting out the education service they propose to provide; these plans will be required to include their proposals for an inspectorate.

Education Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which new bodies he expects to set up under his proposal to abolish the Inner London education authority; and what he expects them to cost to operate in 1988-90.

Mr. Bob Dunn [holding answer 18 February 1988]: My right hon. Friend has announced that he proposes to set up a staff commission to look after the interests of staff affected by the abolition of ILEA. The direct costs of the commission, which are not expected to be large, will be borne centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Houghton and Washington (Grants)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will indicate the amount of regional development grants and regional selective assistance grants made in Houghton and Washington constituency for each year from 1979 to the latest date available.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 26 January 1988, at column 148.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps and initiatives have been developed to encourage foreign investment in the United Kingdom with special reference to the car industry.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau continues to promote the United Kingdom as a location for foreign investment and to assist individual companies to establish themselves in Britain. No specific initiatives have been undertaken by the IBB with regard to attracting foreign investment in the car industry, although my Department has provided assistance to a number of foreign companies wishing to invest in that market.

Broadcasting Services

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration his Department has given to the effects on the growth of the mobile communications industry of any change in current Government policy regarding bands I and III of the VHF spectrum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The needs of the mobile communications industry, both current and future, helped to determine the Government's current policy in respect of bands I and III. If there is any change in that policy those needs will help to frame the nature of the change. At present, study of the technical scope for sharing use of these bands between mobile radio and broadcasting is continuing as part of the Government's wider review of the technical options for additional broadcasting services.

Furniture Foam

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what advice he has given to furniture retailers on the foam standards they should consider when forward ordering supplies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to lay before Parliament regulations relating to the safety standards of foam used in furniture; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the ignition source level selected for the consultation period on combustion modified high resilient foam for use in furniture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Draft regulations will be issued for consultation in the very near future. They will contain proposals for specifying combustion modifed foam to be used in upholstered furniture.

Network Services Licences

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Worsley of 5 February, Official Report, columns 777-78, what information he has as to the names of companies and individuals operating value added services under the class licence granted on 30 April 1987.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Only limited categories of licensees operating under the class licence are required to register with the Office of Telecommunications. Their names are maintained on a list available from the Oftel library. No information is available on other operators under the licence.

Computers and Word Processors

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why special permits are required to take a personal computer or word processor abroad if its capacity is greater than 128K; how many computers have been confiscated since 1985 in accordance with this provision; whether the restrictions are ever revised, and what discussions he has had with other countries regarding the lifting of these restrictions.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Controls on the export of such equipment in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 reflect those agreed with COCOM partners. The order raised the "total internal storage" level above which export licences are required from 128K to 640K. However, computers with a lower capacity may still require a licence for other reasons. The COCOM control lists are subject to periodic multilateral review. Aspects of the computer controls are still under consideration.

Figures relating to the detention or seizure by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of computers can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Regional Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total regional selective assistance which he is committed to paying out under offer letters already issued expressed in outturn figures for each year from 1987-88 to 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: Regional selective assistance grants normally paid in annual instalments related to progress on a project. The amount and timing of RSA expenditure is therefore dependent upon individual companies implementing their projects as originally intended and it is not possible to predict with precision the amount of expenditure which will arise in any future year from past RSA offers.

I am confident that planned provision for RSA over the next three years makes substantial allowance for both existing commitments and potential applicants who have yet to be offered grant assistance. I hope that industry in Wales will take full advantage of the additional RSA resources that have been provided.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total of regional development grant which he is committed to paying out under letters of offer already made, expressed in outturn figures for each year from 1987-88, to 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: The amount of regional development grant paid depends on applicants meeting the conditions under which approval is given. The timing of payments is related to the progress of individual companies in the implementation of the project concerned and the submission of claims. It is not possible, therefore, to predict with precision the amount of expenditure which will arise in any future year from past RDG approvals. Total planned provision for regional development grants over the next three years makes substantial allowance for both present and potential applicants who have yet to receive RDG approval. I hope that industry in Wales will take full advantage of the period until 31 March 1988 during which RDG applications can still be made.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on (a) regional development grant and (b) selective assistance in (i) the Shotton travel-to-work areas, (ii) the county of Clwyd and (iii) the eight counties of Wales, for each year from 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The information requested is given in the following table.

Expenditure on regional development grant and regional selective assistance is as follows

Notes

(1) Regional development grant expenditure represents payments under the original scheme (RDG I) and, since 1985-86, the revised scheme (RDG II). Records of RDG I expenditure at a sub-Wales level are kept on the basis only of individual payments exceeding £25,000 and by employment office areas. Expenditure has been apportioned on a county basis on the most accurate basis consistent with these records. The sum of the county figures will not equate to total RDG I expenditure on an all-Wales basis.

(2) Regional selective assistance expenditure for Wales represents industrial and training grants, loans until 1979-80, exchange risk losses on European loans and payments under the business improvement services scheme. Expenditure on the latter two elements cannot be broken down to a sub-Wales level and is therefore excluded from the county and TTWA figures.

(3) RDG I data for the Shotton TTWA are based on the pre-November 1984 boundary. RDG II data are based on the present Shotton, Flint and Rhyl TTWA.

Immunisation Co-ordinators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if every health authority in Wales has now appointed an immunisation co-ordinator; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office circular on childhood immunisation issued in 1985 asked all district health authorities in Wales to designate an individual to co-ordinate immunisation activity. All Welsh health authorities have advised that these designations have taken place. Responsibility in most cases rests with a specialist in community medicine.

Howardian High School, Cardiff

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many written objections he has received (a) against and (b) in favour of South Glamorgan county council's proposal to close Howardian high school in Cardiff.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There were 370 individual letters, 35 petitions and 28 letters on behalf of organisations, registering statutory and non-statutory objections to South Glamorgan county council's proposal to introduce tertiary education in the east of Cardiff and to close Howardian high school. The vast majority of the objections related to the part of the proposals involving the closure of Howardian high school.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all county councils in Wales that have applied for designation under the provisions of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and how many have been so designated.

Mr. Grist: Applications for designation, made jointly by the county council and the district council, have been received from Dyfed county council in respect of Dinefwr, Llanelli and Preseli districts; Gwynedd county council in respect of Aberconwy, Arfon and Ynys Môn districts; and Powys county council in respect of Montgomery district. No area in Wales has been designated.

Cash Limits

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limit on class XVII, Vote 5, for 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. The cash limit for 1987-88 on class XVII, vote 5 is being reduced by £1,652,000 to £212,017,000. This reduction will offset, in part, an increase in class XII, vote 3 to facilitate the creation of a new university institution in Cardiff.

Morriston Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received, and on what dates, about the staffing needs of the neonatal and paediatric units at Morriston hospital; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 23 February 1988]: My right hon. Friend received representations about nurse staffing levels at the Morriston hospital special-care baby unit at a meeting with a delegation of Welsh Labour MPs on 18 January 1988, and during the course of the Welsh Grand Committee on 10 February 1988. No representations have been received concerning staffing needs of the paediatric unit. Detailed operational questions as to the proper level of nurse staffing are a matter which falls to the responsibility of the West Glamorgan health authority.

Rating Reform

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give his latest estimate for the community charge for district council areas in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Average domestic bills, calculated as the estimated contribution made by domestic ratepayers to authorities' rate fund expenditure in 1987-88 (after allowing for domestic rate relief) divided by the number of hereditaments, are given in the following table. Estimated community charge figures for 1987-88 are also shown. These estimates are based on present expenditure patterns and aggregate levels of grant. They are given on two bases: first, community charges assuming the Government's proposals were implemented in full in 1987-88, with no "safety net", are provided; secondly, charges after allowing for the "safety nets" envisaged in the Green Paper. The average community charge per property including "safety net" will, by definition, be the same as the average domestic rate bill per property.

Motorways and Trunk Roads

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of Government expenditure on the construction of motorway and trunk roads in Wales since 1979, the amount spent on improving motorway and trunk roads since 1979, and the estimated expenditure on motorway and trunk road construction during the next five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Expenditure on new construction and improvement of motorways and trunk roads in Wales since 1979-80 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	63
1980-81	82
1981-82	87
1982-83	110
1983-84	136

1986-87	97
[1] 1987-88	111

[1] Estimated outturn.

Note: Since 1982-83 the definition of new construction and improvement has included structural renewal. Prior to that date it was classified as current expenditure.

Planned expenditure on new construction and improvement of motorways and trunk roads in Wales is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	118
1989-90	120
1990-91	120

Notes:

1. In accordance with public expenditure convention the figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are rounded to the nearest £10 million. Also they are illustrative only, as no firm decisions have been taken on the Secretary of State's allocation of block resources for these years.
2. No figure is available for 1991-92.

Patient Expenditure

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in Wales in 1986-87.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 23 February 1988]: For the latest year for which data are available, that is 1986-87, the information requested is as follows:

Average cost in pounds per	£
In-patient case	1,002·61
In-patient day	71·34
New out-patient	123·10
Out-patient attendance	27·41
New accident and emergency	26·05
Accident and Emergency attendance	18·83
New day patient	917·68
Day patient attendance	23·42
Day case attendance	62·48

However, care should be taken in making comparisons between countries on the basis of these figures as the costs incurred will have varied with the case mix, age and sex of the patients, with the range of facilities available for treatment and as a result of other factors such as the costs associated with teaching. A more meaningful assessment can thus be made by comparing the costs of hospitals within roughly homogeneous groups, particularly where these have been related to case loads which have been statistically adjusted for differences in the specialty and age/sex mix of the patients concerned. To this end I would refer my hon. Friend to "Welsh Costings Returns" and "Key Statistical Indicators for NHS Management in Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

WINvest

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many industrial companies new to Wales have commenced investment projects in Wales as a result of the work of WINvest on the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what is the estimated figure for 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of inward investment projects for the financial years 1985-86, 1986-87 and the latest available information for financial year 1987-88 are as follows. There are a number of potential inward investment projects considering Wales at the present time which I hope will come to fruition before the end of the financial year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Facsimile Service

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will explain the reasons for the cost of using the facsimile machine in the Central Lobby post office; and whether there are any plans to provide faxing facilities for right hon. and hon. Members at a lower rate.

Mr. Wakeham: The Post Office provides a facsimile service within the House at the standard rate. With regard to any plans to provide faxing facilities for Members at a lower rate, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the exchanges in the House on 7 December 1987, at column 19. I can confirm that the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee will subsequently be considering this matter again shortly.

Committee Rooms (Acoustics)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to engage consultants to examine the potential for improvements in acoustics of the Committee Rooms.

Mr. Wakeham: This matter has already been referred to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee, which expects to consider it at an early meeting.

Vote Office

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to ensure that the service provided by the Vote Office meets the demands of right hon. and hon. Members for publications whether they collect them in person or delegate a member of their staff to do so on their behalf.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no evidence to suggest that the service provided by the staff of the Vote Office does not meet the requirements of hon. Members. However, I understand that where constraints of time, space, or the availability of documents arise, priority is necessarily given to supplying Members in person. It is not usually practicable to distinguish between priorities expressed by other callers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many sitting days since the summer recess it has been possible for hon. Members to collect from the Vote Office at 8.30 am copies of both the full Vote bundle and the Hansard for the previous day's sitting; and what percentage of total sitting days in the period this figure represents.

Mr. Wakeham: It has been possible for hon. Members to collect the Vote bundle, as supplied to Members, together with Hansard for the previous day by 8.30 am on 65 sitting days since the summer recess. This represents 90 per cent. of the total sitting days during the period.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) why the Vote Office refuses to deal with requests for publications made at the request of hon. Members by individuals working for hon. Members until 8.45 am;

(2) if he will seek to ensure that the Vote Office meets the demands of hon. Members for publications from 8 am whether made in person or where the request for publications is dealt with by a member of their staff on an hon. Member's instructions.

Mr. Wakeham: The Vote Office will always provide a service for Members whenever staff are on duty and in possession of the document required. This being said, the constraints of time and space preclude dealing with the generality of other callers until after the documents received from Her Majesty's Stationery Office have been sorted and despatched on the early morning delivery service to Members. I understand that, despite the Vote Office not being formally staffed to provide a service to other callers earlier than 9.30 am, the Deliverer of the Vote provides such a service from 8.45 am. This time is kept under review and it is hoped that, in due course, it may be brought forward again without detriment to the overall service provided.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many people are currently employed in the Vote Office; on what salary scales; and to what other benefits they are entitled.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is set out in the following tables:

Staff in post	Salary scale £	Effective date
1 Deliverer of the Vote	20,313-26,862	1 September 1987
1 Deputy Deliverer of the Vote	15,054-19,790	1 September 1987
1 Assistant Deliverer of the Vote	11,512-14,405	1 January 1988
3 Superintending Clerks	10,014-12,473	1 January 1988
4 Vote Office Assistants	8,839-11,819	1 January 1988
9 Office Clerks-Senior Office Clerks	7,377-9,761	1 January 1988
15 Porters (25 part-time, 20·5 hours)	[1]2,915

[1] Rises to £3,050 per annum after five years' service.

Staff in receipt of allowance	Number and nature of allowances	Amount per annum £
Deliverer and Deputy Deliverer of the Vote; Assistant Deliverer of the Vote; Superintending Clerk	Three nights' allowance	[1]3,045
Superintending Clerk Vote Office; Chief Office Clerks; Vote Office Assistants	Five nights' allowances	[2]2,535
Superintending Clerk (Sales Office) and junior staff	Four late duty	[1]1,510
Superintending Clerk; Vote Office assistant	Two morning duty	1,925
Superintending Clerk; Vote Office assistant	Two morning responsibility allowance	225
Junior staff	Nine morning duty as Vote Office porters (17 hours)	[2]2,415
Junior staff	One cleaning allowance	985

[1] Expressed as the amount paid for two nights' extra duty, some staff work only one night and therefore receive half of this amount.
[2] Rises to £2,535 per annum after five years service.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the total cost of running the Vote Office.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The cost of the staff of the Vote Office, including employer's national insurance contributions, is estimated at £344,000 for the current year, including £31,500 for the cost of staff of the sale office. Separate figures are not available for the cost of accommodation and other office services (such as telephones and office machinery) used by the Vote Office.

EMPLOYMENT

Trainees

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees have gone into (a) work, (b) further education and (c) training in (i) the Northwich travel-to-work area, (ii) the Chester travel-to-work area and (iii) the Runcorn travel-to-work area, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the destination of YTS leavers from schemes in Cheshire since June 1984:

	Leavers between:
	June 1984 to March 1985	April 1985 to March 1986	April 1986 to August 1987
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
In work	57	55	56
On a full time course	4	3	4
On another YTS scheme	7	9	14

The Manpower Services Commission has conducted 100 per cent. follow-up surveys of YTS leavers since April 1985. Prior to that date the figures are estimates derived from a national sample survey.

Information from the follow-up survey is not available on a travel-to-work area basis, but I shall write to my hon. Friend with further information relevant to his question.

Community Programme

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places on community programmes listed by geographical area or agency, were not taken up during the year 1986-87; whether he will in future take these figures into account in the allocation of places on such schemes, particularly with regard to future allocations to areas or agencies which were fully subscribed.

Mr. Lee: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. However, the table shows for each MSC area the amount by which filled community programme places on 31 March 1987 exceed or fall short of the area allocation. Past performance in filling places is one of the factors that is taken into account in the allocation of places, both to areas and to individual schemes.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the performance of enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: As private sector led, wholly independent bodies, the performance of individual local enterprise agencies is primarily a matter for their boards and their supporters.

However, the Government are anxious to encourage greater professionalism among local enterprise agencies and one of the requirements of the local enterprise agency grant scheme is that agencies prepare a three-year business plan which includes performance targets.

This Department has also supported business in the community and a number of large private sector sponsors of local enterprise agencies who are working to develop guidelines to assist local enterprise agencies to evaluate their own performance and effectiveness.

Deaf People

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his proposals for an adult training programme will include a communications service for deaf people.

Mr. Cope: Yes. This service will be along the lines of the provision made in YTS.

Quarrying

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were (a) the total numbers of fatal accidents and (b) the total numbers of major accidents in the quarrying industry in each year since 1978;

(2) what was the incidence rate per 100,000 employees for fatal and major accidents combined in the quarrying industry in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Year	Quarry accidents		Combined incidence Rate (Fatal and major) per 100,000 employees
	Fatal	Major injuries
1978[1]	15	67	170
1979[1]	12	90	210
1980[1]	17	64	175
1981[2]	14	105	315
1982[2]	18	106	326
1983[2]	5	88	231
1984[2]	15	115	404
1985[2]	13	94	330
1986-87[3]	11	168	488

[1] Fatal and major injuries reported under the Mines and Quarries Act 1954.
[2] Fatal and major injuries reported under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1981, which widened the definition of major injury.
[3] Fatal and major injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985, which further widened the definition of major injury. The figures for the three periods are not directly comparable.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of prosecutions brought by the Mines and Quarries Inspectorate in each year since 1978 for breaches of relevant health and safety legislation in the quarrying industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Number of prosecutions: Informations laid

Year	Number
1978	2
1979	2
1980	2
1981	0
1982	2
1983	0
1985-86	0
1987-88	0

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) prohibition notices and (b) improvement notices brought in each year since 1978 by the Mines and Quarries Inspectorate in respect of the quarrying industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Year	Prohibition Notices	Improvement Notices
1978	3	—
1979	2	—
1980	4	2
1981	3	—
1982	3	—

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to alter the duration of the enterprise scheme or the rules affecting eligibility to take part in it.

Mr. Cope: I have no plans to alter the duration of the enterprise allowance scheme or the rules affecting eligibility.

As part of its regular programme of value for money scrutinies the Efficiency Unit has recently examined the scheme. I am currently considering its report.

SCOTLAND

Industrial Policy

12. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

"The Way Forward"

13. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to hold discussions with Nirex concerning the executive's document, "The Way Forward."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet Nirex again, but expects the executive to keep him informed of its progress.

Hospital Waiting Lists

14. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average waiting time for in-patient treatment in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures show that there has been a dramatic reduction in waiting times from the peak of 95 days in 1983 following the industrial action of 1982 to 72 days in 1985, which is the latest year for which information is available.

Following is the information:

Mean waiting times for all specialties in Scotland 1976-85

Year	Mean waiting time (days)
1976	77
1977	75
1978	68
1979	80

1981	71

Year	Mean waiting time (days)
1982	65
1983	95
1984	80

[1] The latest year for which information is available.

16. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of patients awaiting in-patient treatment at National Health Service hospitals in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures show increases of 10,000 and over 20,000 caused by industrial action in 1979 and 1982.

Following is the information:

Persons awaiting in-patient treatment at NHS hospitals in Scotland at 30 September in each year

Year	Number of patients
1978	62,464
1979	71,247
1980	67,387
1981	65,228
1982	86,365
1983	88,338
1984	83,077
1985	77,677
1986	80,708
[1]1987	81,324

27. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new measures he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regard reduction of the length of time patients have to wait for treatment as one of the most urgent tasks facing the Health Service. An additional sum of £3·6 million has been allocated to health boards for this purpose during the current financial year. Further measures to make more progress will be discussed with health board chairmen and general managers in the next few weeks.

Forth Road Bridge

15. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of collecting tolls on the Forth road bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of tolls on the bridge is the responsibility of the Forth road bridge joint board. However, I understand that collection costs for the year 1986-87 amounted to £571,000.

Road Building (Strathclyde)

17. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to review the present road-building programme in the Strathclyde region; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We shall be announcing shortly the 1988-89 trunk road programme for Scotland, including Strathclyde. The construction programme for local roads is the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council, within its capital allocation for roads and transport.

Infrastructure

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he plans to take to improve communications between Scotland and England.

Mr. Rifkind: Feasibility studies are under way to consider the best way of implementing our manifesto commitment to upgrade the A74 trunk road to motorway standard.

Lanarkshire Health Board

19. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the capital expenditure plans, at current prices, for Lanarkshire health board for each of the next five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board has submitted bids for capital expenditure of £8·6 million for 1988-89 and £10·5 million, £7·7 million, £5·5 million and £4·3 million for the four years thereafter. The board's capital allocation for 1988-89 and provisional allocations for the ensuing two years will be announced shortly.

Forestry

20. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding his policy towards commercial forestry planting in Scotland.

34. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on forestry policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received many representations in recent months, particularly with regard to planting in Caithness and Sutherland.

29. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied that the Forestry Commission is paying sufficient regard to the need to sustain broadleaf woodland in its tree planting policy and its storm damage replacement plans and in advice concerning agricultural set-aside.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied with the way in which the Forestry Commission are implementing the Government's policy on broadleaves, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) on 24 July 1985, Official Report, columns 557-62.

Newbattle Abbey College

21. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further consideration he is giving to the future development of Newbattle abbey college.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is not prepared to continue funding the college on the present basis. But he is prepared to consider proposals which would benefit significantly more people than attend Newbattle and which made better use of other existing means of entry to higher education.

49. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the representations he has received concerning the proposed withdrawal of funding from Newbattle abbey college.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received 126 representations from hon. Members and others following announcment of my right hon. and learned Friend's decision to withdraw funding from Newbattle abbey college at the end of the 1988-89 academic year. My right hon. and learned Friend has met the hon. Members for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar), for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) and for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) to discuss his decision.

Public Expenditure

22. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the allocation for health contained in the document "Public Expenditure to 1991: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme."

Mr. Rifkind: I have received no representations concerning the substantial funds we are planning to provide for the National Health Service in Scotland. Gross expenditure this year is expected to be £2,334 million, an increase of 120 per cent. since 1979-80; and we plan to increase this figure still further by some £120 million in 1988-89 and by about £100 million in each of the following two years.

32. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the National Farmers Union of Scotland to discuss the allocation for agriculture in "Public Expenditure to 1990-91—A Commentary on the Scotland Programme".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister of State meets the union regularly to discuss a wide range of issues of common interest.

The union has not asked for a meeting on the commentary, which gives details of planned increases in Government expenditure in support of Scottish agriculture over the three years to 1990-91, thus underlining the Government's continuing commitment to the industry.

Unemployment (TUC)

23. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss unemployment in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to do so in the near future. I am delighted to say that seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland fell byover 42,000 between January 1987 and January 1988 and is now at its lowest level since April 1983.

Competitive Tendering

24. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he has received from health boards in Scotland to his circular on competitive tendering; and how many have been entirely supportive of his proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All health boards have agreed to proceed to implement the programme of competitive tendering set out in the Scottish Home and Health Department's letter of 11 December.

Labour Statistics

25. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the decrease in Scottish unemployment since January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Between January 1987 and January 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland fell by over 42,000 and is now at its lowest level since April 1983.

Hospital Building

26. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of hospital building projects completed since 1979 and the numbers either at the building stage or planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1979, new capital investment in the National Health Service in Scotland has resulted in the completion of 51 major new hospital developments providing some 5,770 beds. A further 34 major developments are in planing, under construction or in course of being commissioned. These will provide 4,484 more new beds. This represents a substantial and continuing capital investment programme in the National Health Service in Scotland.

School Closures

28. Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had on his recent decision to introduce new regulations relating to school closures.

Mr. Rifkind: Since the Education (Publication and Consultation Etc) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1988 were made, I have received 1,676 representations supporting my decision to make these regulations. However, before I made those regulations I had received some 2,000 representations asking me to take action.

Elderly People

30. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what means he has to ensure that admissions to private institutions for the elderly infirm, at the expense of the National Health Service, accommodate the most needy, whether in National Health Service hospitals or privately.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no locus in relation to admissions to private institutions. Where a health board funds in-patient treatment for the elderly infirm in a private institution, the patient's health needs should be assessed before admission.

Investment

31. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how much is spent per capita on attracting initial investment to Scotland and the northern region, respectively.

Mr. Lang: I regret that comprehensive information in the form requested is not available.

Tourism

33. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent developments there have been in promoting the Scottish tourist industry.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend, to the Government report "Tourism '87" which was published last year and which includes information on major developments in Scottish tourism. Copies are available in the Library.

Two of the most important recent initiatives are the Scottish tourist board's successful classification and grading scheme for accommodation and the board's overseas promotion activities, especially in the key north American market.

Avalanche Monitoring and Warning System

35. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consult chief constables and mountain rescue organisations on the feasibility of establishing an avalanche monitoring and warning system for Scottish mountains during the winter period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am happy to consider the views of chief constables and mountain rescue organisations to see what improvement is practicable in the availability of local information about avalanche risks.

The nub of the problem is to secure access to authoritative local information. General warnings are often of limited relevance because the risk of avalanche depends on slope aspect, temperature, wind and precipitation and may therefore vary widely on and between individual hills.

The best insurance against avalanche accidents is to encourage all those who go on the hills to learn to recognise the conditions which can cause avalanches and to seek local knowledge and advice which is readily available in popular winter climbing areas such as Lochaber and the Cairngorms.

NHS Funding

36. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the health service trades unions to discuss the funding of the National Health Service in Scotland; and what plans he has for the future meetings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met representatives of the Scottish Health Service trades unions to discuss the funding of the National Health Service in Scotland and has no immediate plans to do so.

NHS Ancillary Services (Privatisation)

37. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the response received from Fife health board to his most recent circular on the contracting out of hospital ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fife health board has indicated that after some minor delay in the issue of invitations to tender, it will be undertaking the required programme of competitive tendering. it is preparing the necessary tender documents and has said it will use its best endeavours to complete the programme in line with other health boards.

57. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet Lanarkshire and Greater Glasgow health boards to discuss Government policy in respect of the privatisation of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no plans to meet these boards to discuss competitive tendering. Both boards are pressing ahead with the programme of competitive tendering which I have asked them to undertake. I shall, however, discuss progress with chairmen collectively when I meet them next month.

Hospital and Community Health Services

38. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure on the hospital and community health services in Scotland for each of the years from 1982-83 to date, at constant prices, using the hospital prices index.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No separate price index is maintained for hospital and community health services in Scotland.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

39. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects initiated as a result of joint funding between Greater Glasgow health board and Strathclyde regional council; what projects have been agreed to start in the near future; and if he plans to increase the funding to Greater Glasgow health board to enable the board to expand this field of its work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally. Since 1979 gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland has grown by 28 per cent. in real terms. In addition, the planning figure for current expenditure on local authority social work services for 1988-89 is 36 per cent. greater in real terms than for 1979-80. The allocation of these very substantial resources is a matter for health boards and local authorities.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what communication he or any of his representatives had with Mr. L. Peterkin, general manager of Greater Glasgow health board, on Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department is in contact with the general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board over a wide range of issues on an almost daily basis.

Manufacturing

40. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what increase there has been in Scottish manufacturing productivity since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Between 1979 and the first half of 1987 manufacturing output per employee in Scotland increased by an average of 5·6 per cent. per annum. Over this period, Scottish manufacturing productivity growth was higher than in any of the seven major OECD economies.

Maternity and Neonatal Services

41. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about proposals published by Grampian health board and its consultative document, on maternity and neonatal services in the region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Twenty-six. The consultation period set by Grampian health board does not, however, expire until 29 February 1988 and within this period, representations should be made to the board.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

42. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those departments within Glasgow royal infirmary which are refusing out-patient referrals due to shortages of medical staff; what effect this is having on patient care; what steps are being taken to remedy the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It has proved necessary to curtail the number of out-patients seen in the ophthalmology department of Glasgow royal infirmary because of a shortage of medical staff. Alternative arrangements have been made for patients to be seen either at Stobhill hospital or the Glasgow eye infirmary. The Greater Glasgow health board has recently appointed two junior doctors to the department, and is taking steps to increase the number of consultant sessions there. Temporary difficulties in the out-patient urology department have been resolved by the appointment of a senior registrar.

Unified Business Rate

43. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he now has any further proposals for the introduction of a unified business rate in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 14 January to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) at column 367.

Ayrshire and Arran Health Board

44. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ancillary staff are employed by Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 1,879 as at 30 September 1987.

Rating Reform

45. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current stage of consultations between his Department and relevant bodies in Scotland with regard to the registration of severely mentally handicapped people for poll tax purposes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has consulted widely on the procedures required to identify severely mentally handicapped persons to be exempted from liability to pay the personal community charge. Responses to this consultation are currently being considered.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to take to prevent the evasion of the standard community charge through the registration of one spouse at a married couple's main residence and the other at a second home.

Mr. Lang: The standard community charge is payable only in respect of dwelling houses which are not the sole or main residence of any person. The question where a person is solely or mainly resident will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. It will be for community charges registration officers, in making up the community charges register, to satisfy themselves in each case as to whether a person is solely or mainly resident in particular premises: their decisions will be subject to appeal under the provisions of Section 16 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

46. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy on the proposal of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to go out to tender for coal purchases and its effect on the Scottish coal mining industry.

Mr. Lang: The purchase of coal for electricity generation is essentially a commercial matter for the two industries and not one in which it would be appropriate for the Government to intervene. However, I do recognise the importance to British Coal's operations in Scotland of securing further orders for supplying coal to the South of Scotland Electricity Board when the existing contract terminates at the end of March and I remain hopeful that agreement will be reached on terms acceptable to both parties.

50. Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next be meeting the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to discuss the importance of foreign coal.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest. However, he has no plans for a meeting on this matter, which is for the commercial judgment of the board.

Council House Sales

47. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the progress of sales of council houses under the right-to-buy legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1979 some 83,000 local authority house sales have taken place, and more than 30,000 applications to purchase have been made during 1987.

56. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the proceeds from sales of public sector housing in Scotland since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at December 1987, sales of public sector houses to sitting tenants in Scotland since 1979 total £1,016 million. Some 10 per cent. of public sector stock has been sold, and since the receipts generated are available to enhance housing capital programmes it is very much in the housing agencies' interest to continue to encourage tenants to buy.

Royal College of Nursing

48. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with representatives of the Royal College of Nursing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I met the college's Scottish board on 5 February and discussed waiting lists, competitive tendering and nurse education and training. I took particular note of its views that action to reduce waiting lists required adequate nursing support, and assured it that savings from competitive tendering would be retained by health boards for patient care and that there was every opportunity for existing staff to compete for tenders. We agreed to meet regularly in future.

Health Care

51. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings (a) his Department and (b) any public body for which he has responsibilities have had with any member of the AMI group of companies, The Murrayfield plc., Whatlings plc., and any other operator of private health care in order to discuss the provisions of health care in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had one meeting with AMI representatives, at their request, and have subsequently visited Ross Hall hospital. There have been two other meetings at which representatives of AMI and the Scottish Home and Health Department were present, to discuss health matters. Meetings are also held from time to time with the bodies which represent private nursing and residential homes. Certain health boards have held discussions about the contribution which private hospitals can make to their own needs and the Common Services Agency has regular discussions with private hospitals about their requirements for blood products.

NHS (Internal Inflation Rate)

52. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the National Health Service internal inflation rate in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No records of inflation in the NHS in Scotland are kept. Financial provision for the NHS is planned and made on a cash basis.

Health Services (Privatisation)

53. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will discuss his proposals for privatisation of National Health Service services with the National Union of Public Employees, the Confederation of Health Service Employees, and other trade unions representing hospital workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: If events up to and including the "day of action" on 24 February demonstrate a genuine attempt by the trade unions to protect patients I would be prepared to consider a meeting.

54. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the chairmen of the health boards in order to discuss his plans for the privatisation of certain services and functions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for privatisation. Competitive tendering for support services has been discussed with health board chairmen on a number of occasions. Boards are now proceeding with a limited programme of tendering and I propose to discuss progress when I meet chairmen next month.

Health Boards (Funding)

55. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that the present level of funding for Scottish health boards is sufficient to allow them to achieve the priorities set out in the report entitled, "Scottish Health Boards-Revised Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties."

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The SHARPEN report — the "Scottish Health Authorities Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties"—is a report by a working group set up by the Scottish Health Service Planning Council which is at present considering the recommendations made in it. The priorities for the NHS in Scotland remain those set out in the report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties". With the very substantial resources made available to them — resources which have increased by about 28 per cent. in real terms since 1979-80 — health boards in Scotland are expected to develop these priority services.

NHS (Efficiency Savings)

58. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the efficiency saving made within the ancillary services of the National Health Service since 1983.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Savings from in-house efficiency measures reported by health boards and the Common Services Agency since 1983 on catering, domestic and laundry services represented 0·6 per cent. of the total expenditure on these services in 1984-85, 1·9 per cent. in 1985-86 and 5·7 per cent. in 1986-87. The total savings by September 1987 were £16·1 million in cash terms.

NHS Ancillary Services (Privatisation)

59. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had in the past three months with private contractors on the subject of ancillary services in the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: At 1 February 1988, the number of civil servants employed in the Scottish Office, excluding the Scottish prison service, was 6,496. The great majority of non-industrial staff work 37 hours (net); most industrial staff work 39 hours per week (net). On the basis of a recent survey, it is estimated that some 3,600 staff participate in the flexible working hours arrangements. There are 10 staff on job-sharing schemes and four staff working four-day weeks. All staff are able to retire with pension rights at age 60; to receive full pension rights an officer has to have accrued 40 years' reckonable service (actual service or purchase of added years).

Museums

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will respond to the report by a working party of the Museums and Galleries Commission on museums in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have written today to the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission to thank Professor Miles and his working party for a thorough and interesting piece of work. The Government have responded positively by increasing grant to the Scottish Museums Council by over 13 per cent. to £500,000. The Secretary of State and I look to Scotland's national museums and galleries to give continuing priority to their national responsibilities. We hope that the report will encourage museums and galleries throughout Scotland to improve their management, widen their appeal and raise more income.

Copies of my letter to the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission and the Scottish Museums Council containing the Government's responses to the working party's 96 individual recommendations are being placed in the Library.

Queen's College, Glasgow

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the development of Queen's college, Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department has today written to Queen's college, Glasgow, indicating that after consultation with the Greater Glasgow health board, I am prepared to agree to the proposed transfer of radiography, chiropody and occupational therapy courses from the board to the centrally funded higher education sector.

The college is being asked to confirm that it wishes to assume responsibility for these courses. If so, I am prepared to make capital funds available in 1988-89 for the adaptation, after consultation with the governors of Jordanhill college of education, of accommodation at Jordanhill to allow its use for Queen's college's purposes.

Given the availability of good quality accommodation at Jordanhill, I will not now be making funds available for the development of the Eldon street site, and I am asking the governors to make arrangements for its early disposal.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the system of notification of sites of special scientific interest; what discussions he has had with the Nature Conservancy Council on the subject; and whether he will institute a review of current practice.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 11 February 1988]: In addition to the hon. Member's letter to me dated 11 November 1987, I have received representations from four persons within the past 12 months including the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) about the current system. Two of these suggested that there should be a right of appeal against notification and two expressed concern about the size of individual areas that may be notified. Discussions on various aspects of SSSI notification arrangements have been held from time to time mainly at official level between the relevant Government Departments and the Nature Conservancy Council. With regard to current practice I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) Official Report, 20 January 1988, at column 747 concerning consultation arrangements.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in assessing the commercial advantages of an international trade in plutonium, the costs of the physical protection of the plutonium have been taken into account.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel by British Nuclear Fuels plc is carried out under contract for its customers on a commercial basis. BNFL's customers have to take into account all the costs involved including the costs of protection.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected annual cost to Her Majesty's Government for the transport of reprocessed plutonium being transported from Sellafield to Japan in the 1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he proposes to take in response to the report by Price Waterhouse, relating to the electricity tariff offered by the Central Electricity Generating Board to private producers; and if he will make its conclusions available to private producers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Electricity tariffs are the responsibility of the electricity supply industry and it is therefore for the industry to consider the relevant recommendations in the Price Waterhouse report. It is for area boards, not the CEGB to publish purchase tariffs. Since the Price Waterhouse report was made to the Electricity Council, any question of making its conclusions available to private producers is for the council to consider.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quarantine Regulations

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the Single European Act will have on existing animal quarantine regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We intend to retain our quarantine regulations as long as they are necessary to protect the United Kingdom.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the receipts from profits on the sale of milk quotas in the current financial year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that this information is not available.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to the statement on the meeting of the European Council, Official Report, 15 February, columns 710-11, if he will provide the evidence for the statement that the United Kingdom would need enormous deficiency payments or considerable price increases in other directions through the imposition of even heavier levies at the port of entry, to which products this refers; and why such payments or price increases would be necessary.

Mr. MacGregor: The prices available on world markets for agricultural products supported by the CAP are mostly well below existing support levels. For example, for wheat and butter world prices are about a quarter of the CAP support level; for sugar they are about a third and for skimmed milk powder they are about two thirds of the CAP support price.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he agreed to the European Economic Community decision to pay farmers not to produce; and whether such payments will be debited to the agricultural budget.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in her statement on 15 February that the scheme to take agricultural land out of production was agreed by the European Council as a complement to the stabiliser arrangements and as a further discouragement to overproduction. A proportion of the costs to member states of making payments under the scheme is to be carried by the Community's agricultural fund.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) European Economic Community spending on the common agricultural policy and for non-agricultural purposes in the year before the Dublin and Fontainebleau summits respectively, (b) the estimate for 1987, (c) the forecast for 1992 and (d) gross United Kingdom contributions on each occasion.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Mecu

	1983	[1]1987
EC expenditure on the CAP (guidance and guarantee)	16,637	24,101
EC expenditure excluding the CAP	7,720	12,067
United Kingdom contribution to EC budget (before abatement)	5,084	6,938

[1] The estimate for CAP expenditure in 1987 excludes some 4,512 mecu of expenditure in November and December 1987 which will fall on the 1988 Budget.

Figures are not available for 1992.

Natural Mineral Waters

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the natural mineral waters produced in the United Kingdom which are officially recognised by the European Economic Community under the terms of Council directive 80/7775/EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following natural mineral waters have been recognised by the responsible authorities in the United Kingdom under the provisions of the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985, which implement in the United Kingdom EC Directive 80/777, and have been notified to the Commission for publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities:

Abbey Well
Bath Natural Mineral Water
Braeuisge Spring
Buxton Water
Campsie Spring
Caithness Spring
Chiltern Hills
Cwm Dale Spring
Decantae
Dorset Spring Water
Glendale Spring
Highland Spring
Hilden Natural Mineral Water
Kingshill Forest Glade
Malvern
Mountain Spring
Northumbrian Spring
Penryddlan, Llandinam
Prysg Spring
Scottish Spring
Strathmore Spring

Wool

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is able to announce the guaranteed price for wool for the 1988 clip; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have reviewed the state of the wool market and prospects for the 1988 clip. We have decided to maintain the price guarantee for the 1988 wool clip at 129p/kg.

The prices achieved by the British Wool Marketing Board for United Kingdom wool continued to improve in 1987. Average market prices for the 1987 clip rose above the prevailing guarantee, enabling the board to make repayments to the stabilisation fund from August last year. This brings the outstanding deficit down to about £17·8 million.

Stocks of wool are low; demand continues to be good; and the Wool Board is confident of the prospects for 1988.

Agricultural Land Classification

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in revising the agricultural land classification system for England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: With the assistance of other experts in the field, my Department has now completed its work. A consultation document on the revised guidelines and criteria for grading the quality of agricultural land is being issued to external practitioners and other interested bodies today. I have placed a copy of the consultation document in the Library of the House. Comments are invited by 25 April 1988.

Bees

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to ban the import of foreign honey bees.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 February 1988]: I have no plans at present to ban imports of honey bees which are permitted only under licence. However, our bee import controls are kept under constant review to ensure minimum risk to bee health in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent the spread of varroasis among bees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Imports of bees into the United Kingdom are strictly controlled by licence. Licences are issued only for queen bees, with attendant workers, from countries with a high bee health status. They are not issued for imports coming from countries where varroasis is known to exist. To minimise the risk of accidental or illegal import of bees we are again writing to port authorities in England drawing their attention to this disease and asking them to display a warning poster which the national beekeeping association have prepared.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the number of cases of varroasis among bees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Selective searches which my Department has undertaken in October in each of the last three years in eastern and south-eastern regions of England have found no evidence of varroasis. Nor has varroasis been found in any of the hive debris which beekeepers have themselves sent to us for free examination as part of our campaign to encourage greater vigilance against this disease.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Services (Administration Costs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the most recent information he has as to the administration costs of (a) the National Health Service and (b) private insurance-based schemes.

Mr. Newton: The 1986-87 annual accounts of health authorities, family practitioner committees, and so on, comprising the National Health Service in England show that 3·72 per cent. of their total revenue was incurred on headquarters administration. We do not collect comparable information for the private sector.

Surgical Operations

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the 10 most frequently performed surgical operations carried out in (a) the Crewe, (b) the Chester and (c) the Halton health district: and what estimates he has of the average cost of each type in each area.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows estimates from a 10 per cent. sample of hospital records for 1985. The operations shown are those from OPCS condensed list of operations — third revision — which identify specifically groups of related procedures. No information is available for Halton, as Halton district general hospital opened during 1985.

Health Districts (Administrative Staff)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (a) the number of administrative staff employed and (b) the total sums each years spent on administrative salaries in (i) the Crewe health district (ii) the Chester health district and (iii) the Halton health district in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Currie: Staff-in-post figures are shown in the table. Comparable information on staff costs is not available centrally and my hon. Friend may care to contact the appropriate district chairmen.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure per head in real terms on the National Health Service (a) nationally, (b) in the Mersey region, (c) in the Crewe health district, (d) in the Chester health district, and (e) in the Halton health district in each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: Figures of expenditure per head (based on total populations) for the years since the establishment of district health authorities on 1 April 1982 are shown in the table.

Hospital and community health services[1]—total expenditure per head (at 1987-88 prices)

	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £
(a) England	151	167	186	207	231

Chester	191	204	217	233	257
Halton	70	84	85	105	118

[1] Includes revenue and capital expenditure on hospital, community health, ambulance, blood transfusion and other services.

1. Annual accounts of:
   (a) regional and district health authorities in England and those of the London post-graduate teaching hospitals
   (b) the regional health authority and district health authorities comprising the Mersey region
   (c) the district health authorities shown.
2. Mid-year estimates of population 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 (Office of Population and Censuses Surveys).

Notes:

1. The figures have been expressed at 1987-88 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.
2. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot be attributed to particular regions or districts. However, prior to 1 April 1985 some 90 district health authorities in England (including Chester and others within the Mersey region) had an associated FPC and those authorities total expenditure figures for the years before that date include elements relating to FPCs' administration expenses which are not separately identifiable.
3. Expenditure by special health authorities and other bodies providing central services to the National Health Service and expenditure met centrally by the Department is also excluded.
4. Prior to 1 April 1982 the district health authorities' predecessor health districts formed part of the Cheshire Area Health Authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.
5. The expenditure figures used for each district health authority include both revenue and capital expenditure together with sums in respect of capital schemes within each district recorded in the annual accounts of the Mersey Regional Health Authority. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the latter authority for the region as a whole is included in the figures for Mersey region but excluded from the districts' figures.
6. Significant variations in figures of expenditure per head at district level arise principally because:—
   (a) people travel across district boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally;
   (b) the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for the differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made with the National AIDS Trust; and how much public money has been committed to it.

Mr. Newton: The National AIDS Trust has made considerable progress since its inception last year. A director has been appointed, advisory committees to help determine policy priorities set up, and systems are in place for distributing grants to voluntary organisations throughout the United Kingdom. The Government have made a grant of £500,000 to the trust for distribution to the voluntary sector, and have also contributed towards the trust's administrative costs in 1987-88.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Portillo: The number of civil servants employed in the Department on 1 January 1988 was 101,920; their conditioned hours of service are mainly 41 hours per week in the London pay area and 42 hours elsewhere:

(a) the opportunity to work flexible working hours is available to most staff apart from those on shift work. No record of the number of staff who work such hours is kept;

(b) 662 staff participate in job-share arrangements.
(c) there is no scheme for an option to work a four-day week or nine-day fortnight in the Department.
(d) awards of pensions are based on the length of reckonable service and pensionable pay at the time of retirement; full pension rights are available to all staff retiring at 60 years of age who have 40 years' reckonable service.

Foetal Material

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if parental consent is required before supplying foetal material to medical schools; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will place in the Library the regulations governing the supply of foetal material to medical schools for use in experiments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The use of foetuses and foetal material in research is covered by the code of practice recommended by the Peel report on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research, 1972, a copy of which is in the Library. This code of practice which has been commended to all health authorities recommends, inter alia, that research should only be carried out with the direct sanction of the local ethical committee and that where the Human Tissue act does not apply, a pre-condition of the research should be that there is no objection on the part of the parent. There are no additional specific regulations governing the supply of foetal material to medical schools.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the figures for the Northern regional health authority's in-patient waiting lists for each of the years from 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table.

In-patient waiting lists, Northern Regional Health Authority, at 31 March

Year	Total cases
1979	47,642
1980	36,470
1981	34,070
1982	34,475
1983	47,566
1984	40,390
1985	36,221
1986	35,711
1987	37,334

Hospital Social Workers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social workers working in hospitals are employed by district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The National Health Service (Transfer of Social Services Staff) Order 1974 transferred NHS hospital social workers to the employment of local authorities. We are therefore not aware of any in the employment of district health authorities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social workers are estimated to be working in hospitals; and what is the approximate number per 100,000 population in each health region.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information needed to make these estimates is not available centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the regional health authorities to monitor the withdrawal of local authority social workers from hospitals resulting from local authority spending reductions.

Mr. Newton: There is a duty on health authorities and local authorities to collaborate in the provision of services and we would expect them to be in close touch about changes which would have an effect on those services.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what figures he has as to how many hospitals have or are threatened with loss of the services of social workers because of the local authority spending reductions.

Mr. Newton: Information on the number of hospitals affected is not available centrally. In London, however, six boroughs (Brent, Camden, Haringey, Lambeth, Lewisham and Southwark) are known to have made, or to be planning, reductions in their hospital social work service.

Children's Heart Surgery

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many hospitals specialise in children's paediatric heart surgery; in which regions they are located; by what percentage their revenue allocation has increased since 1984; and what is the current urgent in-patient waiting list for each one.

Mrs. Currie: All regional health authorities have cardiothoracic units which undertake cardiac surgery on children. Cardiac surgery on neonates and infants is funded as a supraregional service. The nine designated supraregional centres are located in the following regions: Northern, Yorkshire, South East Thames, Wessex, South Western, West Midlands and Mersey and at the Brompton hospital and the hospital for sick children, Great Ormond Street, which are administered by special health authorities. We are aware that some cardiac surgery on neonates and infants is carried out in non-designated centres but comprehensive information on these is not held centrally.

The total revenue allocation for the designated centres has risen from £7,121,000 in 1985-86 to £8,933,000 for 1988-89, an increase of approximately 25 per cent. The allocation of funds to surgery on children over the age of one year is a matter for the health authorities.

I regret that the information requested on waiting lists is not held centrally. Waiting list statistics are collected centrally by consultant department, not by age of patient or intended method of treatment.

Ear, Nose and Throat Departments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest figures available for the in-patient waiting lists of ear, nose and throat departments in each of the English regional health authorities to update the table published in his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South of 16 December 1986, Official Report, columns 469-70; and if he will indicate the percentage changes over the preceding year and since December 1984.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table. I regret that the waiting list figures for 31 December 1984 and the changes in waiting list between 31 December 1984 and 31 March 1986 given in my earlier reply were incorrect. Amended figures are given in the table.

Calder Girls School

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific study has been undertaken (a) by his Department, (b) by his Department in collaboration with the environment and health departments, (c) by consultants to his Department, (d) by the National Radiological Protection Board, (e) by the Medical Research Council, (f) by COMARE and (g) by the Black committee, of the comparative health of girls who attended the Calder girls school in Seascale from 1952 to its closure, with cohorts of girls from different regions over the same period.

Mrs. Currie: A study of children who attended schools in Seascale, but were born elsewhere, commissioned and part-funded by this Department following a recommendation of the Black advisory group, was undertaken by Professor M. J. Gardner of the MRC epidemiology unit, Southampton, and colleagues, and reported in the British Medical Journal of 3 October 1987.

The study compared deaths from any cause, and non-fatal cancer incidence among the pupils, with that expected on the basis of national rates. Calder girls' school was amongst those whose pupils were included in the study. We know of no other similar studies on the health of this group.

Lorazepam

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to restrict further or to introduce a ban on the prescribing of lorazepam or any other benzodiazepine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no such plans. Our present advice is that benzodiazepines, including lorazepam, have a place in medical practice if prescribed with appropriate care. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has recently advised doctors on the use of these drugs in "Current Problems No. 21"; a copy is being placed in the Library. Companies have been asked to change their data sheets in line with the CSM's advice.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those organisations which have made representations to him since the beginning of 1987 about the represcribing of lorazepam; and what his response has been.

Mr. Newton: No organisation has made such representations but we have received a number of letters from hon. Members and individuals on the matter.

Tranquilliser Abuse

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those organisations engaged in combating tranquilliser abuse which have been either totally or partially funded by his Department in each of the years 1981 to 1987; and if he will give the amounts provided in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The following organisations catering for those dependent on tranquillisers have received grants under the central funding initiative set up by the Government in 1983 to pump-prime services for drug misusers.

Organisation	Amount £	Duration of funding
TRANX (Harrow)	89,483	1983 to 1986
TRANX Release (Northampton)	28,592	1984 to 1986
MIND (Copeland)	94,367	1985 to 1988
NECA (North East Council on Addictions)	124,241	1985 to 1988

Many of the other 184 projects funded under this scheme also provide a service to those dependent on tranquillisers.

Radiotherapy Services

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's review of its guidance to health authorities on the organisation of radiotherapy services will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The guidance on the organisation of radiotherapy services issued to health authorities in 1978 has been reviewed with the help of our cancer experts in order to take account of subsequent epidemiological and scientific developments. The review has concluded that the minimum combination of equipment and staff for a viable unit has not significantly altered. However, the use of radiotherapy has increased substantially, and is likely to continue to increase. Furthermore, the importance of access to a unit may have been underestimated.

Accordingly the minimum catchment population needed to generate sufficient demand for a viable unit has fallen from the 1 million previously recommended. The precise figure for each unit will depend on local factors, including transport facilities and clinical practice. However, in normal circumstances the minimum would now be about two thirds of a million.

The review nevertheless concluded that units larger than the minimum remain the ideal; they permit greater specialisation, which is especially valuable in this time of rapid change and development in cancer therapy; they are necessary for teaching purposes; and they reduce costs by making fuller use of ancillary equipment.

WALES

Hospital Referrals

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to rates of patient referral to hospitals by different general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Surveys of out-patient referrals in a six-week period were conducted at hospital out-patient clinics throughout Wales in spring 1985, autumn 1985 and autumn 1986. The information for 1985 has been used to calculate an indicator of the referral rate for each general practice. Some practices have been made aware of their referral rates by medical officers of the regional medical service, who are based in the Welsh Office. This information by practice is not appropriate for general release, but an article giving broader figures for districts for the spring 1985 survey was published in the British Medical Journal (volume 295, 19 September 1987). Information for autumn 1986 is currently being processed and it is intended to publish results when ready at a broad level.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the different frequencies and the number of times individual consultants see National Health Service patients in respect of the 10 most common hospital treatments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Hospital Closures

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by health authority in Wales, the numbers of beds in each and the types of hospitals closed since 1978.

Mr. Grist: During this period, when 11 new hospitals and more than 2,000 beds have been opened, the following beds have been closed.

Wales: Hospitals closed since 1978

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the total cervical cytology examinations carried out by family medical practitioners in each of the health authorities in Wales were reimbursable directly under the item-of-service payment in each of the last five 12 month periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional measures he proposes to take to improve the cervical cytology uptake in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The cervical cytology screening service, including any action necessary to improve uptake, is the responsibility of the individual district health authorities. Over the last two years some £800,000 of recurring central funding has been allocated to health authorities to help them improve the service. Uptake rates are being monitored by the Welsh Office.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the non-domestic rate for Wales in 1990, based on current prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The current average non-domestic rate poundage in Wales is 236·5p. A decision on the level for 1990 will be announced at the appropriate time.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from business ratepayers in Wales as to the progress towards the establishment of a unified non-domestic rate for Wales in 1990.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received comments on our proposals from a number of organisations and individuals.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in the revaluation of business property in preparation for the introduction of a unified non-domestic rate for Wales in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Valuation Office has issued forms of return and consideration is now being given to the appropriate level of value as at 1 April 1988.

Radiation (Sheep)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, whether in the period before May and October 1986 any live monitoring machines for testing radiation in sheep were available but not in use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Apart from a limited field trial of one machine no live monitoring machines were available for use in north Wales prior to the beginning of October 1986.

Legislation (Publication)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what difficulties his Department has experienced in publishing legislation laid by him in the present Session; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department has not experienced any difficulties in pubishing legislation laid by me in the present Session.

Welsh Language

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount of Government financial assistance for the Welsh language in both cash and real terms since 1979; and what was the proportion of this which has been educational expenditure.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The information is as follows:

Total Government support for the Welsh language under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 and section 26 of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976

	Cash terms (£ thousands)	Real terms (£ thousands)	[1](Percentage age)
1979-80	237	412	—

[1] Proportion of expenditure in respect of educational projects under section 21 of the Education Act 1980.
[2] First year of grant.

The above does not include expenditure by other agencies, such as the Welsh Arts Council, not directly funded by my Department whose work involves activity related to the Welsh language, or the expenditure on S4C, which has increased as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	20
1983-84	24

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Attorney-General how many civil servants are employed in his and the Lord Chancellor's Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department employs 9,947 full-time, 1,155 part-time and 961 casual staff. Full-time staff in central London work 41 hours per week (gross); elsewhere, 42 hours. Part-time staff work, on average, 24 hours a week. The decision to take part in a flexitime scheme is a personal one and no central record of numbers is kept. However, 208 offices operate a flexible working hours scheme, while 218 offices have elected to continue with fixed hours. Forty-six members of staff job share and four applications are pending. No applications have been refused. Details of the individual patterns of work are not kept centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost, but 1,040 staff work between 10 and 30 hours a week and 104 between 31 and 35 hours a week. A total of 11,075 are entitled to retire with a pension at the age of 60, the amount of pension payable being calculated on the period of reckonable service completed.

Eighteen civil servants are employed in the Law Officers' Department. All are full-time and work 41 hours per week (gross). None is on flexitime, on job-sharing schemes or on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight. All are entitled to retire with a pension at the age of 60, the amount of pension payable being calculated on the period of reckonable service completed.

Mr. Freddie Andrews

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General why fraud squad investigations into the case of Freddie Andrews were reopened in 1987; and on whose instruction there has been further investigation.

The Attorney-General: Investigations into this matter were not reopened in 1987. An investigation by an officer of the fraud squad of the Royal Ulster Constabulary commenced in August 1981. A preliminary report was submitted by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland on 26 February 1982. Since that date, thorough and complex police investigations have continued and a number of further reports have been received in the office of the Director from the Chief Constable. On 10 June 1987 a direction to prosecute an individual for an offence contrary to section 15 of the Theft Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 was issued to the Chief Constable.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish details of all properties inherited by Freddie Andrews (a) on the death of his father and (b) still in his ownership when the Official Solicitor assumed responsibility for his affairs (No. 516 1978); if he will publish dates of transfer of each property transaction and the value of each transaction; and if he will provide a copy of each audited annual account for the affairs of Freddie Andrews since his affairs became the responsibility of the Office of Care and Protection, with details of the use to which moneys raised were put.

The Attorney-General: It is not appropriate to publish details of the affairs of any patient without leave of the court, as such matters must be treated in the same confidence as that enjoyed by any other person. An application may be made to the court by any person concerned about a particular case for disclosure of any information in respect of which the applicant can demonstrate a legitimate interest.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General why the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland originally directed no prosecution in respect of all matters raised by the late Detective Constable Patterson which included information on Freddie Andrews' case; and why investigation papers in the Andrews case were subsequently submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions (Northern Ireland).

The Attorney-General: A direction to prosecute an individual for an offence contrary to section 15 of the Theft Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 was issued on 10 June 1987. An investigation by an officer of the fraud squad of the Royal Ulster Constabulary commenced in August 1981. A preliminary report was submitted by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland on 26 February 1982. Since that date thorough and complex police investigations have continued and a number of further reports have been received in the office of the Director from the Chief Constable. The direction of 10 June 1987 was issued having regard to the various reports made by police, the last of which was submitted on 13 May 1987.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions there have been between the relatives of Freddie Andrews and the office of the Official Solicitor on the handling of his affairs, since he was placed under the Office of Care and Protection at his relatives' request.

The Attorney-General: Following the appointment of the Official Solicitor on 11 January 1979 to assume responsibility for the affairs of Mr. Frederick Andrews there were numerous meetings between him and the individual members of the patient's family and their legal representatives. In the course of a review directed by the court in September 1983 the newly appointed Official Solicitor and counsel engaged by her had further discussions with the legal representatives of members of Mr. Andrews' family. At the conclusion of the review the judge directed that the Official Solicitor should discontinue investigations unless new or additional evidence was forthcoming.

Mentally Handicapped People (Care)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish details of the steps to be followed where relatives wish to have a mentally handicapped person returned wholly to the care of his relatives from the Office of Care and Protection.

The Attorney-General: Part VIII of he Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 provides that where a person is found to be incapable, by reason of mental disorder, of managing and administering his property and affairs the High Court may exercise general powers and make specific orders in respect of such a person's property and affairs. Such a person is referred to as a patient. A patient may be restored to management of his own affairs where the court is satisfied that the patient has become capable of managing and administering his property and affairs.

Plymouth Land Registry

Mr. Speller: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average delay in dealing with inquiries relating to registration of title at the Plymouth land registry; what has been the longest during the last year; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Telephoned inquiries to the Plymouth district land registry are generally replied to within 24 hours and postal inquiries within 48 hours, or, if information has to be obtained from records, in up to five working days. However, replies to postal inquiries on plans matters are currently taking about three weeks on average because of the large number received. Extra resources have been allocated to this work to restore the normal response time. Information about the longest time taken to reply to an inquiry is not available.

Drug Damage (Class Actions)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to seek changes in the law which would permit class actions in drug damage cases, and to enable victims of drug disasters to win compensation in the courts more quickly and more cheaply.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has no immediate plans to introduce a system of class actions but he will be considering the possible scope for reform in this area of law. In the meantime, the Lord Chancellor will be moving amendments to the Legal Aid Bill which could facilitate the funding of multi-party actions; and the Civil Justice Review is considering how time and expense can be saved in personal injury litigation generally.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Information (Leaks)

Q15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 682, for what reasons she does not accept the premise on which was based the question about her policy towards setting up formal inquiries into the improper leaking of official information in cases where the salient facts appear to be known in advance of such an inquiry; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 4 February, at column 682.

Crumlin road Prison

Q17. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Her Majesty's prison Crumlin road, Belfast

Q58. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Her Majesty's prison, Crumlin road, Belfast.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Crown Estates Act 1961

Q121. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to seek to amend the Crown Estates Act 1961.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 17 December 1987, at column 621.

Hospital Matrons

Q170. Mr. Lord: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the implications for the quality of patient treatment as well as efficiency, of reintroducing the post of matron in National Health Service hospitals; if she will take immediate steps to restore this post; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government's aim is to see that the NHS provides cost effectively a high standard of health care for all who use it. Heath authorities are free to use the title of matron, and some do so. The Government are the first to recognise that for many people such a post is held in high esteem by the patients.

Dorset

Q176. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Dorset.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Economic League

Q179. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 683, what information she has as to whether any non-departmental organisations for which Ministers are responsible have used the resources of the Economic League in considering job applications; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Individual non-departmental public bodies are responsible for their own recruitment arrangements. Information on these arrangements is not held centrally.

Where the Civil Service Commissioners recruit on behalf of such bodies, I am advised that the commissioners have not used the services of the Economic League.

Hong Kong (Animal Welfare)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 26 January, Official Report, columns 171-72, if the total ban of the sale of rhinoceros products within Hong Kong from July will include all medical substances with an ingredient from any rhinoceros product.

The Prime Minister: The Hong Kong Government intend that the ban should include all medical substances with an ingredient from any rhinoceros product.

Departmental Co-ordination (Correspondence)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to improve co-ordination between the Departments of Employment and Health and Social Security, with particular regard to replies to correspondence for hon. Members on behalf of their constituents in the light of the transfer of a letter for the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 3 December 1987 from the Department of Employment to the Department of Health and Social Security, then back to the Department of Employment; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Departments concerned regret the delay in dealing with this particular case, to which a response will be sent very shortly. Co-operation between the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Employment is normally satisfactory and does not lead to delay in replying to correspondence.

Engagements

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours; and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department currently employs some 2,541 staff, including 477 in Her Majesty's Inspectorate. Conditioned hours are 41 a week in London and 42 a week elsewhere, including meal breaks.

There are 553 staff taking part in the flexible working hours arrangements in operation at the Department's Darlington office. Sixteen staff are currently job sharing.

Of the 131 staff employed part-time, 22 work the equivalent of a four-day week or nine-day fortnight.

All members of staff who complete at least five years (two years with effect from 1 April 1988) pensionable service are entitled to a pension on retirement at age 60. As such they all receive their individual full pension rights based on length of service and salary. Statistics are not readily available on the number of staff who might complete the full 40 years pensionable service required to achieve the maximum level of pension entitlement.

Religious Instruction and School Collective Worship

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of parents withdrew their children from (a) religious instruction and (b) school collective worship in the last academic year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department.

Secondary School Libraries

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 10 November 1987, concerning secondary school libraries, how the £10 million provided for 1988-89 by his Department will be allocated to schools; if any guidelines will be issued on how this money is to be spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The £10 million for secondary school library provision was identified within the expenditure plans for 1988-89 in response to representations from local authorities that there was a particular need in this area. It will now be for local authorities themselves to decide individually on the priority which they wish to give to secondary school library provision from within the resources available to them.

Education Reform

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking greater protection and encouragement of drama, music, art and design within the core in the national curriculum as currently proposed.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under the Government's proposals in the Education Reform Bill, art and music are foundation subjects within the national curriculum. They will therefore form part of the curriculum for all pupils of compulsory school age in maintained schools. We have received a number of representations stressing the importance of drama and design and asking that they be included in the national curriculum. We have also received a number of suggestions that the expressive arts subjects should all be included in the national curriculum through the means of integrated arts courses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Conservation

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy towards the promotion of energy conservation schemes in inner cities, in the light of the Association of the Conservation of Energy's report "Regenerating the Inner Cities — The Energy Dimension".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government believe that there should be effective energy conservation in inner cities and elsewhere. Pilot schemes to improve conservation have been supported by the Government's urban programme and other initiatives. The Department of the Environment is considering changes to the building regulations designed to raise standards of insultation, and is consulting the Association for the Conservation of Energy, among others.

Motor Trade (Abuse)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has made to the recommendations of the joint local authorities' associations on "Tackling Abuses in the Motor Trade", published in October 1987; and what consequential consultations he expects to have with interested parties.

Mr. Maude: Many of the recommendations of the joint local authority associations' report "Tackling Abuses in the Motor Trade" were discussed at a meeting on 15 December 1987 at which my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for roads and traffic and I met a delegation led by the Director General of Fair Trading. At that meeting it was agreed that it was desirable to amend section 60 of the Road Traffic Act 1972, to make it easier for trading standards officers to deal with the sellers of unroadworthy vehicles. Also, as a result of that meeting, it was agreed that a number of other suggestions to help combat the sale of unroadworthy vehicles and the fraudulent alteration of odometers would be examined further. My Deprtment and the Department of Transport are keeping in touch with the Office of Fair Trading and the various interested parties will be kept informed of progress on this matter.

Matthew Brown (Takeover)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to receive the report from the stock exchange surveliance department into alleged insider dealing in the shares of Matthew Brown prior to the takeover by Newcastle Breweries.

Mr. Maude: The stock exchange will no doubt submit a report to me if it considers it appropriate to do so.

ENERGY

Dounreay Nuclear Establishment

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in view of the reduction in support by European utilities for fast reactor development, what he estimates are the prospects for future public funding of the Dounreay nuclear establishment over the next (a) two, (b) five and (c) 10 years;

(2) if he will make a statement with regard to his policy on the future of the Dounreay nuclear establishment after the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The European collaboration is currently considering the research requirements for the development of a common fast reactor design. The Government and the utilities, as joint customers, will consider the implications of this work for the fast reactor research programme. The UKAEA is responsible for the allocation of work between its individual sites.

Fast Reactor Programme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the recent decision by the European fast reactor utilities group to build only one fast reactor on the timing, scale and viability of the EDRP proposal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Assessment of the impact on the EDRP proposal of decisions taken by the European utilities about future fast reactor orders is a matter for the applicants.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

World Bank

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the size of the general capital increase recently agreed by the executive board of the World Bank and the accompanying recommendations.

Mr. Chris Patten: Her Majesty's Government warmly welcome the recommendation by the executive directors of the World Bank that the board of governors should be invited to approve an increase in the bank's capital of US$74·8 billion—nearly 80 per cent.—with a 3 per cent. paid-in element. This increase would enable the bank to raise its annual level of lending from around $14 billion now to over $20 billion by 1992.

We also welcome that part of the executive directors' report which concerns the bank's future policies. In particular, the report reiterates the importance of the bank's role in assisting Governments to alleviate poverty; and there will be a growing concern with the social and environmental aspects of development. The bank will also continue to assist heavily indebted countries, both in designing structural reform programmes and in providing finance. The report also recognises the importance of promoting the private sector in developing countries.

As soon as the capital increase has been approved by the bank's governors, I shall invite the House to authorise my Department to subscribe to the United Kingdom's allocation of 30,450 new shares. The cost of the 3 per cent. paid-in element of these shares will be around $110 million, which we expect to pay over five or six years beginning in 1988-89. The remaining 97 per cent. of the value of the shares will be callable, and as such will represent only a contingent liability.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

47. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his discussions with Irish Ministers within and without the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council itself last met in November 1985. Since then I have had regular opportunities to meet Irish Ministers at meetings of the Foreign Affairs Council and other meetings of the European Communities, when I have been able to discuss matters of mutual interest.

In addition my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is the co-chairman, with the Irish Foreign Minister, of the Intergovernmental Conference established by the Anglo-Irish Agreement, within the framework of the AIIC.

China (Claims Agreement)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the arrangements for the distribution of the moneys received from the People's Republic of China under the claims agreement of 5 June 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) Order 1987 was laid before Parliament on 8 January and is due to enter into operation on 1 March. It provides for the Foreign Compensation Commission to register and evaluate claims by those who satisfy the British nationality requirements of the order in respect of bonds issued or guaranteed by the Chinese authorities before 1 October 1949 and in respect of property or other assets expropriated in China between 1 October 1949 and 1 January 1980. The order also sets out arrangements for the distribution of compensation to successful claimants.

Following a public tender the firm of Ernst and Whinney has been engaged to assist the Foreign Compensation Commission in its administrative and executive tasks. Advertisements will appear in the national press on 28 and 29 February indicating how detailed information may be obtained by potential claimants under the order.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Bail

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those charged with crimes were granted bail in 1987; how many of those granted bail had been charged with theft; and what percentage of those granted bail were (a) subsequently found guilty, or (b) subsequently found not guilty or (c) awaiting trial at the end of 1987.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the numbers of persons finally dealt with by the courts who had been remanded on bail by the police, magistrates' courts or the Crown court, by offence type and outcome, is published in chapter 8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 233), a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not available on the number remanded on bail at any particular time.

Westminster Children's Hospital (Break-in)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the circumstances of the break-in at Westminster children's hospital paediatric research laboratory on the night of 6 and 7 February and as to the progress of police investigations into this incident.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that an inquiry was instituted following a report from the Children's Medical Charity that premises occupied by the charity in Vincent square might have been unlawfully entered on the night of 6-7 February, but that this inquiry has now been terminated at the request of the charity, which no longer wishes to pursue the matter.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Gow (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston can expect a reply to his letters of 10 December and 13 December 1987 regarding Mr. and Mrs. F. Gow, of Glasgow G32.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

London Police Stations

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the London police stations at which (a) men and (b) women were being held in police cells on 15 February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A record of the London police stations at which men and women held in police cells on 15 February is not available and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand Prisoners (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many remand prisoners have been held in Newham police stations during the past year; how many are currently being held; what is the average cost per person per day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Reliable information as to the number of remand prisoners held in police stations in the borough of Newham during the past year is not available. There were six remand prisoners held in police cells at north Woolwich police station on 23 February and no such prisoners held in any other police stations in the borough of Newham on that date. The average cost of holding a prisoner in a police cell in London is £163 per day.

Murderers (Release)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement as to the circumstances in which Private Thain was released from prison after serving three years of a life sentence for murder;

(2) how many prisoners convicted since 1979 of murder and serving life sentences have been released within three years or less.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Private Thain was released on life licence in February 1987 after three and a half years' detention (including time spent in custody before his trial). His case was dealt with under the normal procedures for considering the release of life sentence prisoners. The date of the first formal review by the Parole Board machinery was fixed after consultation with the judiciary on the requirements of retribution and deterrence for the offence in accordance with the revised arrangements announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 30 November 1983, at columns 505-7, and Private Thain's release was subsequently authorised following a favourable recommendation by the Parole Board.

One other prisoner convicted of murder since 1979 has been released on life licence after three and a half years or less (including time spent in custody before trial). He was convicted at the age of 15.

Mordecai Vanunu

Mr. Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of fresh evidence as to the identity of Mordecai Vanunu's fellow passenger on flight BA 504 to Rome on 30 September 1986 and her presence in London at the time of Mr. Vanunu's disappearance, he will institute an inquiry into the case, to establish whether any crime was committed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: Any investigation by the police would have to start from evidence that a criminal offence had been committed in the United Kingdom, but no such evidence has been received. If anyone has such evidence, he should contact the police.

Special Event Radio

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about special event radio.

Mr. Renton: In 1986 my right hon. Friend announced an experiment in licensing low-powered transmitters to provide information or a commentary to those attending the sites of festivals, sporting events and so on. During the period of the experiment a total of 31 licences were issued covering 59 separate events. The experiment has generally been welcomed.

In answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 19 January 1988, we announced that we intend to bring forward legislation based on the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" to establish a new Radio Authority, which will have responsibility for licensing radio services, including special event radio. Pending new legislation, we have decided to continue with the licensing of special event radio on broadly the same basis as during the experiment. It has, however, been possible to reduce the licence fee to £100 for transmissions not exceeding 50 milliwatts maximum radiated power on the MF band. A fee of £450 will continue to be payable for services using a higher power, where this is deemed to be necessary to provide adequate coverage to the site, and an additional supplement will be payable for assignment of VHF frequencies. Full details of the general and technical conditions and the licensing procedure are set out in notes for the guidance of prospective licensees, available from the Home Office, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Job Dispersal

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any further plans to transfer Ministry of Defence jobs to Scotland.

Mr. Sainsbury: Apart from the very recent selection of the final tranche of 70 posts, to complete the MOD dispersal commitment of 1,400 jobs, to Glasgow later this year there are no current plans for any major relocation of jobs to Scotland. But we remain anxious to improve the geographical spread of defence employment, particularly in areas of high unemployment. However, all moves must be justifiable in both operational and economic terms.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants are employed in his Department; what are their average weekly working hours, and how many are (a) on flexitime, (b) on job-sharing schemes, (c) on a four-day working week or nine-day fortnight and (d) able to retire with full pension rights at 60 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of United Kingdom-based civilian staff employed by the Ministry of Defence on 1 January 1988 was 146,814, comprised of 87,650 full-time and 1,816 part-time non-industrial staff and 55,101 full-time and 2,247 part-time industrial staff. Data relating to the other information requested are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Search and Rescue, Chivenor

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his programme for replacement of the helicopter in use by the Royal Air Force search and rescue unit at Chivenor.

Mr. Freeman: Studies are continuing into the deployment of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force helicopters for search and rescue requirements. The results will be announced shortly.

Hazardous Loads (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military vehicles carrying nuclear and conventional explosives have travelled on public roads within west Yorkshire in each of the last five years; if the appropriate local authorities and the police were informed in all cases; what representations he has received about such matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the movement of nuclear weapons or the associated operational procedures. Over the past year five letters have been received about the alleged movement of nuclear weapons in West Yorkshire.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation Victims)

Mr. Churchill: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the evidence supplied by his Department to the National Radiological Protection Board in respect of the levels of radiation to which certain members of Her Majesty's forces had been exposed in the course of the British atmospheric nuclear weapon test and experimental programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my hon. Friend will be aware, the National Radiological Protection Board was provided with radiation dose information from the "Blue Book" listings and AWRE "health physics records". A sample test of the records provided was made to check that the information given had been accurately extracted. Information concerning the dose records of individuals cannot be published because of personal confidentiality, but any individual may apply to have his own dose record if he so wishes.

Murder

Mr. Mullin: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving members of the British armed forces have convictions for murder.

Mr. Freeman: One.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government (Capital Debts)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the capital debts owed by each of the district and metropolitan district councils in England.

Mr. Chope: Figures for outstanding advances for capital purposes for each local authority in England are published in the CIPFA publication "Capital Expenditure and Debt Financing Statistics". Copies for each year up to 1985-86, the latest year for which this information has been published, are held in the Library of the House.

Highway Authorities (Abolition of Powers)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to lay the order abolishing the powers vested in the local highway authorities under article 12 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I said in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) on 4 February, at columns 711-12, we hope to lay the new consolidated general development order a short time after the end of the two-month period for comment on the proposals in the consultation paper which we issued that day.

Darenth Park

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the name of the inspector who will preside over the reopened Darenth park planning application; and when the inquiry will commence.

Mr. Waldegrave: The reopened inquiry will be conducted by Mr. J. J. Parkinson, MSc, CEng, MICE, MIHT, ACIArb, who presided over the original inquiry in February 1987.

The applicants' agents have asked for time in which to prepare their evidence and we are in contact with them and Dartford borough council about possible dates in June or July. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as the arrangements have been finalised.

Howbury Grange-Dartford North Marshes

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the result of the inquiry on the Howbury grange-Dartford north marshes development.

Mr. Waldegrave: A decision on these proposals is expected shortly. I shall inform my hon. Friend of the Secretary of State's decision as soon as it is made.

Bees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached on the Green Paper on environmental pollution, published in 1986, in so far as it relates to the control of bees in urban areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We are considering the representations made in response to the consultation paper on air pollution control.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much, by weight or cubic capacity, radioactive waste is stored in Great Britain; whether any such waste is stored in the county of Durham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: One thousand three hundred and fifty cu m of heat-generating radioactive waste and 41,800 cu m of intermediate-level radioactive waste are currently stored in Great Britain. None of this waste is stored in county Durham. A further 2,430 cu m of low-level radioactive waste is in temporary storage in Great Britain pending its disposal at British Nuclear Fuels' site at Drigg, in Cumbria.

Badgers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received for the amendment of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to make it a criminal offence to dig out or otherwise destroy a badger's sett; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 12 February, at column 381.

Southwark (Rate Limitation)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the extra 2·98p offered by him to the London borough of Southwark in increased rate limitation for 1988-89 was (a) in respect of storm damage, (b) in respect of block grant losses, and (c) to create a working balance.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend's offer to the London borough of Southwark of a maximum rate of 101p—an extra 2·98p over the maximum he had proposed earlier — was made in the light of all the borough's circumstances which were known to him, and he has now prescribed a maximum of that level.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the next London Docklands development corporation financial report will be published.

Mr. Chope: The corporation will publish its annual report and accounts for 1987-88 in July 1988 and these will then be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will order an inquiry into the operations of the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The remarkable achievements of the LDDC are self-evident. No inquiry is necessary.

Office Building, Richmond Terrace

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what respect the quality of furnishings and fittings in the new Department of Health and Social Security building in Richmond terrace differs from the standard laid down in the design brief published in the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services), third report Session 1983-84, appendix 1.1. (HC 571).

Mr. Chope: The furniture and fittings in Richmond House are to normal Civil Service standards, with the exception of those in the fine room suites, which have been provided in a style compatible with their restoration. The design brief published in the Select Committee report does not detail furniture standards in a form for comparison to be made.

Urban Programme

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure on the urban programme annually from 1979-80 to 1987-88 according to outturn expenditure in (a) partnership, (b) programme authorities, (c) other designated districts, (d) urban development grants, (e) traditional urban programme, (f) Merseyside task force and (g) any others.

Mr. Chope: The information is in the table. This updates a table "The Urban Programme 1986-87: A Report on its operations and achievements in England" which was published by the Department in October 1987.

Partnership and Programme Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the estimated outturn expenditure on each partnership and programme authority annually from 1979-80 to 1987-88, estimated.

Mr. Chope: The figures are shown in the table. The table records outturn expenditure for 1979-80 to 1985-86, estimated outturn for 1986-87 and the initial allocations for 1987-88, since outturn data are not yet available.

[1] The Docklands joint partnership was dissolved after the London Docklands Development Corporation was set up in 1981. Expenditure since then was to meet continuing commitments.
[2] Hackney and Islington formed a joint partnership until March 1982.
— No programme authority expenditure in these years because authority did not have programme authority status.

Rates

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the likely average household increase in rates in cash terms of ratepayers living in the borough of Eastbourne and the district of Wealden for 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: None. This information is not available as East Sussex county council, Eastbourne borough council and Wealden district council have not yet set their rates for 1988-89.

MOD Properties (Sales)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list Ministry of Defence properties placed with the Property Services Agency for disposal in the southern and eastern regions: and if he will list those properties already disposed of since 25 November 1986 in the same regions.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The following lists show those MOD properties currently with PSA southern and eastern regions for disposal, and those sold since 25 November 1986:

SCOTLAND

Schools (Books and Equipment)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional moneys he intends to allocate to education authorities in Scotland for spending on school books and equipment; and how he will monitor the situation so as to ensure that these moneys are spent on books and equipment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provision is made for local authorities' expenditure on non-teaching costs (including books and equipment) within the total planned for local authority current expenditure, on which the determination of rate support grant is based. For 1988-89 planned provision for non-teaching costs is £466·2 million, an increase of 4·6 per cent. over the corresponding amount for 1987-88. Authorities have complete discretion to spend these resources as they think fit.

The Government have enhanced provision for local authority capital allocations by £2 million in 1987-88 and £3 million in 1988-89, specifically to support the introduction of secondary school science and technology courses. Authorities will be asked how these allocations have been used. It is intended to increase the specific grant available for expenditure on education in deprived areas in 1988-89 by £1·1 million for the purchase of books and equipment. This expenditure will be monitored under arrangements to be agreed.

"Fines and Fine Default"

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received a copy of the report by the Association of Directors of Social Work entitled "Fines and Fine Default"; and if he will implement any of the recommendations made in that report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 11 January 1988.

Long-stay Mental Hospital Patients

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-stay mental hospital patients have been released into care in the community in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) on 19 November 1987. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to income generation within the blood transfusion service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I encourage the Scottish national blood transfusion service to generate income in appropriate ways. In particular, income is generated through commercial companies contracting to meet the costs of research projects which are of value also to the National Health Service. Income is received from private medical establishments to meet the cost to the blood transfusion service of handling and processing blood and blood products supplied. Because the blood is freely given by blood doners, no charge is made for the blood itself.

Orthopaedic Surgery (Senior House Officers)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the filling of posts of senior house officer in orthopaedic surgery in Scottish health board areas; and if he will list the number of such posts unfilled.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of vacant senior house officer posts is not held centrally. Recruitment of hospital medical staff is a matter for individual health boards, but I am aware that some posts at senior house officer grade in orthopaedic surgery are difficult to fill from time to time. I am not aware of any serious problems on the delivery of service.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority area in Scotland are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time education in private nursery schools; and what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority in Scotland are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time nursery education, in nursery schools and nursery classes of primary schools, but excluding any children in reception classes in primary schools and any children in private schools; what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents; and what is the average hourly attendance, per week, of these children in (i) full-time, and (ii) part-time nursery education for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional numbers of three and four-year-old pupils in education authority nursery schools and departments in September 1987 and these numbers expressed as percentages of the estimated numbers of three and four-year-olds in the population in mid 1986 are set out in the table.

Information on hourly attendance is not available.

Maternity Units (Costs)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimate his Department has made of the average cost of delivery in maternity units in Scotland; (2) if he will list in the Official Report those maternity units where the cost per delivery is estimated as being less than £500.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Electricity Generation (Coal Burn)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated annual burn of coal for electricity generation in Scotland for each of the next five years.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that the annual consumption of coal over the next five years is expected to be in the range 4·5 million—5·5 million tonnes, although this is subject to a number of uncertainties.

School Leavers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give in tabular form the numbers of young people aged (a) 16, (b) 17 and (c) 18 years who left school in each year from 1983 to the most recent date; and if he will give his projections for school leavers in each age bracket till 2000.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the numbers of school leavers in school sessions 1982-83 to 1986-87 is set out in the table. Revised projections of school leavers are currently being prepared by officials. I shall reply to the hon. Member on this point as soon as possible.

School[1] leavers: by age[2]: Scotland

[1] All schools.
[2] Age at 31 December of the school session.
[3] Provisional.
[4] Or over.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimated time taken for power generation at Torness power station.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that it has made formal application to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate for permission to raise power on reactor 1 at Torness. The board anticipates receiving the required consent shortly and this will allow commissioning tests to proceed at up to 23 per cent. of the thermal rating of the reactor. Thereafter, it is planned to shut down the unit for computer adjustments before commencing delivery of power to the grid in May.

Tied Houses

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to a policy of exempting owners in small island communities from the requirement to sell tied houses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The "right to buy" provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 do not require owners to sell tied houses. The tenants' choice provisions in the current Housing (Scotland) Bill do not apply to houses exempt from the right to buy.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his projections of youth unemployment for the years 1987 to 2000; and what estimate he has of the likely impact of youth training schemes in reducing unemployment for those in the age bracket 16 to 20 years.

Mr. Lang: The Government make no projections of youth unemployment. It is known, however, that there will be a demographic decline in the number of young adults up until the mid-1990s.

No young people up to the age of 18 need be unemployed, as they are guaranteed a place on YTS. YTS is, however, a training rather than an employment measure and its purpose is to provide training to equip young people for entry into the labour market.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of (a) people registered as unemployed in Scotland for each month between June 1979 and December 1987, (b) employees in employment in Scotland for each month between June 1979 and December 1987 and (c) occupied places on special training and temporary work programmes in Scotland for each month between June 1979 and December 1987.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

Table 1 shows the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland between June 1979 and December 1987. Due to changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics since 1979 these figures are not comparable over the whole period. This information is available in the Library.

Table 2 shows the number of employees in employment in Scotland on a quarterly basis from June 1979 to September 1987 (the latest date for which information is available). This information is also available in the Library.

Table 3 gives available data on filled places for YTS and the community programme and Table 4 on starts on adult training schemes.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the total number of (a) male employees in employment and (b) female employees in employment in Scotland in each month between June 1979 and December 1987;

(2) if he will give the total number of employees in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) service industry in Scotland for each month between June 1979 and December 1987.

Mr. Lang: Monthly estimates of employees in employment in Scotland are not available. The table gives quarterly estimates, adjusted for seasonal variation.

Isle of Islay

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any proposals to designate all or any part of the Isle of Islay as an environmentally sensitive area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Catering and Domestic Service Contractors (Meeting)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, he will indicate which organisation or individual organised the meeting held on 2 October 1987; and if he will list all those who were invited to attend, and the basis on which they were so invited.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The meeting was organised by the Scottish Home and Health Department. Since the subject of the seminar was competitive tendering for domestic and catering services, invitations were issued to the trade associations representing domestic and catering firms and to the chairmen and general managers of health boards and the Common Services Agency in view of their responsibilities for managing the Health Service. Grant Thornton Management Consultants were invited because of their considerable experience of the process of competitive tendering in the NHS in England.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, he will indicate where the meeting of 2 October 1987 was held.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Health Service centre, Edinburgh.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, he will indicate which organisations and individuals made presentations at the meeting held on 2 October 1987; and if he will arrange for copies of any written material to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Presentations were made by the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association, the British Hotels Restaurants and Caterers Association and Grant Thornton Management Consultants. I am placing in the Library copies of material which was handed out by the CCMA to those taking part in the seminar.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 664, he will indicate the individuals or organisations represented by Grant Thornton Management Consultants at the meeting held on 2 October 1987, and whether Grant Thornton Management Consultants were paid any moneys from public funds in respect of their services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant Thornton did not represent any individuals or organisations at the meeting on 2 October 1987. They received no fee for their attendance.

"Inside Intelligence"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost hitherto of Her Majesty's Government's proceedings in the Scottish courts in relation to Anthony Cavendish and his memoirs, "Inside Intelligence."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost of the proceedings will only be known once accounts have been lodged with and taxed by the auditor of court.

Scottish Special Housing Association (Loan)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply on 22 February to the hon. Member for East Kilbride, if he will give the loss sustained by the Scottish Special Housing Association on the 183-day loan for £16 million advanced on 30 June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Special Housing Association incurred interest charges of £742,000 on the short-term loan of £16 million advanced from the National Loans Fund on 30 June 1987. Since these charges were incurred without adequate provision in the association's estimates, the association's financial regulations require that they should be shown as a financial loss.

Employment Practices

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conditions relating to employment practices are applied to firms substantially dependent on assistance from public funds.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: All companies are bound by employment law. No particular conditions relating to employment practices are applied to firms in receipt of assistance from public funds for which my Department is responsible.

D and A Allan (Clydebank)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money, in terms of grants, freedom from rates or other tax relief, rent reductions and other support, has been given to the firm of D and A Allan in Clydebank's business park since it was established.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The firm of David Allan and Co. Ltd. is located in the Clydebank business park within the Clydebank enterprise zone. No rates will therefore be payable by the company during the life of the zone. I understand that no direct assistance has been provided by the Scottish Development Agency, such as rental concessions or loans, offers of financial assistance have however been made by the Clydebank Enterprise Fund Ltd. (a body that is partly funded by the SDA) but details are confidential. Details of individual grant payment by my Department are also generally a matter of commercial confidentiality although cumulative payments of regional development grant to individual firms in excess of £25,000 in any single quarter are published regularly in British Business.

SDA (Contracts)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts, with the subject of the assignment, awarded to management consultants or accounting firms by the Scottish Development Agency, with the name of the consultant concerned.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 January 1988]: The amounts spent by the Scottish Development Agency on consultants' fees are given in the table. A detailed breakdown comprising the subject of the assignment and the names of the consultants cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate expense and breaching commercial confidentiality.

The figures, which exclude fees associated with capital contracts, include fees on research and development, advisory services, appraisal and administration (for example, tax and accountancy advice, pension and legal consultancies).

Nurses

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide data showing the average level of nurses' pay in Scotland; and if he will also express this as a percentage of the national average income.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 February 1988]: I regret that information on average annual earnings of nurses in Scotland is not collected centrally. Examples of rates of pay for nursing staff in direct patient care areas at the current level payable from 1 April 1987 are shown in the table.

Grade	Minimum of basic pay scale £ per annum	Maximum of basic pay scale £ per annum
Student Nurse	4,540	5,170
Nursing Auxiliary	4,565	5,855
Enrolled Nurse	6,250	7,750
Staff Nurse	7,300	8,600
Sister II	9,000	12,000
Senior Nurse 7	10,850	13,550

In addition, nurses receive payment for working unsocial hours and overtime. There are also allowances for staff employed in certain geriatric and psychiatric units.

The average gross weekly earnings of adults in full-time non-manual employment in April 1987 was £217·40. This figure includes overtime and other supplements to basic pay, and is not directly comparable to the salaries quoted above. For a typical married man earning the average gross salary quoted above, the 2 per cent. decrease in the standard rate of income tax introduced in the 1987 Budget led to an increase of £2·89 per week in take-home pay. For a typical single person the increase was £3·42 per week.

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the number and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Cope: There are two deputy secretaries in the Department of Employment. One has four secretaries (grade 3) and one assistant secretary (grade 5) reporting to him with responsibilities for:

- Employment policy including employment and training legislation, new initiatives and measures to assist the long-term unemployed—51 staff.
- Oversight of the employment service and its regional and local office organisation with some 41,000 staff.
- Training policy, including adult training and education, youth training, careers service inspectorate and youth employment policy—(and liaison with the Manpower Services Commission)—83 staff.
- European Community business relating to employment —32 staff.
- Press and information matters—53 staff.

The other has five under secretaries (grade 3) and one grade 4 reporting to him with responsibilities for:

- Overseas affairs, covering international employment matters, the labour attache service and the work permit scheme—137 staff.
- Health and safety policy, including legislation (and liaison with the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive)—nine staff.
- Economic and social advice and research on employment matters, including employment market research—54 staff.
- Industrial relations policy and legislation, including disputes, pay issues, wages councils, Wages Inspectorate, employment protection, redundancy and equal opportunities—(429 staff); and oversight of the Employment Appeal Tribunal (26 staff); the Central Office of Industrial Tribunals (362 staff); and liaison with the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service.
- The Department's interest in small firms and tourism, including the loan guarantee and enterprise allowance schemes and oversight of regional small firms advisory centres—238 staff.
- Employment statistics, including unemployment and vacancy series, index of retail prices, family expenditure and labour force surveys and the census of employment —263 staff.

Two directors at under secretary (grade 3) level also report direct to the permanent secretary covering:

- Finance and resource management, including all financial services and audit—676 staff.
- Personnel and management services, including computer services, procurement and office support services such as typing, messengerial and library services—1,131 staff.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many filled places there were for each region, including Greater London, at the end of October 1987, November 1987, December 1987 and January 1988 on (a) the community programme, (b) the enterprise allowance scheme, (c) YTS, (d) the young workers scheme, (e) the job release scheme, (f) the job share scheme, (g) the new job training scheme and (h) the job start allowance.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give, from the 1987 "Labour Force Survey" by region including Greater London, and by sex, the number of people not counted as unemployed by the definition using broad International Labour Organisation guidelines, on the grounds that they had not looked for a job in the four weeks prior to interview, but who had stated that they would like a job if one was available, and (a) were available to start work within two weeks or (b) were not available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Lee: Preliminary results from the 1987 "Labour Force Survey" are as shown in the following table:

[1] Including some wanting to start a new job already obtained, as in the ILO/OECD measure of unemployment.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the constituencies in which current unemployment is at over 15 per cent.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

YTS

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an estimate of the number of 16 and 17-year-olds seeking a place on YTS in Scotland, England and Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Cope: The estimated numbers of YTS entrants are as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Scotland	38,600	36,500	36,000
England	321,100	303,500	299,300
Wales	24,300	23,000	22,700

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an estimate of the number of places available on YTS for Scotland, England and Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Cope: The estimated numbers of YTS places in 1988-89 are as follows:

	Number
Scotland	65,000
England	450,000
Wales	30,000

Estimates for later years are not yet available.

Mr. A. Archer (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 3 December 1987 concerning the case of Mr. A. Archer, which was referred by his Department to the Department of Health and Social Security on 11 January and referred back to his Department on 16 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I apologise to my hon. Friend for the considerable delay in responding to his letter of 3 December 1987. Inquiries are being made to establish the facts relating to the case in question and I hope to be able to reply in the very near future.

Tourism

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the amount of money in per head of population spent on tourism promotion in each of the English regions, by region, and for Scotland and Wales (a) on promotion abroad and (b) on promotion within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: I regret that figures for the English regions are not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The figures show per capital expenditure (in the current financial year) by the national tourist boards on all activities in Britain and that by the British Tourist Authority, which has overall responsibility for the overseas promotion of tourism to the whole of Britain. The only national tourist board empowered to promote overseas is the Scottish board.

Wages

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been prosecuted in the last 12 months for breach of wages council obligations; and what was the overall number of work places in which infringements were discovered.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12 months ending 31 January 1988 the Wages Inspectorate prosecuted nine employers for offences under wages council legislation.

Statistics on infringements are compiled by reference to the numbers of each type found. In 1987, 4,443 establishments were found to be underpaying one or more workers, 1,249 establishments had inadequate wage records, 6,743 had inadequate records of time worked and 6,275 were not displaying a current wages council notice. These figures are not mutually exclusive. The overall number of establishments found to be infringing the legislation could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Maternity Pay Fund

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Government have for the maternity pay fund.

Mr. Nicholls: The Social Security Act 1986 provided for the introduction of statutory maternity pay from 6 April 1987 and for the assets and liabilities of the maternity pay fund to be transferred to the national insurance fund not later than 5 April 1988.

The transfer took place on 31 January 1988, on which date the maternity pay fund ceased to exist. A statement of account showing the state of maternity pay fund at the date of transfer will be published in due course.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Incontinence

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his current best estimate of the number of incontinence sufferers in the United Kingdom; if he will give an estimate of the distribution in incontinence by age and sex; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: An epidemiological survey conducted by the Medical Research Council's epidemiology and medical care unit between 1976 and 1986 covering a sample of the general population in England and Wales showed rates of prevalence of urinary incontinence per thousand population as follows:

Aged	Number
Males
5-14	69
15-64	16

Aged	Number
Over 65	69
Females
5-14	51
15-64	85
Over 65	116

As faecal incontinence is less common, it is not possible to give precise prevalence figures.

Cleveland Social Services Department

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to carry out an investigation into the running of Cleveland county council's social services department, when the Butler Sloss tribunal reports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I do not think it would be right for me to pre-empt the outcome and recommendations of Lord Justice Butler Sloss' inquiry report.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many medical laboratory scientific officers are currently employed in the National Health Service; what is the maximum number employable in each grade; how many vacancies exist in each grade; how many have left the profession in each of the last two years; and what were their grades upon departure.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1986, the latest date for which data are available to this level of detail, there were 14,624 (whole-time equivalent) medical laboratory scientific officers (including unqualified grades) in post in the National Health Service in England.

Information on the maximum number employable, vacancies, leavers and their grades upon departure is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairmen of individual regional health authorities for this information.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of medical laboratory scientific officers working in the public health laboratory service hold qualifications at degree level or above.

Mr. Newton: This information is not routinely collated and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retirement Age

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a system of equal retirement age of 65 years for women and men, with flexible pension arrangements for those who wish to retire earlier; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are considering what options for change in pension age might be appropriate. As well as equal treatment between men and women and the possibility of greater choice for individuals, our consideration of this subject has to take account of the social and economic impact of any change and of the long-term financial implications for individuals, employers and the state.

Foreign Students

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances foreign students in Britain, supported by grants from their own Governments, are entitled to full supplementary benefit; how many students are currently claiming; and what has been the cost to the public funds in each of the last three years.

Mr. Scott: Most foreign students are not entitled to supplementary benefit—except in emergencies—as they are admitted to the United Kingdom on the basis that they will be self-supporting and will not have recourse to public funds. However, students from other EC member states (and certain other European countries) can qualify for supplementary benefit on the same basis as British students; that is normally in the summer vacation only, and provided they are available for temporary work. The number of such students receiving benefit is not known but is thought to be minimal.

Community Care

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what part he intends the voluntary sector to play in the provision of community care for both mentally handicapped and elderly people; and how much money has been allocated to them for this purpose.

Mr. Newton: Voluntary organisations have an important role to play both in the direct provision of services and in the contribution they make to developing policies and planning future services. We shall continue to encourage and support them and to promote their partnership with the statutory sector. In 1986-87, DHSS financial support to the voluntary sector through the S64 general scheme of grants and a number of special initiatives exceeded £35 million. A substantial proportion of this money has been used to develop innovative projects which have extended the range of services to elderly and mentally handicapped people in the community as well as meeting the administrative costs of national voluntary organisations concerned with the interests of these groups.

War Widows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to review the pensions of elderly war widows with a view to increasing the benefit to bring it into line with that for more recently widowed spouses of service men, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department the standard rate of war widows pensions is the same regardless of when the service man died. Differences in widows' pensions paid under the armed forces pensions scheme are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

NHS (Spending)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of gross national product the Government now spend on the National Health Service, and what are the latest comparable figures for other EEC Governments.

Mr. Newton: The share of health expenditure in total national spending is conventionally calculated in relation to gross domestic product: that is the market value of all goods and services produced by United Kingdom residents.

In 1986, the latest year for which information is available for the United Kingdom, public expenditure on health was 5·3 per cent. of GDP.

The following table shows public expenditure on health as a percentage of GDP in EEC countries in 1985, the latest year for which internationally comparable data are available.

Nurses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether nurses employed within the National Health Service who transfer between hospitals or between health districts at their own request revert to the bottom of the relevant pay scale and lose any incremental points gained by years of qualified service.

Mr. Newton: A nurse who transfers to a post of equivalent grade within the NHS enters the salary scale for the new post at her existing salary.

Dr. Raj Kumar

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider the case of Dr. Raj Kumar and his claim under the National Health Service (Superannuation) (War Service Etc.) Regulations 1977; and if he will consider future amendment of these regulations.

Mrs. Currie: Dr. Kumar's claim to reckon his war service in the National Health Service superannuation scheme has been most carefully considered but cannot be met. The National Health Service (Superannuation) (War Service Etc.) Regulations 1977 require that entry to National Health Service employment, following war service, must have been on or before 30 June 1950. Dr. Kumar did not enter such employment until 17 September 1976 and so does not satisfy this requirement. There is no discretion under the war service regulations to vary the basic entry requirements. These have been applied consistently not only to the NHS superannuation scheme but to all other public service schemes.

The Government do not intend to amend these regulations.

Clinics (Brent)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which clinics in the Brent area health authority have been closed during the period 1979 to 1987; and which clinics are currently threatened with closure.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. As responsibility for local health services rests with district health authorities, the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Brent health authority.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received concerning the proposed closure of Perrin road clinic, College road clinic, One Tree Hill clinic and Monks park clinic in the Brent health authority area.

Mrs. Currie: Two representations have been received centrally. The provision of services locally is a matter for Brent health authority, and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority for further information.

Nottingham Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department will take to ensure that Nottingham family practitioner committee, as agent for his Department's stationery for doctors (a) retain adequate stocks of A5 envelopes for women No. FP6B, (b) begin to stock A4 stationery and (c) assist those doctors wishing to convert from A5 to A4 stationery.

Mr. Newton: I know of no problem with regard to stocks of FP6B envelopes. The necessary A4 stationery is available for those who require it either direct from Her Majesty's Stationery Office or from stocks held by the family practitioner committee; the method of supply is for local arrangement. We do not regard it as a matter of priority to allocate funds to assist the change from A5 to A4 stationery for medical record purposes.

Brent Health Authority

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of annual revenue allocated to Brent health authority from 1979 to the current dates.

Mrs. Currie: The allocation of resources to district health authorities is a matter for regional health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the North West Thames regional health authority for information about the annual revenue allocated to Brent health authority.

Rent Thresholds

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the rent threshold figures giving the maximum housing benefit subsidy for each local authority area from April.

Mr. Portillo: The table gives the threshold figure set for each rent registration area (county or London borough) for 1988-89. Each authority's threshold is the same as that of the registration area in which it is located.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what applications for extra heating allowances can be made by tenants of local authority property where the local authority installs new heating systems, which cause tenants to pay more in energy costs than before the new system was installed;

(2) what single adjustment payments are available to those in receipt of benefit to help meet the cost of new heating systems installed in properties by local councils.

Mr. Portillo: No additional weekly help is available towards the running costs of a new heating system. The supplementary benefit scale rates are intended to cover all normal day-to-day expenses, including heating.

Where people have not put aside sufficient money for fuel costs because of unfamiliarity with a new heating system, single payments are available for half of the running costs incurred during the first six months of using that system.

Benefit Offices (Staff Safety)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many regions of his Department have requested the fitting of reinforced glass screens in interview rooms in local offices because of concern for the safety of staff following benefit regulation changes in April; if he will list the total offices of his Department where such screens are to be fitted; and what is the total cost of additional security at these offices.

Mr. Portillo: No region has made such a request. However, because of the anticipated increase in private interviews from April, additional interview rooms are being provided in local offices where needed. Some of these rooms will have protective screens.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to protect local office staff from attacks by the public following the benefit changes in April.

Mr. Portillo: There are existing arrangements in local offices to protect staff from attacks by the public. The Department sees no need to supplement these provisions following the benefit changes in April.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of 16 and 17-year-olds claiming supplementary benefit in January, June and October of each year from 1979 to 1987 inclusive and for Scotland, England and Wales.

Mr. Scott: Information relating to the number of 16 and 17-year-olds claiming supplementary benefit in the months quoted is not collected, but the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of supplementary benefit on a particular day in each year indicated is as follows:

Year	England	Scotland	Wales	Great Britain
1979	59,000	12,000	7,000	79,000
1980	112,000	18,000	10,000	140,000
1981	134,000	22,000	11,000	166,000

1983	139,000	25,000	11,000	175,000
1984	148,000	25,000	11,000	184,000
1986	126,000	32,000	10,000	168,000
1987	not yet available

Source: Sample statistical inquiry conducted in November/December each year other than 1986 when it was conducted in February. No inquiry took place in 1985.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give an estimate of the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland, England and Wales who will lose their general entitlement to supplementary benefit as a result of the new social security provision for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information on which to base estimates of the numbers who will lose general entitlement to income support is not available since a number of groups of 16 and 17-year-olds will retain their entitlement through being in one of the categories to be exempt from the general provision. In addition, it is not known how many will continue in higher education or who will go straight from school into a job. However, an estimated 70,000 unemployed summer school leavers will be affected in September 1988. Of those, some 95 per cent. will lose entitlement to income support in their own right.

Patients (Compulsory Domiciliary Medication)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what considerations he or the Mental Health Act commissions are giving to statutory powers for compulsory domiciliary medications of patients not in institutions; if he is aware of any evidence of such need; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Compulsory treatment in the community is the subject of discussions that have been taking place within such organisations as the Mental Health Act Commission, the Royal College of Psychiatrists and MIND. At present no firm proposals have been put forward to the Department. No changes would be considered without a full consultation with all those concerned with mental health.

North Yorkshire Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations were carried out before making further appointments to the North Yorkshire family practitioner committee.

Mrs. Currie: All appointments of lay members to family practitioner committees are made by Ministers after consultation with the chairman.

Blood Transfusion Service

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on changes in the charges levied on private hospitals for blood ordered from the blood transfusion service.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance to health authorities on the handling charges for blood and its derivatives supplied to non-NHS hospitals is given in a "health notice" which is revised annually. This revision ensures that the handling charges continue to reflect the costs incurred.

Handling charges to be levied from 1 April 1988 until 1 April 1989 will be published in a "health notice" currently in course of preparation.

Drug Manufacturers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements exist to enable manufacturers to make representations against unfavourable recommendations of the advisory committee on National Health Service drugs and the advisory committee on borderline substances.

Mr. Newton: From today the committees will advise manufacturers in writing of proposed unfavourable recommendations they intend to make to Health Ministers. Manufacturers will be given 30 days from the date of the letter of the committee concerned (or longer at the discretion of the committee) in which to make written representations against the proposed recommendations. Requests for an oral hearing will be granted by the committees if they consider that a case is of such a nature that their advice cannot properly be formulated without one. Manufacturers will have the right to be represented at any oral hearings that may be arranged. The Committees will take full account of any representations received in formulating their recommendations to Ministers.

Borderline Substances

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the terms of reference of the advisory committee on borderline substances; and what are the criteria used to decide whether a borderline substance should be placed on the list of products excluded from prescription under the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances (ACBS) are:

"To keep under review the principles for determining whether preparations should properly be regarded as drugs, foods, toilet preparations, or disinfectants and to give advice on the classification of particular preparations in these categories submitted to the Committee."

In making decisions about borderline substances the Secretary of State is advised by the ACBS. This committee provides him with expert independent medical advice on the classification of so-called borderline substances and whether they should not be prescribed by general medical practitioners at NHS expense or should be prescribed for patients with specified medical conditions.

The committee considers all relevant information provided by the manufacturer of the substance concerned; and the sole criterion used by the committee in reaching an opinion that a particular borderline substance should not be prescribed is that it has no therapeutic use in the treatment of disease.

The Secretary of State, in deciding whether a borderline substance should be placed on schedule 3A to the NHS (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1974 and so not be prescribable by general practitioners at NHS expense, takes the committee's advice into account and uses the same criterion. Scotland and Northern Ireland have corresponding arrangements.

NHS Income-generating Unit

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to establish a National Health Service income-generating unit within his Department; how many staff, and at what grades, will be employed; what the cost will be; against what guidelines it will operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 19 January 1988]: I am today announcing the establishment of an income generation unit within the Department. The unit will be headed by Mr. Ron Kerr, district general manager of North Hertfordshire health authority on secondment to the Department. The unit will form part of the NHS Management Board's financial management directorate and will advise the board, and through it Ministers, on issues relating to income generation. Its responsibilities will include helping authorities to develop and implement income generation schemes; identifying and promoting opportunities for income generation; disseminating best practice to health authorities; and monitoring the success of the income generation initiative. We expect that, in addition to Mr. Kerr and his secretary, the unit will consist of four staff, of whom at least one will be a health authority officer on secondment.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of those currently receiving supplementary benefit who will receive transitional additions from April when income support is introduced; and if he will provide these figures by amount of addition in bands of £1, and by claimant category, for each local office of his Department in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley South (Mr. Hughes) Official Report, 29 January, column 411, if he will break down the number of claimants who will receive a transitional addition (a) by category of claimant and (b) by benefit office.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 February 1988]: Information on numbers of claimants receiving a transitional addition for each local office is not available. For Great Britain, the information requested is in the table.

Claimants currently receiving supplementary benefit who will receive a transitional addition from April 1988 by amount of addition and claimants category (thousands)

(ii) Figures may not add owing to rounding.
(iii) These estimates are based on data from the February 1986 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Income Support

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many recipients of supplementary benefit will fail to qualify for income support as a result of the changed definition of full-time work from 30 hours to 24 hours; and if he will indicate how many of these claimants are single parents.

Mr. Scott: [holding answer 19 February 1988]: It is estimated that some 15,000 claimants will fail to qualify for income support as a consequence of the reduction in the number of hours they may work and remain entitled to benefit. Fewer than 5,000 of these will be single parents. Those single parents and couples with children affected by this change may be entitled to family credit, and all claimants may be entitled to housing benefit and remission of health charges on the grounds of low income.

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's office at Yeoman street, Leicester, will supply the regional chairman of social security appeals tribunals in Nottingham its statement of case relating to the appeal against refusal of supplementary benefit by a constituent of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton, departmental reference number 103/22797, whose name and address has been given to his private office; and when the appeal will be dealt with.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The constituent to whom my hon. Friend refers lodged an appeal on 23 December 1987. The adjudication officer has forwarded his submission of the facts of the case to the social security appeals tribunal in Nottingham. The case has been listed for hearing on 8 April 1988.

Funeral Costs

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he is having with appropriate organisations on promoting simple and inexpensive insurance schemes to cover funeral costs; and if he will make publicity material available about such schemes.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 February 1988]: There are no discussions in progress with any organisations about the promotion of private insurance to cover funeral expenses. There are no plans for the Department to publicise such schemes.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to encourage people taking out simple and inexpensive insurance to cover the cost of their own funeral and to plan for their own funeral arrangements; what consultation is taking place with the insurance industry to devise suitable insurance schemes; and if he will make arrangements for premiums to such schemes, either in lump sum or regular payments, to be claimed from his Department.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 February 1988]: We are aware that many people wish to take out private insurance to cover the cost of their own funeral, but there has been no consultation with the insurance industry to devise such insurance schemes. We believe that public funds should primarily be used to help those on low incomes who are faced with funeral expenses which they cannot afford to pay. Such provision is currently made from the social fund to those in receipt of certain income-related qualifying benefits.

AIDS and Drug Misuse

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the report of the Advisory Council on Drug Misuse on AIDS and drug misuse before he responds publicly to the report's recommendations.

Mr. Moore [holding answer 28 January 1988]: I have recently received the first report on AIDS and drug misuse by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs. I am grateful to the council for completing this stage of its work so quickly, and we are giving the report urgent consideration. Meanwhile, I have set in hand arrangements for publishing the report, which I expect to be available in a few weeks.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sherry

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) why excise duty regulations permit British sherry producers to pay lower duty in relation to alcoholic strength than is charged on sherry; and whether he will make a statement on this distinction;

(2) why competing sherries are taxed under different regimes.

Mr. Lilley: Excise duties on wines and made wines are charged by reference to alcoholic strengths at the time of duty payment. The same rates apply to United Kingdom production as to imports. British sherry producers can achieve a lower duty burden by blending their products after payment of duty.

Engine-Testing Fuels

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking the exemption from excise duty of fuels used in bona fide engine testing.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this matter.

Dollar Value

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the statement on the meeting of the European Council, Official Report, 15 February, columns 705-17, whether he will publish in the Official Report the value of the dollar agreed as the basis for deciding what constitutes exceptional circumstances; and what call would be made on the contingency reserve if the nominal rate of the dollar fell so as to reduce the real rate, in terms of relative export prices for manufacturers, to the average for 1978-80.

Mr. Brooke: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in response to the question by the hon. Member on 22 February 1988 at column 15.

Money Supply

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the expansion of the money supply, using each of the main monetary indicators, for each quarter since May 1979, as a percentage of the figure one year previously.

Mr. Lilley: Quarterly figures for M0, the main narrow measure of the money supply, were published in the 1988 edition of Economic Trends Annual Supplement for the period 1982 Q3 to 1987 Q3. Earlier quarterly figures have not been published. Figures for M0 in 1987 Q4 can be derived as the average of the monthly figures in table 11.4 of Financial Statistics, February 1988.

Quarterly figures for broad money back to 1979 were made available by the Bank of England in June 1987. Subsequent figures for broad money are shown in tables 11.2 and 11.3 of Financial Statistics, February 1988.

Funeral Charges (VAT)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the effect on the present level of funeral charges of introduction of zero-rate value added tax on funeral charges.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: This information is not available.

THE ARTS

Arts Marketing

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of the Arts what plans he has to continue encouraging arts marketing in the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: I recognise the need for professionalism in marketing the arts. I welcome the creation of the Arts Council's marketing department, which has embarked on a wide programme of developments in this field. After extensive consultations, I have decided to provide additional resources for new marketing initiatives, with which I shall be particularly associated, to supplement and complement the work already in hand. These will replace the 1987-88 experimental arts marketing scheme.

The Arts Council in co-operation with other bodies, including the Museums and Galleries Commission, will take the lead on two new measures: the development of a distance learning package and a programme of training courses for top management. The distance learning package is intended to make good practice on arts marketing widely available through an instructional video and supporting literature. The marketing courses are aimed at increasing the awareness of the value of marketing among those concerned with the management of arts bodies.

TRANSPORT

Air Safety (Alcohol and Drug Abuse)

Mr. Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken by the Civil Aviation Authority to determine whether alcohol or other drugs are being abused by those responsible for air safety; whether any screening tests for drug abuse have been conducted by the Civil Aviation Authority; and what is his policy on screening for alcohol abuse and other substance abuse by air traffic controllers and airline pilots.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

A1 (Improvements)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to be completed on improvements to the A1 between Berwick-upon-Tweed and the Scottish border.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Two schemes are programmed for improvements to the A1 north of Berwick-upon-Tweed. One involves a small scheme modification to the roundabout at the northern end of the Berwick-upon-Tweed bypass, and should be completed in 1988-89. The other will provide a dual carriageway from Marshall meadows to the Scottish border or beyond. This is a larger scheme and the most effective solution may require consultation with the Scottish Development Department. Work should be completed in the early 1990s.

Manchester International Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement, further to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, from the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, on 11 January, Official Report, column 144, on the prospects for increased United States carrier access to Manchester international airport; and what steps he is taking to keep the airport's board in touch with development.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United States Government have just responded to the proposals that we tabled early in January. The United States proposals are being studied with interest and urgency.

It is too early to give precise indications of future prospects for increased access by United States carriers to Manchester. The Government are pleased that the United States Government appear to wish to negotiate on this matter.

We seek to ensure that Manchester International Airport Authority is continually kept in touch with developments.

Cycling

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of steps his Department is taking and has taken to make cycling safer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Pedal cyclists are one of the vulnerable road user groups. Progress on cycling safety can be made in steps.

Some 90 per cent. of cycle casualties are on local authority roads. They have the responsibility to provide cycle facilities. The Department provides technical advice and guidance to local authorities on the design and construction of cycle facilities based on research and application studies conducted by the traffic advisory unit and the TRRL. Current work includes 24 innovatory schemes, funded by the Department, and five large-scale urban cycle route projects.

The new "Highway Code" includes advice to cyclists on safer riding techniques and to motorists on the need to be aware of cyclists. As part of our current road safety publicity programme we are distributing relevant material to local authority road safety officers.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the number of people who travel by bicycle and the distances of journeys made by bicycle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 3½ million people in Great Britain use a pedal cycle in an average week. The average length of a bicycle journey is about 1¾ miles. Cycling accounts for about 2¾ billion miles a year on Great Britain's public roads.

London Underground

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support the Government are giving to efforts to fight crime on the London Underground.

Mr. Channon: Following my Department's report, "Crime on the Underground", we have made available £15 million to London Underground Ltd. over three years to implement a range of measures to improve the security of passengers on the Underground. These measures, which will be implemented progressively, include equipping 42 deep-level stations with facilities to provide reliable underground radio communications; pilot schemes at a number of stations involving staffed focal points; safe waiting areas; and passenger alarms with talk-back facilities. If successful, these measures will be extended to other parts of the network. The British Transport police are considering ways of extending the application of new policing methods which brought a reduction of more than 25 per cent. in robberies last year at the southern end of the Northern and Victoria lines.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what types of radio equipment are currently available for British Transport police officers engaged on duties within the London Underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Transport police use standard police personal radios in the VHF band. Following a recommendation in my Department's report, "Crime on the London Underground," London Underground Ltd. is at present installing leaky feeder cables at 42 key deep level stations which will enable the BTP to have instant radio contact underground with their control centre.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many police officers have been deployed on regular duties on the London Underground in each of the past five years; and what is the number currently in service.

Mr. David Mitchell: The average number of British Transport police officers deployed on regular duties on the London Underground in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1983	278
1984	262
1985	269
1986	304
1987	319

The complement of the Underground division of the British Transport police has been increased to 350 officers; the number so far in post is 314.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many arrests have taken place on the London Underground system on each of the past five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Transport police do not record the number of arrests on the London Underground. The number of of prosecutions for offences on the Underground in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Indictable	Non-indictable
1983	1,417	8,969
1984	1,113	6,441
1985	1,207	6,162
1986	1,397	4,651
1987	1,365	2,687

The decrease in prosecutions for non-indictable offences reflects a reduction in the problem of ticket fraud with the introduction of travelcards and changes in London Underground's ticketing and inspection procedures.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities arising from people falling under trains have occurred on the London Underground system in each of the past five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The table shows the fatalities on all lines of London Underground Ltd. during the last four years resulting from persons falling under trains. Figures for 1983 are not readily available.

	1984	1985	1986	1987
Trespassers	19	19	15	20
Suicides	22	24	33	27
Others:
Falling off platforms	1	4	3	1
Attempting to board as train departed	—	1	—	—
Totals	42	48	51	48

Note: In all cases listed as falling off platforms drugs, drink or illness was a main factor.

Bus Services (London)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the deregulation of bus services in Greater London.

Mr. David Mitchell: In recent months we have received 10 representations from hon. Members, a submission from the London Regional Passengers' Committee and a small number of letters from members of the public about the future deregulation of bus services in London.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the adequacy of staffing levels on bus services in Greater London.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the management of LRT and the bus operator concerned to determine what staffing levels are adequate to run bus services efficiently and safely.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of London Regional Transport, he will raise with him the standard of service provided by London Regional Transport subsidiaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: We expect to discuss a range of issues when we next meet the chairman of London Regional Transport, including quality of service.

A6 Disley Bypass

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if pursuant to the answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 750, he will list the local councils and public bodies he consulted, with the advice received in each case, in relation to the route of the A6 Disley bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In accordance with usual practice, when preparing for the current public consultation we invited views, on a strictly in-confidence and non-committing basis, from the councils and public bodies listed as follows. Each now has the opportunity to submit formal views.

Cheshire County Council
Derbyshire County Council
High Peak Borough Council
Macclesfield Borough Council
Stockport Borough Council
Peak Park Planning Board
Chinley, Buxworth and Brownside Parish Council
Disley Parish Council
Lyme Handley Parish Council
New Mills Parish Council
Poynton with Worth Parish Council Countryside Commission
Nature Conservancy Council
National Trust
Chester Regional Health Authority
Derbyshire Regional Health Authority
North West Regional Health Authority
British Gas
British Geological Survey
British Pipeline Agency Ltd.
British Railways London Midland Region
British Telecom
British Waterways Board
CEGB
Whaley Bridge Parish Council
Cheshire Constabulary
Derbyshire Constabulary
Greater Manchester Constabulary
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Civil Aviation Authority
North Western Electricity Board
North West Water Authority

Buses (Testing)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in how many cases of which he is aware bus or coach operators have submitted more than one vehicle for test using the same set of tyres on the different vehicles so submitted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such records are not available

Spot checks at operators' premises and of vehicles in use are normally carried out when operators are suspected of using vehicles in an unroadworthy condition.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take as a result of Ladyline Coaches of Cheshire recently submitting nine vehicles for test with the same set of tyres.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are not proposing to take further action as a result of these allegations.

Ladyline Coaches operates a fleet of eight buses varying in size from minibuses to large coaches. No more than four vehicles could have interchangeable tyres. The Department has no evidence to support the allegations regarding the use of the same tyres on more than one vehicle. In any case the practice is not illegal.

The Department's vehicle examiners inspected six of the operator's vehicles in January 1988. All were found to be in a satisfactory condition.

North Wales Coast Railway Line

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the decision not to proceed with work to upgrade the track of the main north Wales coast line across Ynys Môn during the next financial year.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. Detailed decisions of this sort are a management matter for BR.

A1/A1(M) (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, by accident type and class of vehicle, the numbers of accidents on that part of the A1/A1(M) road which falls within the county of Durham, in the last year for which figures were available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Accidents on the A1 in Durham: 1986

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
Total accidents	3	17	22	42
Of which:[1]
involving Pedal cycles	—	—	—	—
Motorcycles	—	1	—	1
Cars	2	14	15	31
Buses and coaches	—	—	—	—
Light goods vehicles	1	3	2	6
Heavy goods vehicles	2	2	10	14

[1] Some accidents involve two or more vehicles and will therefore be counted more than once.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Commodities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the statement on the meeting of the European Council, Official Report, 15 February, column 711, whether he will explain why it would be bad for the countryside if United Kingdom farmers were no longer allowed to export some of their surplus production of cereals and dairy products at the expense of the United States and other food-exporting countries; and if he will include in the Official Report an estimate of the effect on United Kingdom exports of manufacturers of the growth of this trade.

Mr. MacGregor: The United Kingdom has a successful export trade in agricultural products. If access to export opportunities were denied to our farmers, other countries would take our place on world markets. This would have the effect of reducing substantially the amount of land devoted to cereals production, to the detriment of the rural economy.

Greek Bananas

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements were made at the European Economic Community summit for putting a ceiling on the output of bananas from Greece and for reviewing the Greek restrictions on imports of bananas from other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no common regime for bananas. The Commission is responsible for administering the free circulation provisions of the treaty of Rome.

Agricultural Policy

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the Church of England to discuss implications for the standard of living of rural people of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from clergymen in rural areas about the effects of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy on the rural areas.

Mr. Gummer: I receive representations from a wide range of organisations, on the impact of agricultural policy on the rural areas. On 17 February, for example, I had a useful meeting with a delegation from Rural Voice led by its chairman, Rev. Jeremy Martineau.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total value of cereal, beef and cheese held in intervention stocks in the United Kingdom as of the latest available date, in June 1979 and in June 1983.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total book value of cereals, beef and cheese held in intervention stores in the United Kingdom on those dates were (£ million):

	Number
December 1987	308
June 1983	108
June 1979	50

Alternative Land Use

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends meeting representatives of the National Farmers Union to discuss the potential for farm woodlands.

Mr. Gummer: We are in regular contact with the National Farmers Union about the development of farm woodlands. I discussed our revised proposals for the farm woodland scheme with the NFU and other interested organisations on 16 December.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with farming organisations concerning the relationship between farming and forestry, following his proposals for alternative land use.

Mr. Gummer: I met representatives of various farming organisations recently to discuss this subject and the proposed farm woodland scheme in particular.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the set-aside proposal agreed in Brussels preclude the possibility of a lowland farmer receiving payment for set-aside and using the grazing fallow to diversify or expand his sheep flock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The terms of the recent agreement by the European Council enable member states to permit grazing of set-aside land under conditions be laid down. The details have still to be discussed in the Council, and decisions on the precise shape of the scheme in the United Kingdom will follow after that.

Grain Production

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the EEC output of grain in each of the past 10 years; by how much production will have to rise above the 160 million tonne threshold to increase the burden on the EEC budget; what is the Government's forecast of (a) production and (b) production costs in each of the next five years when the price reduction has been triggered if rising yields per hectare are maintained; and what contribution the new arrangements are forecast to make to reducing agricultural surpluses.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 18 February 1988]: Total production of cereals in the previous 10 years in the countries which now make up the European Community was as follows:

	Million tonnes
1978-79	137·0
1979-80	132·7
1980-81	144·2
1981-82	134·3
1982-83	145·2
1983-84	138·2
1984-85	173·2
1985-86	160·5
1986-87	154·3
[1]1987-88	153·1

[1] Provisional.

The effect of increased levels of production on the EC budget would depend on a wide range of factors, including prices of cereals on world markets and the ECU-US dollar exchange rate.

The Government do not make forecasts of production or production costs on the basis requested by the hon. Member; I would, however, refer him to the reply I gave him on 22 February, at column 49.

The introduction of stabilisers for cereals will reduce the level of producers returns and so the incentive to produce cereals.

Cereals

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for each member state of the European Community, the yield of cereals in the harvest year 1986-87, the tonnage liable to co-responsibility levy and the proportion of levy paid to date.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The most recent figures available for production and the tonnage on which co-responsibility levy has been collected for the 1986-87 Community harvest are as follows. Information is not available on the tonnage liable to the co-responsibility levy.

Member state[1]	Production million tonnes	Tonnage on which levy collected by 31 July 1987 for transactions to 30 June 1987
Belgium	2·3	3·2
Denmark	8·0	1·7
West Germany	25·6	11·5
Greece	5·2	0·9
Spain	16·0	4·5
France	50·1	14·8
Ireland	1·8	0·9
Italy	17·8	6·3

Member state[1]	Production million tonnes	Tonnage on which levy collected by 31 July 1987 for transactions to 30 June 1987
Luxembourg	0·1	0·1
Netherlands	1·3	2·7
United Kingdom	24·5	[2]11·7

[1] Portugal does not yet implement the EC cereals regime.
[2] Up to 31 December 1987 levy had been collected on 13·4 million tonnes in respect of the 1986-87 harvest.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crumlin Road Prison

1. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will pay an official visit to Her Majesty's prison, Crumlin road, Belfast, to discuss prison conditions.

Mr. Stanley: I had the pleasure of paying an official visit to Her Majesty's prison, Crumlin road, on 25 November.

Security

3. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation.

29. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

30. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

41. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in the Province.

44. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Since I last answered questions in the House on 28 January, three members of the Ulster Defence Regiment and one civilian have died. The threat remains high, but the courageous and determined efforts of the security forces are continuing to yield results. In particular, they have recovered a number of significant caches of arms and ammunition thought to have belonged to both Loyalist and Republican terrorist organisations.

So far this year 34 people have been charged with serious offences and 222 weapons, 63,616 rounds of ammunition and 392 lb of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland. In addition, already this year the Garda Siochana has made a number of very significant finds of arms and ammunition. These include some 125 weapons, approximately 80,000 rounds of ammunition and almost 600 lb of commercial explosives.

Public Order (Prison Sentences)

7. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions have taken place under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987; how many right hon. and hon. Members from Northern Ireland constituencies have served prison sentences as a result; and how many local councillors have served prison sentences.

Mr. Stanley: On the latest available figures 2,108 people had been prosecuted under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987; five hon. Members had chosen to be imprisoned rather than to be fined for offences under the order. Similar information in respect of local councillors is not readily available.

40. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many right hon. and hon. Members representing constituencies in Northern Ireland are presently in prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: Four.

Single Payments

13. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of single payments paid by the Department of Health and Social Security in 1987-88; and what plans he has to protect the living standards of claimants under the new social fund arrangements.

Mr. Needham: Single payments in the 52 weeks ended 12 January 1988 amounted to nearly £24·3 million.

From April 1988, people will generally be expected to manage on their weekly income. However, under the social fund there will continue to be non-repayable grants to help people maintain themselves in the community. Loans will also be available to help with budgeting and there will be limits to the size of weekly repayments. These will be set in proportion to the applicant's benefit level and his continuing commitments, the aim being to ensure that the level of recovery is not unreasonable.

United States Investment

15. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has about the effect of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland's decision not to prosecute certain Royal Ulster Constabulary officers on the stated investment intentions of United States industrialists in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There is no sign of any such effect, nor do I expect any.

22. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of United States investment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There are currently 24 United States companies in Northern Ireland employing 10,171 people.

Employment (Equal Opportunities)

18. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards anti-discrimination practices in employment.

Mr. Viggers: The Government are firmly committed to ensuring full equality of opportunity in employment for all Northern Ireland. Proposals for strengthening the law relating to discrimination on religious or political grounds are now being finalised. The consultation period on a proposal for a draft Sex Discrimination (Amendment) Order has just been completed, and that measure, which brings the position in Northern Ireland into line with that in Great Britain, should become law by the summer. Provision to prevent discrimination against disabled persons in employment continues to be made on the same basis in Northern Ireland as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

34. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish his White Paper on equal opportunity.

37. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will now announce the date for the publication of his White Paper on Equal Opportunity.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend will be making an announcement on the Government's policy proposals in the near future.

Capital Grant Scheme

20. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the effect of the abolition of the standard capital grant scheme on the amount of money available for industrial development in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: There will be no diminution in the priority given to measures which will further strengthen the Northern Ireland economy. Resources will continue to be made available as necessary for the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit to deal with any soundly based project that could not proceed without Government support.

Stalker/Sampson Report

21. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will reconsider his decision not to publish the Stalker/Sampson report; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now reconsider his decision not to publish the Stalker/Sampson report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: No.

Unemployment

10. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received from the Northern Ireland trade union movement about unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: In December 1987 I received a copy of the document "Making the Economy Work — An Alternative Development Strategy," published by the Amalgamated Transport and General Workers Union. Otherwise I have not received any representations from the trade unions on general economic issues since November 1986, although I am always ready to do so.

ACE Schemes

23. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to expand the use of ACE schemes for community care initiatives; and if he will make a statement on proposed new ACE schemes in this field.

Mr. Viggers: On 13 December last I announced that an additional £10 million was being allocated to the ACE programme in 1988-89 and approximately 30 per cent. of this increase would be available to ACE sponsors who promote community health and social care projects. Consideration is currently being given to a number of proposals for the establishment of new ACE projects as well as the expansion of existing schemes in the community care field.

RUC (Catholic Recruits)

24. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what projections he has made of levels of recruitment of Catholics to the Royal Ulster Constabulary over the next five years.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that no such projections have been made; nor could they be made meaningfully, being dependent on the quality and background of all future applicants. The RUC will, however, continue its long-standing efforts to recruit Roman Catholics to the RUC and the RUC Reserve.

Police Authority

25. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Northern Ireland Police Authority; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet and correspond with the chairman of the Northern Ireland Police Authority and other members of the authority, as necessary, on matters within the authority's statutory remit. The specific matters concerned are confidential.

Electricity Generation

26. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has yet reached a conclusion on the provision of new electricity generating capacity in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the likely start date for Kilroot phase II.

27. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the provision of new electricity generating capacity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) earlier today.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

31. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is satisfied with the workings of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I believe the agreement and the conference established by it provide the best means of co-operation with the Government of the Irish Republic, in the interests of both countries.

Labour Statistics

32. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of present unemployment levels in Northern Ireland; and if he will take steps to ensure that unemployment totals for Northern Ireland are in future published at the same time as unemployment rates by constituency in Great Britain.

Mr. Viggers: At 14 January 1988, the latest date for which unemployment figures are available, there were 121,778 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, representing 17·9 per cent. of the working population. Compared with the same month last year, that is a decrease in unemployment of 9,427.

Unemployment figures for Northern Ireland are published by press release on the same dates as those for the rest of the United Kingdom, public holidays permitting.

Wages Act 1986

33. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to extend the Wages Act 1986 to Northern Ireland; what is his estimate of the effect on employment levels of young people that the removal of wages council protection would have; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Draft Wages (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, which was laid on 10 December 1987, will introduce reforms similar to those already in place in Great Britain under the Wages Act 1986. I am not aware of any studies which quantify the number of jobs which will arise from the specific reforms which are proposed and attempts to estimate the effect on employment levels of the removal of young persons from the scope of wages councils are not likely to be productive. However, the removal of statutory minima which prevent employers offering jobs at rates which young people would accept will be conducive to their increased employment.

Dogs

17. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the operation of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: No. The Department of Agriculture has monitored the operation of the order since it came into force; it has been well received and there are no plans to carry out a review.

Police Discipline

35. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next proposes to meet the Northern Ireland Police Authority to discuss police discipline.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

RUC (Reorganisation)

36. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the reorganisation of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

39. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the reorganisation of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend did so on 17 February.

38. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Royal Ulster Constabulary officers, and of what rank, are to be subject to internal disciplinary proceedings following events reported in the Stalker/Sampson report, for obstructing the officers of the Stalker/Sampson team in carrying out their inquiries.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay).

Kincora Boys Home

19. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants working in his Department were interviewed in connection with investigations into the Kincora Boys Home.

Mr. Tom King: This is a matter for the RUC. It is, however, not police practice to reveal details about persons interviewed during the course of their investigations.

Job Creation (Foreign Investment)

42. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created in the last five years as a result of foreign firms setting up in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: A total of 6,472 new jobs have been promoted in the period 1 April 1982 to 31 March 1987 as a result of new foreign investment and expansions of existing foreign-owned companies.

RUC-Garda (Meetings)

43. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary last met his counterpart in the Garda of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: On 16 January.

Education Reform

45. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the consultation paper on education reform is to be published.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the next few weeks.

Terrorism

46. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he remains satisfied with progress in the fight against terrorism in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall not be satisfied until the evil of terrorism is eradicated. I believe that no level of terrorism can ever be justified. We will continue to give every support to the security forces in their efforts to defeat the men of violence and to press for the closest possible co-operation between the RUC and the Garda Siochana.

Travelling People

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring takes place to determine atmospheric lead levels at legal and other sites occupied by travelling people; and, where such monitoring has occurred, what levels have been recorded.

Mr. Needham: Monitoring of atmospheric lead levels, other than emissions from the scheduled processes under the Alkali and Works Regulation Act 1906, is the responsibility of the district councils in Northern Ireland. No monitoring of lead levels has been carried out on sites occupied by travelling people in the Province. I shall be arranging for a circular to be issued to the councils drawing attention to the possible need to initiate monitoring on such sites.

Rubbish Dump, Magheramorne

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what compensation will be offered to Magheramorne owner-occupiers, the sale of whose property is blighted by the proposal to develop the largest rubbish dump in Northern Ireland at Magheramorne.

Mr. Needham: There is no provision in the planning legislation for the payment of compensation to third parties as a result of planning decisions. In any event a decision has not yet been reached on the proposal.

Training Centres

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of training centres in Northern Ireland, their courses and their attendances in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Viggers: The available information for the two years ended 31 March 1987 is lengthy and in tabular form. I have sent a copy to the hon. Member and arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the next meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference is to be held.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the next meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference is to be held.

Mr. Tom King: We had a meeting yesterday and I hope to meet Irish Ministers again shortly.

European Heritage Funding

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the list of projects approved during the past three years for European Heritage funding; and if he will make a statement on the procedure for submitting applications for European Heritage funding.

Mr. Needham: No projects for European Heritage funding have been approved in Northern Ireland.

The procedure for submitting applications is usually contained in a spring issue of the official journal of the European Communities in each year. Applications have to be submitted by the owner of the property or his agent. The journal gives details of the regional or national organisation responsible for selecting projects and a closing date. The organisation establishes the eligibility of the project after which the Commission, on expert advice, makes a decision on whether or not to provide financial support.

The conservation service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland carries out this function for the Commission in Northern Ireland. It is advised by the Historic Buildings Council for Northern Ireland.

Homelessness

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has of the current cost of facilities for the homeless in Northern Ireland and what has been the cost in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: There are three statutory hostels for the homeless, which are run by the Eastern health and social services. Expenditure on them in each of the last five years was as follows:

1982-83	305,190
1983-84	273,543
1984-85	246,067
1985-86	309,516
1986-87	239,131

A comparable figure for 1987-88 is not yet available.

Expenditure by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on its homeless advice unit since it was established in November 1985 is as follows:

1985-86	38,972
1986-87	62,239
1987-88	[1]57,638

[1] estimate to 31 January 1988

Detailed information on the cost of general facilities for the homeless provided by the Housing Executive and registered housing associations through the housing programme is not readily available.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current funding for voluntary organisations dealing with homelessness in Northern Ireland; and what are the criteria to qualify for such funding.

Mr. Needham: In 1986-87, the Department of Health and Social Services and the four health and social services boards paid grants totalling £299,154 to voluntary organisations dealing with homelessness.

Such grants are payable on a discretionary basis to voluntary organisations providing services similar or related to any of the health or personal social services under article 71 of the Health and Personal Social Services (NI) Order 1972.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implications of the recent cuts in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive budget in the light of the transfer of responsibility for homeless people from the Department of Health and Social Security to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and what additional funding he proposes to provide for this new function.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive's budget is determined each year as part of the public expenditure survey. The transfer of responsibility for the temporary accommodation needs of homeless people to the executive will be accompanied initially by a transfer of resources from the health and social services boards. Subsequent bids by the executive for additional funding to be directed towards meeting the needs of the homeless will be assessed in future public expenditure surveys.

Teacher Training Places

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teacher training places in Northern Ireland have been taken up by students from the Irish Republic during the past year as a result of European Community regulations; and what he estimates the demand to be for that source for the next two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ten such students took up training in 1987-88. No significant change is expected over the next two years.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what manpower modelling processes have been set up within the equal opportunities unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel (NI); and if he will make a statement on their operation.

Mr. Stanley: The equal opportunities unit has concentrated to date on establishing a sound data base and analysing the resultant material in terms of age profile, promotion rates, wastage and so on. This enables trends to be identified leading to measurement and evaluation of the variables which are influencing those trends. The results have been fully reported in the unit's first two reports. When the analytical work is completed, the unit will be considering whether there exists a sound foundation for manpower modelling which avoids the dangers of projections based on uncertain trends and simplified assumptions.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the equal opportunities unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel (NI) has only produced one report of its investigations in four years.

Mr. Stanley: Following the instituting of comprehensive monitoring arrangements, the unit has produced two reports—the first on 22 July 1986 and the second on 17 December 1987. Copies of both reports are in the Library.

Community Services Grant Aid

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list by district council area, the community services grant aid given to district councils during 1986-87 and 1987-88;

(2) if he will list by district council area, the community services grant aid to be given to district councils during 1988-89 and the date on which district councils were given this information.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is shown in the table. I am planning to make an announcement in March in respect of 1988-89.

NI 2000

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the NI 2000 programme for cleaning up the environment in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: The NI 2000 board was appointed on 20 January 1988. Since then two meetings have been held to plan operational strategies for the promotion of environmental improvement projects. Already proposals for projects have been received from both the public and private sectors and I look forward to receiving progress reports from the chairman of NI 2000.

Car Parks

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many car parks are run by the Department of the Environment (NI); how many are free and in how many charges are levied; and how many have been privatised since his answer on this matter to the hon. Member for Epping Forest on 3 April 1987.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment (NI) controls 334 car parks of which 91 are charged and 243 are free. A total of 31 charged car parks are managed by the private sector. No car parks have been privatised since 3 April 1987.

Nursery Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to the introduction of an under-fives initiative in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The implementation of this objective is being carried forward in the detailed operational plans drawn up annually by the health and social services boards in the light of local needs, priorities and available resources. I have no plans to introduce a special initiative for the under-fives in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of mother and toddler groups in Northern Ireland and the assistance or concessions offered to them by area boards, councils, the Housing Executive and other bodies.

Mr. Needham: The extent to which health and social services boards provide financial or other support to such groups is not readily known, but some units of management do offer modest grant-aid (usually in the form of launching grants) to groups operating in their districts. Both the Department of Education and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive may assist groups by the provision of spare capacity in schools and the letting of dwellings or the leasing of land at nominal rent to permit such groups to carry out their activities.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate nursery education provision in each board area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of available places in 1987-88 are as follows:

Board Area	In nursery schools	In nursery classes in primary schools	Totals
Belfast	1,250	850	2,100
Western	500	225	725
North-Eastern	825	300	1,125
South-Eastern	750	100	850
Southern	625	725	1,350

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide details of the financial or other assistance given to pre-school playgroups by (a) each health and social services board and (b) each education and library board.

Mr. Needham: In addition to contacts with pre-school playgroups in connection with registration procedures required under the Children and Young Persons Act (NI) 1968, the health and social services boards provided financial assistance as follows in the year ended 31 March 1987:

Northern Board	75,054
Southern Board	31,361
Eastern Board	823,948
Western Board	142,837
Northern Ireland total	1,073,200

Education and library boards provide no assistance to pre-school playgroups.

Privatisation

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by Northern Ireland departments and statutory boards with the privatisation of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is planning to privatise the artificial insemination service at 1 October 1988 and the pig carcase classification service by 1 January 1989. A number of other possibilities in the Northern Ireland public sector are also under consideration.

Tertiary Education

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what EEC legislation and court rulings were taken into account when deciding the terms and conditions governing eligibility of European Economic Community students for places and grants for tertiary education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: These terms and conditions were not determined separately from those in the rest of the United Kingdom. The Government took mainly into account a judgment of the European Court of Justice in February 1985 in a case referred to it by a Belgian court (Gravier v City of Liege).

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the cost of funding tertiary education in Northern Ireland, for students from European Economic Community member states (a) in total and (b) for each member state;

(2) how many students from the United Kingdom, eligible to receive tertiary education in Northern Ireland, have been unable to gain places during 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88;

(3) what is the total number of students in Northern Ireland who have applied for entry to tertiary education in 1988, listed by education establishments.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures the Government intend to implement to curb the use by students from European Economic Community member states of Northern Ireland's tertiary education system to the detriment of students from the United Kingdom who are unable to obtain places there.

Dr. Mawhinney: No measures are proposed. There is no evidence that EC students are displacing United Kingdom students from places in tertiary education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total number of students who commenced tertiary education in Northern Ireland in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, listed by educational establishments;

(2) what was the total number of students involved in tertiary education in Northern Ireland in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, listed by educational establishments.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what terms and conditions are applicable in Northern Ireland to students from European Economic Community member states, regarding eligibility for (a) Department of Education grants and (b) education and library board grants to pursue tertiary education;

(2) what terms and conditions are applicable in Northern Ireland to students from European Community member states, regarding fee-paying places in tertiary education.

Dr. Mawhinney: EC students who gain places in Northern Ireland institutions of tertiary education and who satisfy certain criteria of eligibility in respect of residence, type of course and previous study have their tuition fees paid.

Fees-only awards are made by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland and the education and library boards, respectively, to EC students who, in competition with Northern Ireland students, obtain postgraduate bursaries or studentships or discretionary awards in respect of other courses of tertiary education.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the position of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King: The first part of my statement on 17 February dealt with the aspect of possible disciplinary proceedings as a result of the investigations carried out by Mr. Stalker and Mr. Sampson. I have undertaken to inform the House of further developments.

As I also told the House on 17 February, I have discussed certain aspects of the Stalker-Sampson inquiry report with the Chief Constable. In particular he has accepted in principle all the recommendations made by Mr. McLachlan.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Chief Constable of the RUC regularly. Our meetings are confidential and it would not be right to disclose their content.

Children

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the proportion of four-year-olds in Northern Ireland (a) in single parent families, (b) whose parents are unemployed and (c) whose parents receive family income supplement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 February 1988]: The information is not available. However the proportion of four-year-olds in families receiving one parent benefit is approximately one in 17·5 of all four-year-olds in families receiving child benefit.

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the yearly number of employees of the Fair Employment Agency for each year since its inception, indicating their grade and classification and brief job description.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 February 1988]: The information required is detailed in the table. In addition the agency are currently engaged in the recruitment of 11 additional staff: One assistant director (employer liaison) (deputy principal); four employer liaison officers, two conciliation officers, one education officer, and one research assistant (all at staff officer level) and two clerical staff.

Written Answers to Questions

EMPLOYMENT

Quarrying

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why no prosecutions were undertaken in the period covered by the Miner and Quarries Inspectorate's report for the period ended March 1986 in the light of the number of accidents therein reported.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's inspectors make use of a range of enforcement techniques from advice and persuasion, through the issues of enforcement notices to prosecution. Prosecution is regarded as the last resort and was not judged to be appropriate in any case during this period.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed benefit claimants there were in each parliamentary constituency at January; and how many of them were (a) aged under 25 years, (b) aged under 25 years, and unemployed for 12 months or more, (c) aged under 25 years, and unemployed for six months or more or (d) of any age and unemployed for 12 months or more.

Mr. Lee: I am sending the hon. Member a table showing the number of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency in Great Britain, for each of the age and duration categories requested, on 14 January 1988, which is also available in the Library.

Construction Industry (Accidents)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what form figures for the accident rate on building sites are collected.

Mr. Nicholls: Accident rates are calculated nationally for the construction industry by dividing the total number of relevant accidents to employees reported to the Health and Safety Executive by the estimated total number of employees in the construction industry.

Tourism

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many local authorities (a) have a designated tourism office, (b) have a department or sub-department of tourism, or (c) have a tourism officer employed within an economic development unit.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I welcome the fact that a large and increasing number of local authorities have staff with specific responsibilities for developing tourism within their areas.

TRANSPORT

Cabotage

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects the European Transport Ministers to discuss the question of cabotage rights for European shipping within the European Economic Community.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend intends to raise the question of shipping cabotage at the Transport Council of Ministers next month with a view to a more substantive discussion at a subsequent Council under the current German presidency.

Air Misses

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the official definition of a risk-bearing air miss; (2) what is the official definition of a reported air miss.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the Civil Aviation Authority's published air miss statistics, air misses are categorised as A, B, or C depending upon whether there was a definite risk, a possible risk, or no risk of collision. Risk-bearing air misses are those in categories A and B.

In the same context a reported air miss means an air miss reported by any civil or military pilot in United Kindom air space. Reports are filed when a pilot considers that his aircraft may have been endangered by the proximity of another aircraft to the extent that a risk of actual collision existed.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner-city Partnership Programme

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of the inner-city partnership programme for Lambeth for 1988-89 in real terms as a percentage of the allocation for 1986-87/88.

Mr. Chope: The 1988-89 allocation is 82 per cent. of the 1986-87 allocation and 88 per cent. of the 1987-88 allocation, at 1988-89 prices. But in 1986-87 Lambeth underspent its allocation by over 13 per cent. and estimates for 1987-88 indicate an underspend of a similar proportion. The allocation for 1988-89 is a slight increase on the estimated 1987-88 outturn at 1988-89 prices.

Vacant Land (Tower Hamlets)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the London Residuary Body will transfer the open space on the junction of Bruce road and Powis road, E3, to the London borough of Tower Hamlets with a view to incorporating it into Bromley recreation ground and enabling plans for an under-fives playground to proceed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The future of this site is currently under discussion by the LRB and the council of the London borough of Tower Hamlets. It is open to the London residuary body to make a proposal to the Secretary of State for the transfer of this property to the council under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985.

Homeless Persons

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 1 February to the hon. Member for Cornwall, South-East (Mr. Hicks) Official Report, columns 429-30, what are the criteria used to determine the allocation of money for housing projects for the homeless to the local authorities listed.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 20 January at cols. 749-52.

Rugby Matches (Crowd Control)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the presidents of the home country Rugby football unions concerning crowd control before, during and immediately after major rugby matches.

Mr. Moynihan: I last met the president of the Rugby Football Union on 16 December 1987 and I had brief discussions with the presidents of the Welsh and Scottish Rugby Unions on 20 February 1988. The question of crowd control was not discussed at either meeting.

Northamptonshire County Council

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of full-time equivalent employees of the Northamptonshire county council as at the end of December 1979, December 1983, December 1984, December 1985, December 1986 and December 1987.

Mr. Chope: The results of the joint manpower watch December 1987 survey are not expected until towards the end of March 1988. The numbers of staff employed by Northamptonshire county council, at September for each year, are as follows:

	Full-time	Part-time	Total Staff (FT + PT)
1979	[1]	[1]	[1]
1980	9,775	8,532	18,307
1981	9,471	8,321	17,792
1982	10,327	8,527	18,764
1983	10,264	8,330	18,594
1984	10,331	8,480	18,811
1985	10,347	8,837	19,184
1986	10,163	9,362	19,525
1987	10,123	9,656	19,779

Full-time equivalent figures are not available for individual authorities.

Derelict Land Survey

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the latest derelict land survey.

Mr. Chope: The returns for the next derelict land survey are due in by the beginning of October. Information will then be analysed, and we expect to be in a position to publish the results of the survey in the summer of 1989.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 1 February regarding a representation to meet his officials over the Wimpey no-fines properties in Blallenall, Walsall.

Mrs. Roe: I replied to the hon. Member on 24 February.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the Property Services Agency is using external accountancy practices to check consultants' fees; how many instances of discrepancies have been discovered; and if he will list, by directorate and region, the amounts received from refunds or by a subsequent reduction of fees;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 531-32, if he will describe the nature and scope of his Department's inquiries into the case of procedural irregularity involving the consultant Maurice Baguley in relation to the overseeing of maintenance contracts at the Property Services Agency's works offices at Westminster and Teddington.

Mr. Chope: There were no cases of irregularity arising from the employment of Maurice Baguley and Partners, on the maintenance management contract at the PSA district works office at Westminster, which was successfully completed in June 1987. No inquiries have therefore been instituted. The case to which I referred in my answer to a previous question, columns 531-32, related to an employee of the consultants T. Dunwoody and Partners who are employed at Teddington district works office on a similar contract.

The procedural irregularity was uncovered during one of the routine management checks carried out at all district works offices which were instituted as part of the agency's drive to maintain efficiency and probity in its operations. Subsequent inquiries included interviews with the consultancy partners and the consultants' employee involved and also checks on all other contracts handled by that employee. It was following his interview that the employee handed in his resignation. There was no evidence whatsoever that any other employee of the consultants' firm was involved or had acted irregularly.

Lambeth Bridge House

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who are the landlords and freeholders of Lambeth bridge house, Great Westminster house and Horseferry house; and whether the owners have recently expressed any concern about the state of repair of these buildings.

Mr. Chope: The landlords and freeholders of Lambeth bridge house, Great Westminster house and Horseferry house are, respectively, Adamant Investment Corporation Ltd., Legal and General Assurance Society Ltd. and Pearl Assurance Ltd.

I can confirm that discussions have been held between PSA and the landlords of Lambeth bridge house and Horseferry house on the extent of necessary repairs and maintenance. Work on both buildings will commence in the next financial year. Repairs to Great Westminster house are the responsibility of the landlord. I am advised that the landlord does not propose to effect any repairs and intends instead to demolish and redevelop the building. Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food staff are due to leave the building by September this year, on lease expiry.

Urban Programme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects funded in each of the London boroughs through the urban programme announced on 9 February.

Mr. Chope: The allocations announced on 9 February were provisional, and do not relate to an approved list of projects. They are subject to approval of the inner area programmes submitted by each authority.

Water

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether domestic rateable values will continue to be used for water charging purposes once they are abolished for local authority purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: It is clearly not in the interests of consumers that the water industry should continue to use rateable values for water charging purposes indefinitely, once domestic rates are abolished for local authority purposes from 1990. The Government therefore intend to amend the Local Government Finance Bill to prohibit the use of all rateable values, both domestic and non-domestic, for water charging purposes from 1 April 2000. This will give each water undertaker a period of 10 years after domestic rates are abolished in which to choose and introduce alternative means of charging.

Consultants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of occasions where consultants employed by the Property Services Agency have been discovered by it to have overcharged for consultancy services; and if he will also identify in relation to each occasion the amount of money subsequently repaid, or the amount of subsequent fee reduction.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 February 1988]: As part of the agency's established procedures, PSA staff check all fee accounts submitted by consultants. Any inaccuracies or overcharging are dealt with immediately, normally by making the necessary adjustments to the consultants fee account before payment. Most adjustments are of a routine nature and bearing in mind that thousands of consultants' accounts are submitted on a monthly basis, no central record is kept of such adjustments.

On some very large projects a firm of chartered accountants is being employed by PSA to conduct an independent audit on certain aspects of the consultants' bills. To date bills from nine major consultants have been audited by the firm and savings of over £1 million representing some 2·5 per cent. of consultant fees have been made in the fees claimed. The commissions concerned were let by two directorates, the Directorate of Defence Services 1 and the Directorate of Civil Accommodation.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of all spending over budget in the last financial year by each department of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. Chope: Provision was made for LDDC's expected expenditure by votehead, as recorded in table 1 of class X, vote 3, of the main Supply Estimates (HC 227—IX, X: March 1987). A further £2,163 was transferred from the Merseyside development corporation when it became clear that MDC would not require its full allocation. Of this transfer, £1,163,000 was allocated to votehead (F) and £1,000,000 to votehead (G). Virements between other voteheads were either within the LDDC's delegation limits, or were approved by the Department. Outturn compared with final provision, as amended, in 1986-87 was therefore as follows:

£ thousands

	Final Provision	Outturn
A. Running costs	9,500	10,624
B. Estate management; maintenance, rates, security	3,900	3,301
C. Environment improvement works	6,200	7,100

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Acrylic Yarn Imports

Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the concerns of the United Kingdom acrylic yarn spinners about imports from Turkey have been raised with the European Economic Community in Brussels recently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs informed the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 22 February of the industry's serious concern about these imports. I have previously indicated to my hon. Friend that there was an overriding need to agree textile restraint arrangements with Turkey. Nevertheless, I have ensured that our growing concern at the import levels for acrylic yarn is made clear to our Community partners and the Commission. They have been told of the mounting evidence of damage from Turkish imports to United Kingdom acrylic yarn producers who have been forced to introduce extensive short-time working. I shall continue to monitor the domestic situation closely. If sufficient justification for seeking action from the Commission emerges, I shall act accordingly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Pension Funds

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans for the conversion of the pension funds of academic and technical officers in former British dependencies into pay-as-you-go schemes.

Mr. Chris Patten: Four Indian family pension funds were converted into "pay-as-you-go" schemes in 1985. Nine colonial widows' and orphans' pension funds — Botswana, Ghana, Lesotho, Malaysia (Sabah), Malaysia (Sarawak), Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Swaziland and Zambia — were converted in 1986. Three others — Guyana, Kenya (European Officers) and Kenya (Asian Officers)—will be converted once the apportionment of assets to be vested under the British Government's control has been agreed with overseas Governments concerned. The overseas superannuation scheme and the overseas service pensions scheme and fund are also scheduled for conversion in due course. None of these funds and schemes are exclusively confined to academic and technical officers.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the last audit was done on the pension funds of academic and technical officers in former British dependencies; and when the next one will take place.

Mr. Chris Patten: Funds under the control of the Overseas Development Administration are audited annually. We do not have comprehensive information on funds administered by other Governments.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to ensure that all those entitled to benefit from the pension funds of academic and technical officers in former British dependencies are in receipt of those entitlements.

Mr. Chris Patten: The primary responsibility for ensuring that any entitlements are put into payment rests with the beneficiary concerned. However, the Overseas Development Administration is also attempting to establish the present whereabouts of several thousand former contributors and contingent beneficiaries, the great majority of whom served on short-term contracts in the former British dependencies and who, for one reason or another, have lost contact with the schemes. In addition, upon receipt of notification of the death of an officer, the ODA checks whether any widow's or dependants entitlement exists under the funds and schemes under its control.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the pension funds for British academic and technical officers in former overseas dependencies run by the Overseas Development Administration are indexed; how this has been applied; and from what date the indexation began.

Mr. Chris Patten: The pension funds and schemes administered by the Overseas Development Administration are not themselves index-linked, but all expatriate officers' individual pensions awarded under those schemes are elegible for an index-linked pension supplement under United Kingdom pension increase legislation. The date from which pensioners have the benefit of indexation varies with their individual circumstances.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many pension funds for British academic and technical officers in former overseas dependencies are run by the Overseas Development Administration; and if he will list them.

Mr. Chris Patten: Forty-eight widows' and orphans' pension schemes and funds are administered by the Overseas Development Administration. Details are as follows:

Public Officers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the criteria used by his Department for assessing whether or not those working in former British dependencies prior to independence were public officers.

Mr. Chris Patten: The term "public officer" does not identify a single group of officers who worked in the former British dependencies. In broad terms, it covers those who worked in a territory's central Government service. But each country's law and administrative procedures have their own variations and exceptions: an assessment of whether an individual was a public officer for any particular purpose can only be made in context.

Non-administrative Officers (Compensation)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many non-administrative officers in former British dependencies received lump sum compensation on independence; and what criteria were used in assessing who received such compensation.

Mr. Chris Patten: No central record exists of the occupational status of the tens of thousands of overseas officers whose pensions are the responsibility of the British Government, or of whether they received compensation for loss of career. The information could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The criteria for determining eligibility for compensation, which varied from territory to territory, were set out in each country's schemes.

Cyprus

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 125, why it is not possible except at disproportionate cost to state (a) how much money given by Her Majesty's Government was applied for training and scholarships for (i) Greek Cypriots and (ii) Turkish Cypriots in the last three financial years and (b) how many (i) Greek Cypriots and (ii) Turkish Cypriots received training or scholarships funded wholly or partly by Her Majesty's Government in the last three financial years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Within the technical assistance training programme expenditure on training and scholarships for the period in question is not recorded separately in terms of whether the recipients are from the Greek or Turkish parts of the island. The costs are attributed to the country as a whole as expenditure is incurred. To determine the sums expended by community would require examination of all the files of those who received awards in the three years concerned.

Following my earlier reply, arrangements are being made to ensure that in future both numbers of recipients and sums expended from aid funds on each community are recorded.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority area in England are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time nursery education in private nursery schools; and what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority in England are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time nursery education, in nursery schools and nursery classes of primary schools, excluding any children in reception classes in primary schools and any children in private schools; what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents; and what is the average hourly attendance, per week, of these children in (i) full-time and (ii) part-time nursery education, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested on the numbers and percentages of children in maintained nursery education in January 1987 is given in the table. Information on the average hourly attendance of these pupils is not collected centrally.

Education Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, in respect of each inner London borough council (a) the actual number of staff transferring to it on 1 April 1986 as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council and (b) his estimate of the number of staff to be transferred to it at 1 April 1990 as a result of the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 18 February 1988]: Some 100,000 staff were transferred from the Greater London council to successor authorities by the main statutory order. Of these, the majority transferred to the joint authorities and the Inner London education authority, and separate figures by boroughs are not available. My right hon. Friend has said that we expect block transfer arrangements to cover well over 80 per cent. of ILEA staff, that is over 56,000 full-time equivalent staff.

WALES

Prescription Charges

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of National Health Service prescriptions issued per year in Wales in respect of single-course treatments for which more than one prescription charge was levied; and what are the revenues accruing.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available.

It is not possible to identify from information given on prescription forms whether the items being prescribed are for a single course of treatment or otherwise.

Felinheli (Port Dinorwic) Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he now anticipates building of the Felinheli (Port Dinorwic) bypass in Gwynedd will begin; and when he proposes to go out to tender with regard to this scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Felinheli (Port Dinorwic) bypass is programmed to start in the period January 1988-December 1990, as set out in "Roads in Wales 1985". Invitation of tenders will depend on the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of financial resources.

Eye Test and Dental Examinations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) eye tests and (b) dental examinations took place in Wales in each of the years 1980 to 1986 by area health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [pursuant to his reply, 30 November 1987, c. 405-8]: I regret that the last line of the table—namely, that part which related to dental examinations by the general dental service—contained errors. The following table provides the amended information:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General whether the review of the Government's legal service will examine and make recommendations on all aspects of the management of legal staff of the Crown prosecution service and the office of the procurator fiscal.

The Attorney-General: The terms of reference of this review are to consider:

1. what legal services are needed by the Government;
2. how those services can most effectively and economically be provided and organised, taking account of the Government's policies of privatisation and of contracting out;
3. what changes are needed in the management of legal staff in Government service, including their recruitment, retention, training, deployment and remuneration, so as to make best use of them; and to make recommendations.

The review will therefore cover the work of the Crown prosecution service and , I understand, the office of the Procurator Fiscal. However, it is unlikely to look in detail at the structure and organisation of the Crown prosecution service because the department is so new.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General whether he is satisfied with the workings of the Crown prosecution service; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service has now been in existence for almost 18 months throughout England and Wales, and slightly longer in the old Metropolitan local authority areas. It has had a difficult time, principally because it has not yet been able to recruit all the lawyers needed, and this has placed great strains on its staff, who have had to work long and hard to cope with these shortages. I am more than satisfied with their work.

There has also been a considerable amount of criticism of the service's work. Some of it has been well founded; more of it has not, deriving from shortcomings for which the service itself was not responsible. Despite its problems the Crown prosecution service is fulfilling the tasks set for it; there is now a prosecution service in every area of the country, national policies on prosecutions have been developed and implemented, and there is increasing evidence of an improvment in the quality of cases coming before the courts. The Director of Public Prosecutions has decide on a management strategy for the future of the service which will build on these achievements.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General what changes have taken place in the remuneration of the staff of the Crown prosecution service since their salaries were debated in the House on 11 December 1985, Official Report columns 1009-24.

The Attorney-General: In addition to the 1986 and 1987 Civil Service pay awards the following changes have been made to the pay of staff employed within the Crown prosecution service:

1. An allowance payable to Crown prosecutors and senior Crown prosecutors working within the London, Surrey, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Essex, Kent and Thames Valley areas of the Crown prosecution service. This allowance is also payable to grade 6 lawyers working within the London, Surrey, Hertfordshire and Bedfordshire areas.

2. An additional allowance is payable to Crown prosecutors and senior Crown prosecutors who cover some weekend or bank holiday court sittings.

3. Following the transfer of staff from local authorities to the Civil Service a number of pay anomalies were identified. The great majority of these have been resolved and this has involved the payment of additional salary to some 500 staff.

4. An additional increment has been added to the salary scale maxima of those staff at grades 4 to 7. This increment will be awarded to those officers whose performance meets the criteria for payment of a performance point.

The following table indicates the salary scale minima and maxima of staff employed in the grades shown within the service, as they were at April 1985 and as they are now.

[1] Includes additional increment payable under the performance pay scheme.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General how many officers have been seconded from outside London to London in each quarter since the Crown prosecution service was set up; what was the extra cost of such secondments, and what is the present shortfall of staff (a) generally and (b) in the London area.

The Attorney-General: The number of officers seconded from outside London to the three London areas since the Crown prosecution service became fully operational on 1 October 1986 was as follows:

126 in the quarter ended 31 December 1986;
160 in the quarter ended 31 March 1987;
132 in the quarter ended 30 June 1987;
33 in the quarter ended 30 September 1987;
26 in the quarter ended 31 December 1987.

The extra cost of such secondments was approximately £630,000.

As at 30 January 1988 the Crown prosecution service had vacancies for 718·5 staff. Of these 253 were within the London area.

Commonhold

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Attorney-General what is his response to the recommendations of the working group of the Law Commission on commonhold (Cm. 179); and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The working group report Cm. 179, to which my hon. Friend refers, was published in July last. It makes far-reaching recommendations. A decision on implementation will be taken when these have been fully considered.

CIVIL SERVICE

Government Offices (Smoking)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will give details of arrangements for designated non-smoking areas in Government buildings.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: This information is not held centrally. It is for each Government Department to determine arrangements for non-smoking areas in its buildings taking account of local circumstances.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make it his policy to ban smoking in all Government offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: It is for individual Government Departments to decide what measures to take to restrict smoking in their offices. I encourage Departments to take whatever steps are practicable to achieve this and have asked Departments to give every encouragement to local managers to conduct surveys of the attitudes of their staff with a view to extending non-smoking areas in offices.

In my own Department, management, staff and trade unions are co-operating in a trial ban on smoking at the workplace. I will pass on the lessons from this exercise to other Government Departments.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Out-patient Waiting Times

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to publish details of out-patient waiting times on a district by district basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information on out-patients waiting times is not at present collected centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time nationally for the results of cervical cancer smear tests; and what is the average waiting time for women in north Staffordshire.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally in the form requested. According to Health Circular HC(88)1, published on 12 January, the target for laboratories is that they should aim to send the result of a cervical smear to the doctor who submitted it within a maximum of one month of receiving it. Health authorities in England reported that in December laboratories serving 56 out of 191 districts were not achieving this target. The average processing time for these 56 districts was seven weeks. Where backlogs do exist they are being tackled mainly by the recruitment and training of more staff, by the use of other laboratories and by overtime working.

The average processing time in North Staffordshire districrt health authority in the same period was eight weeks.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the waiting list figures by specialty in the Leicestershire health authority as at 31 March for each year from 1981 to 1987.

Mr. Newton: The requested information is given in the table.

Number of patients on in-patient waiting list at 31 March, 1981 to 1987, for Leicestershire District Authority.

Cancer Screening

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cervical cancer screening laboratories there are in Great Britain; what is the ratio of adult women to laboratories; what are the levels of staffing per laboratory; and how much funding each laboratory receives.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986 in England there were 196 NHS laboratories. The number of women aged 20 to 64 (the eligible age group for routine screening within the computerised call and recall system) was 13·69 million, a ratio of 69,871 women to each laboratory. If they were all screened every five years, this would generate an average of 13,974 smears a year for each laboratory. On average in 1986 the number of cervical smears screened per laboratory was 18,923 and the average number of staff was 4·4*. Information on funding is not available centrally.

NHS (Management)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce an integrated National Health Service management system based on the United States of America model of Provider Review Organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: As my hon. Friend will be aware, the Government are undertaking a wide-ranging, internal review of the National Health Service. At this stage we are not ruling out any proposals for reform.

Crewe District Health Authority

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate by specialty the number of cases dealt with by the Crewe district health authority for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 17 December 1987 at column 715.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate by specialty the waiting list figures in the Crewe health authority as at 31 March in each year since 1981.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Single Payments

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for how long supplementary benefit single payments were made in the United Kingdom; what was the cost thereof for 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what are the latest figures for 1987-88.

Mr. Portillo: Regulated single payments have been made since November 1980. The information requested on expenditure is given below:

	£ million
1983-84	183
1984-85	266
1985-86	368
1986-87	365
1987-88[1]	166

[1] 8 April 1987 to 12 Janary 1988.

Note: Information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is provisional.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report for each local office in Great Britain the single payment expenditure for the 32 weeks ended on 7 April 1987 and for the corresponding period in 1985-86 and 1984-85, and the supplementary benefit case load for each in the same period.

Mr. Portillo: The single payment expenditure by each of the Department's local offices in Great Britain for the 32 weeks ended on 7 April 1987 is available in the table "Supplementary Benefit Single Payment Expenditure, 27 August 1986 to 7 April 1987".

The number of people receiving supplementary benefit, by local office, on 10 February 1987 is available in the table, "Analysis of Supplementary Benefit Claimants as at 10 February and 28 July 1987".

Copies of each of the tables are in the Library.

Similar information for the corresponding periods in 1984-85 and 1985-86 is not available in the form requested and would be disproportionately costly to obtain.

Church Hill House Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to transfer mentally handicapped patients from the Church Hill House hospital, Bracknell, to community care settings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for the health authority and the local authority to co-operate to provide a comprehensive range of co-ordinated health and social services for mentally handicapped people and their families. The total number of residents at Church Hill House is expected to fall from 220 in April 1987 to 165 by April 1990. Community provision is expected to increase by 75 long-term beds and 29 short-term care beds. The East Berkshire health authority has also made significant progress in the provision of four community teams and a range of day care in co-operation with social services to ensure that people in the community are adequately supported. A decision about the remaining residents and the long-term future of the hospital will be taken in the light of the success in developing new services.

Health Centres

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to encourage general practitioners to purchase health centres from health authorities.

Mr. Newton: We already provide financial incentives to general practitioners to purchase health centres offered for sale by health authorities.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of people claiming sickness and invalidity benefit at the present time; and what was the number of people claiming sickness and invalidity benefit in February 1987.

Mr. Portillo: The total number of people claiming sickness and invalidity benefit as at 9 February 1988 was 1,298,000, and at 10 February 1987 was 1,297,000 (figures rounded to the nearest thousand).

Drugs (Costs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to encourage dispensing chemists to issue a receipt for each dispensed prescription showing the cost of the drugs dispensed.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

South-East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the estimated population for each of the last 10 years for the South-East Thames regional health authority area and each of its constituent district health authority areas; and what estimates are available for the future.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information is given in the table. Population projections based upon the mid 1985 estimates have been produced for each year up to 2010. The projected figures for a selection of years are given in the table.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure the compiling of statistics to indicate the scale of repetitive strain injury problems in Britain.

Mrs. Currie: I regret we cannot do so as such problems are mostly treated by general practitioners. The cost of compiling comprehensive statistics on the wide range of conditions treated by general practitioners would greatly exceed the benefits obtained from the information.

Free School Milk and Meals

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which pupils will be entitled to free school milk and free school lunches following the social securiy changes which come into force in April.

Mr. Portillo: Pupils in families who receive income support will be entitled to free school meals on the same basis as those in families who currently receive supplementary benefit. Milk may be provided as part of the meal. In the new family credit scheme, the child credits include an extra £2.55 a week, in each week of the year, in place of free school meals. It is estimated that around 100,000 more school-age children will benefit under the family credit scheme compared to those who currently receive free school meals under the family income supplement and local authorities' discretionary schemes combined.

Mr. E. A. Kerrod

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the appeal against a reduction in the amount of his reduced earning allowance by Mr. E. A. Kerrod, of 49 New road, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire, which was submitted to the clerk to the social security appeal tribunal in Cardiff on 26 October 1987, has still not been heard; how many other cases await decision by the tribunal; what is the average and longest period that an appeal is outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that Mr. Kerrod's appeal has been listed for hearing on 9 March 1988.

In Wales, for the quarter ending 6 June 1987, (the latest available figures) there were 10,767 appeals awaiting to be heard and the average length of time from lodgement to hearing was 18.4 weeks. Individual figures are not available for appeals taking more than 21 weeks to clear; 25 per cent. of all social security appeals fall into this category.

The subject of delays in the hearing of social security appeals is of great concern both to me and to His Honour Judge Byrt, who, as the president of Social Security and Medical Appeal Tribunals, has the responsibility for administering the social security appeal tribunals in Great Britain.

Judge Byrt has written a statement which sets out the practical difficulties presently facing his organisation and the steps which he is taking to overcome them. A copy of this statement of 4 February 1988 has been placed in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are in receipt of the long-term rate of supplementary benefit for the latest date and for equivalent dates in the previous five years.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is contained in table 34.40 of "Social Security Statistics 1987", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Tobacco

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will seek to ban the sale of tobacco products for oral use; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has written today to a number of companies that manufacture tobacco products for oral use, their representative organisations and other interested parties to inform them that, pursuant to section 11(5) of the Consumer Protection Act, the Government propose to make safety regulations under section 11 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 to prohibit persons from supplying or from offering to supply, agreeing to supply, exposing for supply or possessing for supply, certain oral tobacco products. The Government are concerned that the use of such products is causally associated with an increased risk of oral cancer. Bodies whose interests are affected are asked to make representations on the Government's proposals by 26 May 1988. The products we are considering are fine cut, ground or particulate tobacco products prepared, sold or advertised for oral use other than smoking or chewing. This does not include traditional solid chewing tobacco, loose tobacco for making up into cigarettes or snuff for nasal use. We are primarily concerned with products used in the mouth, often in a moist form held between the cheek and the gum, which can give rise to cancer of the mouth.

Thalidomide

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received regarding a constituent of the hon. Member for Solihull, Miss Nancy Hood, of Beechwood Park road in Solihull, and her need for the drug thalidomide; and what steps he will take to ensure its availability to her;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding the sources of availability of the drug thalidomide as a treatment for certain skin ailments.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 21 January 1988]: No product licences under the Medicines Act for thalidomide tablets are held in the United Kingdom. Two sources of the unlicensed medicine are available: the West German orginators who impose supply requirements which are not possible to comply with and a Brazilian manufacturer whose product is of unknown quality and related safety. The Department is willing to conduct tests in which the Brazilian product is compared with that produced by the originator. If Miss Hood's doctor is satisfied with the results of these tests he would be able to obtain a sufficient supply to treat her on his own responsibility in accordance with the provisions of sections 9(1) and 13(1) of the Medicines Act 1968 and the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Importation) Order 1984.

Health Services (Demand)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the most recently available estimates of the percentage changes in demand on the hospital and community health services due to demographic change for each year from 1972-73 to 1995-96; and if he will put in the Library details of the methods used to arrive at the estimates.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 February 1988]: The estimates of growth in demographic demand on the hospital and community health services for the years 1972-73 to 1995-96 are as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1972-73	0·0
1973-74	−0·1
1974-75	0·0
1975-76	0·1
1976-77	0·2
1977-78	0·3
1978-79	1·0
1979-80	1·3
1980-81	1·1
1981-82	0·4
1982-83	0·4
1983-84	0·5
1984-85	0·6
1985-86	1·3
1986-87	1·0
1987-88	1·0
1988-89	1·0
1989-90	1·0
1990-91	0·9
1991-92	0·7
1992-93	0·5
1993-94	0·3
1994-95	0·3
1995-96	0·9

Details of the method used to arrive at the estimates are given in answer to question 2 of the Social Services Select Committee Report, Session 1986-87, "Public expenditure on the social services 1987" (HC413).

Estimates of increased demand on services from demographic change are expressed in expenditure terms but this does not imply that increased spending is the only way in which increased demand can be met.

Pharmaceuticals (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions his Department or the Committee on Safety of Medicines has investigated allegations that a pharmaceutical company failed to report adverse reactions to one of its products; on what date each inquiry commenced; in each case whether or not the allegation was found to be generally justified; and when the allegations were justified, what action was taken.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The Department is currently investigating allegations that two pharmaceutical companies failed to report known serious adverse reactions to the Committee on Safety Medicines. The investigations which began respectively in November 1986 and November 1987 are continuing. Because information on suspected under-reporting is held on files relating to specific products and containing full licensing information, a count of earlier possible instances cannot be made without disproportionate cost.

Busparone

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the prescribing of the drug Busparone; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 24 February 1988]: I have received no representations about prescribing Busparone. This is a licensed medicinal product and doctors are free to prescribe it if they think it clinically appropriate for their patients. In common with all such products, Busparone will be subject to the special reporting arrangements of the Committee on Safety of Medicines in respect of suspected adverse drug reactions.

Health Authority Statistics

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by London health authority the total available patient beds for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 February 1988]: The available information is given in the table.

SCOTLAND

Education Budgets

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by each regional authority in Scotland on repairs and maintenance of schools, expressing this as a percentage of each region's education budget in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is given in the following table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns and budget estimates.

Expenditure on repairs and maintenance expressed as a percentage of the education budget.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the amount spent per pupil on books and relevant education material, adjusted for inflation by each regional authority in Scotland in 1978-79, 1982-83 and 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is given in the following table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on equipment was not separately identified in these returns until 1982-83.

Hospitals (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all individuals and organisations he has met since June 1987 in order to discuss competitive tendering in hospital services, together with the date of those meetings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 13 August 1987 I met Mr. Murray and Mr. Howell of the British Hostels, Restaurants and Caterers Association and Mr. Hall, Mr. Bisley and Mrs. McVee of the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association. On 15 September 1987 I had discussions with Mr. Rawlings, Mr. Colling and Mr. Slark of the Association of British Laundry, Cleaning and Rental Services. I have also discussed competitive tendering with health board chairmen. As a result of these exchanges I asked the Scottish Home and Health Department to arrange the seminar on competitive tendering held on 2 October 1987.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of admissions to mental health hospitals, (b) this figure expressed as a rate for the health board catchment population and (c) the amount spent on community care projects for mentally ill people, for each health board and for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The requested information on admissions to mental illness and mental handicap hospitals is published annually in "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest year for which information is available is 1985. Information on the costs of community care projects is not held centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Spandau Prison

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to complete negotiations on the future of the site of Spandau prison, Berlin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In accordance with a prior agreement, the site is now under British control.

Malaysia

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Malaysian Government; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend met the Malaysian high commissioner on 17 January when they discussed a number of bilateral and regional matters.

Guatemala

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Guatemala.

Mr. Eggar: We have normal diplomatic relations with Guatemala, whose return to democracy in late 1985 we warmly welcomed.

Mr. Vassiliou

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has sent a message to Mr. Vassiliou on his election victory in Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: No. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister sent a message of congratulations to Mr. Vassiliou immediately after his election. The message was delivered to him on 23 February.

Mr. J. A. Smith

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the British high commissioner in Harare in the case of Mr. J. A. Smith of 195 New Cheveley road, Newmarket, on whose behalf the Zimbabwe social welfare pensions office convened a medical board on 9 November 1987.

Mrs. Chalker: The Zimbabwe social welfare pensions office has informed our high commission in Harare that "their convening a medical board on 9 November 1987" means that Mr. Smith's medical papers have been sent to the DHSS asking for a British medical board to be convened on its behalf. This board is asked to assess the degree of Mr. Smith's disability and to determine whether or not the disability is in a final and stationary condition. The papers reached the appropriate DHSS section on 24 February where the request is under urgent consideration. Meanwhile, since Mr. Smith has already provided a private medical report to the Zimbabwe authorities, the high commission in Harare has asked the Zimbabwe social welfare pensions office whether a medical board in the United Kingdom is still necessary. As I said in my letter of 16 February to my hon. Friend, I will let him know when we have clarified the position.

PRIME MINISTER

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 821, if, in the light of the decision of the European Court of Justice on 23 February on the zero rating of spectacles and hearing aids, it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government that it will insist on the United Kingdom's rights to determine zero rating.

The Prime Minister: This particular European Court decision concerns the interpretation of the exemption provision of the EC sixth directive on value added tax, which was agreed by all member states, including the United Kingdom, in 1977, and is consequently binding. The Commission proposals advanced by Lord Cockfield are proposals only, and cannot be adopted without the unanimous agreement of all member states. We shall continue to insist on our right to retain zero rating.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cannon Row Buildings

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans exist to convert the former Cannon row police station into parliamentary offices; when those plans are now likely to be put into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The Services Committee recomended that the building should be refurbished for short-term occupation pending redevelopment under phase II of the Bridge street development scheme. The proposed occupants are listed in the Committee's Second Report 1986-87, paragraph 5 (HC 378).

The report quoted a mid-1988 completion date, but I understand from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) that completion should not now be expected before spring 1989.

Rail Warrants

Mr. Speed: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the current annual cost of administering the rail warrant scheme for right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested for the current year could not be obtained in the time available and, given that, even then only at disproportionate cost.

Comparative figures, as at 11 November 1986, for 11 member states of the Council of Europe at appendix F (pages 93-99) of "Volume 2: Surveys and Studies of the Review Body on Top Salaries 24th Report: Review of Parliamentary Allowances, April 1987" (Cm. 131-II).

Parliaments (Travel Concessions)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list, on the information available to him, the public travel concessions available to members of the domestic parliaments of member states of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Wakeham: The current annual cost of administering the rail warrant scheme is not identifiable. However, the total charge to the Parliamentary and Privy Council : House of Commons Vote (Class 20 Vote 8) for the year 1986-87, in respect of rail travel by right hon. and hon. Members, their spouses, children and staff, amounted to £819,933·87.

Rooms and Facilities (Booking)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council if rooms and facilities provided in the House can be booked for use other than in the name of an Officer or hon. Member of the House.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Products

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the cost of disposing of surplus agricultural products in the United Kingdom for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The cost of disposing of surplus commodities (beef, cereals, milk and milk products, olive oil, sugar and wine) in the United Kingdom in 1987-88 is estimated to be £603 million. This covers export refunds (net of MCAs), subsidies for internal disposals, losses on sale out of intervention, and depreciation of beef on entry to intervention.

Co-responsibility Levies

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Fisheries how the agreement of co-responsibility levies will affect British producers and producers in each other EEC country.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The agreement reached by the European Council on the cereals co-responsibility levy will reduce returns to all Community cereal producers by the equivalent of up to 3 per cent. of the intervention price for common wheat if the Community cereals harvest exceeds the production thresholds of 160 million tonnes.

The Council also agreed that the levy should be collected at the point of first sale and not as at present when the grain is processed, sold into intervention or exported from the Community. The detailed ruls for implementing this are under discussion, but the cost of he levy will continue to be borne by the producer. Small cereals producers will be relieved of the burden of both the basic and supplementary co-responsibility levy; again, the detailed rules on this provision are still under discussion.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to tackle promotion disparities favouring non-Catholics among educationally qualified entrants to the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Mr. Stanley: As indicated in the reports produced by the equal opportunities unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel, monitoring of the outcome of promotion procedures forms part of the comprehensive monitoring arrangements introduced in respect of the Northern Ireland Civil Service. If this monitoring should indicate that there are promotion disparities attributable to religious affiliation, appropriate remedial action will be instituted.

Housing Executive Tenants

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the rate of financial assistance given to new Housing Executive tenants who are in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Needham: Tenants on supplementary benefit would generally be entitled to housing benefit, the amount being related to their rent and rates. Like other claimants on supplementary benefit they would also have access to single payment provided that the prescribed conditions were satisfied.

Consultants

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of consultants by specialty in each health board in Northern Ireland in 1979, 1983 and 1987, showing in each case how many consultants were on full-time National Health Service contracts in these years.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is given in the following tables. It should be noted that (i) consultants whose sessions are split between different boards are shown under the board with which their major involvement lies; (ii) the vast majority of part-time consultants have a maximum part-time contract which is equivalent to 10 sessions per week commitment to the Health and Personal Social Services; for example, in 1987 there were only seven consultants with contracts less than the maximum part-time; (iii) joint appointments are those where consultants are appointed jointly by Queen's University, Belfast, and the Eastern health and social services board and time is divided between teaching medical students and clinical work.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for each district of the Northern, Western and Southern health and social services boards, the number of people on waiting lists for each specialty for the last five years for which figures are available, giving a breakdown of the total waiting list by time spent on list.

Mr. Needham: I am sending to the hon. Gentleman and arranging for copies to be made available in the Library of tables showing, for each district unit of management of the Northern, Western and Southern health and social services boards, the number of in-patients on waiting lists at 31 December by specialty and by time spent on list for 1981, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986. As a result of industrial action, information is not available for 1982.

Information on out-patient waiting lists could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Sheep Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many scintillators were available to and used by his Department for the live monitoring of sheep in the restricted areas of Northern Ireland in each month from May 1986 to May 1987.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The use of scintillators for the live monitoring of sheep commenced with the use of one scintillator in June 1986. This number was increased by three in October 1986 and to five in February 1987.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when live monitoring of sheep on a general basis was introduced in the restricted areas of Northern Ireland following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Live monitoring of sheep in Northern Ireland commenced in June 1986 across the Province including those areas which later became subject to restrictions.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when restrictions were first placed on the movement of sheep in Northern Ireland following the Chernobyl nuclear accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 22 February 1988]: 15 September 1987; until that date, using the United Kingdom action level of 1,000 bq/kg, monitoring since the Chernobyl accident showed no need to introduce restrictions.

Irish Citizens

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Irish citizens are estimated to be resident in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 27 January 1988 at columns 255-6.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rate

Mr. Wells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of the rise in United States' domestic demand for prospects for the restoration of stability of the dollar exchange rate with the pound sterling.

Mr. Lilley: Exchange rate stability requires progress in eliminating excessive imbalances, in particular the United States budget and current account deficies as well as corresponding surpluses in Asia and Europe. Encouraging progress has been made, with legislation passed just before Christmas to reduce the United States budget deficit in 1988 and in 1989.

Customs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of international collaboration has taken place to monitor the transition to the new system at customs posts throughout the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The European Commission is responsible for monitoring the transition to the new system and is consulting member states. Early indications are that the changes have been introduced successfully throughout the Community.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reduction is anticipated in the customs officers required by Her Majesty's Government at internal borders as a result of the reforms made by the single administrative document under the Customs '88 project.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The single administrative document is a measure for facilitating trade by rationalising official documentation. Once the new system has settled in, it should reduce both delays at Customs and the incidence of error, but the improvement is not quantifiable.

Road Transport (Small Businesses)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals exist for helping small road transport companies meet the additional costs of adapting existing computing systems to handle the new single administrative document under the Customs '88 project.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The introduction of the single administrative document has given firms the opportunity to simplify their procedures and review their arrangements for producing Customs declarations. There are no plans to meet any transitional costs incurred from public funds.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what special provisions have been made to help small businesses engaged in road transport since the adoption of the single administrative document under the Customs '88 project.

Mr. Lilley [holding reply 22 February 1988]: The launch of Customs '88 was preceded by a two-year publicity campaign which provided the information necessary for all businesses to prepare themselves. It has not been necessary to make special arrangements to help small businesses engaged in road transport.

DEFENCE

Weapons Systems

Mr Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 156, to which particular weapons systems the Montebello requirement (a) applies and (b) does not apply.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The report considered at Montebello in 1983, when NATO Defence Ministers agreed both to a reduction in the Alliance's land-based nuclear stockpile in Europe and on the need for possible improvements to ensure the effectiveness, responsiveness and survivability of remaining forces, examined the question of the future size and composition of NATO's theatre nuclear stockpile as a whole.

NATO Meeting (Denmark)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is to be discussed at the NATO planning meeting at Kolding, Denmark, on 26 and 27 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 22 January at column 899.

Ships (Lost Components)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, what screening is operated by contractors employed by his Department in relation to crew members on board ships transporting sensitive military components; what precautions his Department requires contractors to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The level of sensitivity of military components determines the extent of screening required for crew members. The security aspects are defined in each contract and it is the contractor's responsibility to meet these. Particular items of structure lost in this incident were not of a highly sensitive nature.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, if he will give the dimensions, approximate weight and function of each of the Vanguard submarine sections lost on 5 and 6 February.

Mr. Sainsbury: The dimensions, approximate weight and function of the sections are as follows:

(a) 9m diameter × 2·4m × 57 tonnes—forward dome.
(b) 12m × 9m × 1·6m × 2·5 tonnes — deck/tank structure.
(c) 14m × 9m × 0·2m × 15 tonnes—deck structures.
(d) 14m × 8m × 0·2m × 12 tonnes—deck structures.
(e) 5m × 3m × 0·2m × 1 tonne—deck structures.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, when he expects the inquiries into the loss of Vanguard submarine sections to report; what resources are being directed to these inquiries; at what level his Department is represented; what interim measures have been taken, pending the outcome of the inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: An investigation has been mounted by Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd under the terms of its contract. The committee of inquiry includes an officer from the staff of the principal naval overseer at VSEL. The VSEL report will be issued to MOD early March, and will be considered at high level within the Department. As an interim measure taken pending the outcome of the inquiry, VSEL has informed its sub-contractors that careful attention must be given to future transportation arrangements by sea.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, what were the weather conditions at the time of the loss of Vanguard class submarine sections on 5 and 6 February.

Mr. Sainsbury: The weather conditions generally prevailing in the Mallin and Irish sea areas for the periods in question were:

5 February
Surface wind from a south westerly direction force 6 to 7
Weather: Occasional showers
Visibility: Good
Sea: Moderate to rough

6 February
Surface wind west to north-west force 7 to gale force 8
Weather: Occasional showers
Visibility: Good
Sea: Moderate to rough

However conditions in these areas are known to be locally variable.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, if he will give further details of the numbers and types of picket boats exercising surveillance over the Vanguard submarine forward dome structure; whether any armed Royal Navy vessels are in the vicinity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD initially requested that a picket boat be stationed in the vicinity of the position where the dome was reported to be lost. Subsequent search operations in the area to ascertain the exact location make this unnecessary. This arrangement will be reviewed if there is any time gap between the search and the salvage operations. No special deployment of Royal Naval vessels has been considered necessary as a result of this incident.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, what assessment he has made of the metallurgical suitability of the lost Vanguard submarine sections for further use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No assessment of the metallurgical suitability for further use of the submarine sections can be made until they have been recovered.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, when his Department first announced publicly that more Vanguard class submarine sections have been lost off Walney island on 6 February; if he will describe the nature of these sections; what precautions were taken following the loss of the forward dome structure on 5 February to avoid losses of further sections; why these precautions were not effective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The secondary structure lost near Walney island was internal deck and tank units. The precise precautions taken following the loss of the forward dome structure and why these precautions were not effective has yet to be established and is a matter for the committee of inquiry.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, columns 448-50, if he will now answer the question from the hon. Member for Linlithgow as to his assessment of the risk of the lost Vanguard class submarine forward dome structure falling into the hands of a foreign power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The forward dome structure, which is not of a highly technical or sophisticated nature nor highly classified, is of such a size that it could only fall into the hands of a foreign power of an overt salvage operation were to be mounted. The risk of this in the close vicinity of the Scottish coastline and within United Kindom territorial waters is negligible.

Defence Research

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps in the Council of Ministers of the Western European Union to bring about a major effort to harmonise national operational requirements for military computer systems and initiate a joint European defence research programme between Western European Union member countries and other Western European countries wishing to take part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: WEU Ministers are agreed that the appropriate forum for the pursuit of collaboration in defence equipment is the Independent European Programme Group, which comprises all the European members of NATO with the exception of Iceland. The IEPG has active programmes of work on increasing collaboration in defence research, including a number of computer-related programmes; and on the harmonisation of operational requirements, where computers are considered in the context of the weapons systems employing them.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for the equipping of military transport aircraft with passenger protection smoke hoods.

Mr. Sainsbury: We at present have no plans to fit smoke hoods to transport aircraft, although we are examining them and there is a continuing programme of flight safety improvements designed to maintain the excellent safety record of the RAF air transport fleet.

Anglo-American Defence Agreement

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department are currently deployed on the administration of the 1958 Anglo-American mutual defence agreement in the atomic control office.

Mr. Sainsbury: Currently two persons are employed on atomic control office business concerned with the administration of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes.

Electroconvulsive Therapy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 446, how many soldiers have been treated with electroconvulsive therapy over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not readily available and cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Service Men (Depression)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 446, how many soldiers who applied to leave Her Majesty's forces during the last 12 months gave depression as the reason, or otherwise complained of that condition; and what treatment was given to the 13 service men diagnosed as suffering from depression.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested on the reasons given for applying to leave the services cannot be ascertained without disproportionate effort. It is not my Department's policy to discuss the medical treatment of individual cases, details of which are held in confidence.

MOD Houses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence houses there are in (i) Wales and (ii) Alyn and Deeside; how many such houses are currently empty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As at the latest dates for which the information is available, the numbers of MOD houses and flats were:

	Married quarters[1]	Civilian houses[2]
(i) In Wales
Total	2,577	132
Empty	379	59
(ii) In Alyn and Deeside
Total	300	Nil
Empty	29	Nil

[1] As at 30 November 1987.
[2] As at 31 March 1987.

Many of the empty properties are either undergoing or awaiting works services, temporarily empty pending the arrival of new occupants or in process of disposal.

Sergeant Jarvie

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will pay compensation to Sergeant Jarvie of the King's Own Scottish Borderers following his reinstatement after his retrial for alleged misconduct; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member.

Radar Stations

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he expects the three weather radar stations in Scotland to become operational; and to what extent the stations will adequately cover all of Scotland, including the Shetland Islands.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Discussions are proceeding between officials of the Scottish Office and the Ministry of Defence and, as indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 8 December 1987, at column 153, the Hebrides, the Highlands north-west of Aberdeen and the Edinburgh or Glasgow areas are likely to prove the most suitable sites. Data from stations placed in these areas, when taken with other information available to the Meteorological Office, are expected to lead to improved short-period weather forecasts and provide timely estimates of precipitation at the surface throughout Scotland. Radar coverage will not extend north of about 59 deg. north. However, alternative methods of measuring precipitation falling on the Shetland and Orkney islands are available. Present plans are that installation would take place in the early 1990s.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct prison administrators to send out visiting orders to relatives of prisoners at least two weeks prior to any visit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Establishments in England and Wales have been encouraged to issue visiting orders up to a fortnight before the 28-day period of validity begins, if this is administratively feasible and if they are aware that otherwise a planned assisted visit would have to be postponed.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct prison administrators to send copies of endorsed visiting orders to the new unit dealing with assisted prison visits to promote better co-ordination of services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to study this idea in the light of experience of the operation of the new unit.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the meaning of the term "substantial period", in prison department forms F2022AS and F2022S, with respect to assisted prison visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that it has been the normal practice of DHSS local offices, in administering the assisted prison visits scheme, to regard four months' cohabitation as a sufficiently substantial period to entitle an applicant to assistance, provided that the other conditions of the scheme are met. We see no reason to alter this guideline, which will continue to be applied flexibly.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the subsistence expenses and childminding costs of persons visiting prisoners referred to in paragraph 10 of form F2022AS, are discretionary where proof of claim is provided.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. Payment of subsistence or childminding expenses may be withheld if the assisted prison visits unit is not satisfied that they were necessarily incurred in the course of visiting an inmate; or they may be met only in part if the amounts specified are excessive.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will be assuming the responsibility for the statutory obligation previously discharged by the Department of Health and Social Security, of informing claimants about specific benefits consequent upon the establishing of the new unit dealing with assisted prison visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such statutory obligation applies, or has ever applied, to the assisted prison visits scheme. None the less, we shall be considering the adequacy of present information about the Scheme.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances individual prison officers are asked to give an opinion as to whether or not an assisted visit expenses claim is justified; and if he will make it his policy to discontinue this practice.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under present arrangements prison officers may be asked to confirm or clarify from their records details which are supplied by applicants for assisted visits. We have no plans to discontinue this practice.

Television Licences

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted in each of the last five years for non-payment of television licences; and what percentage of those were pensioners.

Mr. Renton: Figures are given in the table. These have been supplied by the national television licence records office, which instigates all prosecutions for television licence evasion.

No information is held by that office about the ages of those prosecuted. However, Home Office records show that in 1985 and 1986 fewer than 20 defendants proceeded against in England and Wales for offences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts were of pensionable age.

Prosecutions for Television Licence Evasion in the United Kingdom

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
England and Wales	80,029	89,747	102,154	115,559	165,385
Scotland	5,063	7,058	7,542	7,121	9,004
Northern Ireland	341	575	645	782	838
United Kingdom	85,433	97,380	110,341	123,462	175,227

Irish Citizens

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Irish citizens are estimated to be resident in England;

(2) how many Irish citizens are estimated to be resident in Wales;

(3) how many Irish citizens are estimated to be resident in Scotland.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 27 January 1988 at columns 255-56.

Prison Officers (Accommodation)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list Her Majesty's prisons which provide living accommodation for prison officers, and their families; if he will identify the number of units at each such prison for the years 1985, 1986 and 1987; and if he has any plans to increase prison officer family accommodation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not readily available for 1985 and 1986 and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For 1987, the information, as at 30 September, is as follows. There are no plans to increase prison officer family accommodation.

Remand Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held on remand on 22 February in police cells in the Metropolitan police area, the Greater Manchester police area, the Merseyside police area, Lancashire, the West Midlands, West Mercia, South Wales and Devon and Cornwall, respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 22 February there were 360 remand prisoners in police cells in the Metropolitan police area, 42 in the Greater Manchester police area, 20 in the Merseyside police area, 27 in Lancashire, 73 in the West Midlands, 18 in the West Mercia, 22 in South Wales and 17 in Devon and Cornwall.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an independent inquiry into the extent of the influence exerted by the Masonic order within the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of the allegations which have been made about Masonic influence in the Metropolitan police, and the concern to which these have given rise. We are also aware of the need to respect the freedom of choice of the individual police officer where this does not affect his impartiality. My right hon. Friend will be discussing the matter with the Commissioner.

Miss Jurdotic Ladlina

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department's office in Croydon received a letter and passport which was sent by registered post on 6 January by Miss Jurdotic Ladlina, a Yugoslav national, residing with Mr. and Mrs. Whiteley of 161 Church road, Southend-on-Sea; and if he will take steps to ensure that Miss Ladlina has her passport returned to her before her departure on 20 March.

Mr. Renton: Severe delays in dealing with correspondence in Lunar house have arisen because of the huge intake of correspondence and applications for citizenship which arrived in the last weeks of 1987. I recently announced the introduction of emergency measures to deal with the arrears of work on 16 February, at columns 862-63. It has not been possible to identify Miss Ladlina's letter from the information given, but the immigration and nationality department would normally expect to establish its receipt if full postal details, including the recorded delivery or registered postal packet number, the date of posting, and the purpose of the application can be provided. If the hon. Member will arrange for these details to be sent to me I will ensure that further inquiries are made and every effort made to return the passport as quickly as possible.

"Gun Sense is Good Sense"

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the initial print order for the publication "Gun Sense is Good Sense"; when it was first printed and subsequently reprinted; and when he now proposes to make further supplies available to the public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Some 750,000 copies of the leaflet "Gun Sense is Good Sense" were printed as part of the campaign in 1983 against the misuse of air weapons. A further 50,000 copies were printed in both 1985 and 1986. A new leaflet to promote the safe use of air weapons was produced as part of the regional air weapon campaigns held at the end of 1986 in the West Midlands and Greater Manchester police force areas and we are evaluating what form future publicity material should take.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 29 February 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what powers police forces are refusing to renew firearms certificates for self-loading rifles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A chief officer of police is empowered to refuse to grant or renew an application for a firearm certificate if the requirements set out in section 27 of the Firearms Act 1968 are not met. There is a right of appeal to the Crown court.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Stuart Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Vauxhall concerning overcrowding in F wing of Brixton prison.

Mr. Hurd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 February.

Television Licences (Handicapped Pensioners)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the introduction of a 5p television licence for those households where at least one member is a seriously handicapped pensioner.

Mr. Renton: There are no plans to do so.

Exceptional Leave Criteria

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the criteria for granting exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The circumstances under which persons who do not qualify under the immigration rules have been allowed exceptionally to remain in the United Kingdom were set out in the Home Office evidence to the Home Affairs Sub-Committee on Race Relations and Immigration in 1984 — "Minutes of Evidence taken before the Home Affairs Sub-Committee on Race Relations and Immigration" HC72, Volume II, paragraph 44. If the hon. Member has a particular point in mind he may wish to write with more precise details.

Blorg and Contango

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what progress the Metropolitan police fraud squad is making with its inquiries into the Liechtenstein subsidiaries of Lonrho plc, Blorg and Contango; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is an operational matter which is the responsibility of the commissioner of police for the City of London. I understand from the commissioner that inquiries into these subsidiaries are continuing.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the fact that no petitions for leave to appeal to the House of Lords have yet been lodged in the Birmingham pub bombings case, he will reconsider his answers to eight hon. Members' questions on the 18 February, Official Report, column 708.

Mr. Hurd: No. My hon. Friend's replies to questions about this case on 18 February referred back to an earlier answer which dealt in substance with the issues that had been raised. I see no reason to reconsider that answer.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses in judging whether a case is sub judice for the purpose of answering parliamentary questions.

Mr. Hurd: It is not for Ministers to decide whether a case is sub judice in the strict sense which, under the rules of the House, precludes reference to it in a question. Our responsibility is for the answer to be given, and it is not our practice to comment on matters which are in a wider sense awaiting or under adjudication by a court.

Police Special Branches

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of police officers and civilians serving in, or responsible to, the special branches of police forces in England and Wales in each year from 1969 to the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is as follows:

Metropolitan Police	Police officers	Civilians
1968	366	44
1969	370	47
1970	382	54
1971	398	68

1973	399	85
1974	393	105
1975	397	119
1976	405	120
1977	405	110
1978	395	98

The available information about other police forces in England and Wales is given in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

Weapons (Amnesty)

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ask the chief constable of the Northumbrian police to introduce an amnesty for holders of knives, guns and martial arts weapons, along the lines of that recently introduced by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are discussing with the Association of Chief Police Officers how campaigns like that run by the Metropolitan police encouraging the disposal of knives and other weapons might be instituted more widely.

Prisoners (Temporary Release)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving adult prisoners in England and Wales were granted temporary release for attendance on a community-based employment or offence-related course during 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Records of the number of prisoners temporarily released under prison rule 6 are not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is planning any increase in the use of temporary release courses for adult prisoners in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sentenced adult prisoners may be granted temporary release for educational purposes. We have no immediate plans to increase the use of temporary release in this area.

Settlers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to how many people from the Republic of Ireland settled in England, Scotland and Wales in each year from 1982 to 1987 inclusive, for each of the age groups 16 to 18 years, 18 to 25 years and 25 years and over;

(2) what information he has as to how many people from Northern Ireland settled in England, Scotland and Wales in each year from 1982 to 1987 inclusive, for each of the age groups 16 to 18 years, 18 to 25 years and 25 years and over.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 18 February 1988]: British citizens, and Irish citizens travelling within the common travel area, are not subject to immigration control and Irish citizens do not need to apply to settle in Great Britain. Based on information from the labour force surveys, it is estimated that the usually resident population of Great Britain in mid-1986 included some 30,000 persons who had been born in the Republic of Ireland and had entered Great Britain since 1980. A corresponding estimate for persons from Northern Ireland, and the other information requested, are not available.

PRIME MINISTER

State Security

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to ensure that she is kept fully informed at all stages in future cases where an author or publisher approaches Her Majesty's Government through an intermediary to seek clearance for the publication of material about the security services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Officials are aware of the appropriate steps to take in such cases.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she has any plans to introduce legislation to legalise wrongdoing by members of the security and intelligence services when such actions are undertaken in the defence of the realm;

(2) if she has any plans to introduce legislation to legalise covert invasions of privacy by the security and intelligence services when such actions are undertaken in the defence of the realm; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 29 January, at column 397, to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones).

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received correspondence from Lord Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, arising out of his "Spycatcher" judgment and correspondence between herself and the hon. Member for Hackney South and Shoreditch; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to give information on correspondence from third parties. As the hon. Gentleman knows, however, he wrote to me on 15 February and sent a copy to Lord Donaldson. Lord Donaldson subsequently sent me a copy of his reply to the hon. Gentleman.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the criteria used by Government Departments in judging parliamentary questions to be answerable only at disproportionate cost; if there are any guidelines in force to override financial restrictions if it is in the national interest; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 11 February, at column 297.

Any parliamentary question which is likely to involve disproportionate expenditure — currently £200 — is referred to the responsible Minister before significant resources are committed. This amount is currently under review. It is not a rigid limit; it is for the Minister concerned to decide in each case whether there are exceptional circumstances to justify answering a question which would cost more than £200.

Leak Inquiry Panels

Mr. Meale: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will list the names of members of all the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panels held since 1979;

(2) what the criteria are for appointing members of Cabinet Office leak inquiries panels;

(3) how many people are members of the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panel; how many inquiries have taken place during the last 11 months; and how many have taken place in each year since 1979;

(4) if she will list by name the current members of the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panel;

(5) who appoints members of the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panel;

(6) what was the cost of running the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panel during the present financial year and for each year since 1979;

(7) how many civil servants have been (a) disciplined and (b) dismissed as a result of the findings of inquiries set up by the Cabinet Office leak inquiries panel since 1979.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to comment on such matters.

30-Year Rule (Information)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to review all statements made by Ministers in Her Majesty's Government since May 1979 in the light of information released under the 30-year rule to assess their accuracy regarding newly published information; and if she will seek to rectify any factual errors in statements or parliamentary answers made by Government Ministers since May 1979 which are identifiable from information made public at the Public Records Office on 1 January.

The Prime Minister: No. If the hon. Gentleman has a particular point in mind, I suggest he gets in touch with the appropriate Minister.

National Audit Office

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Prime Minister what restrictions, other than statutory, Her Majesty's Government put on access by the National Audit Office to Government papers.

The Prime Minister: The Government do not seek to deny access to papers which, in the terms of the National Audit Office Act 1983, the Comptroller and Auditor General reasonably requires for carrying out his examinations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Conference

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will outline the specific requests recently made by the Irish Government at the Anglo-Irish Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: Copies of the joint statements issued after the conference meetings on 2 and 16 February have been placed in the Library. These statements indicate the areas discussed at the meetings.

Homelessness

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what arrangements have been made for the transfer of responsibility for homeless people from the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and if he will issue a report on the steps which have been taken.

(2) what new funding arrangements for voluntary organisations dealing with homelessness in Northern Ireland he proposes after new homelessness legislation is introduced; and what consultation there will be regarding those changes.

Mr. Needham: Arrangements for the transfer to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive of responsibility for the temporary accommodation needs of homeless people will be included in a proposal for a draft housing Order in Council which is to be published in March 1988.

Discussions on the practical issues arising from this proposed transfer are currently underway between the four health and social services boards and the Housing Executive.

It is also intended to include a provision on the proposed draft order which would deal with funding arrangements for voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness. The legislation will be subject to the normal consultation process.

Police Complaints

Mr. Gow: to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland will come into being; and who are the members of the commission.

Mr. Tom King: I am glad to announce that the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland comes into being today. The membership of the commission is as follows:

Chairman
Mr. James Grew

Deputy Chairman
Mrs. Romayne Carswell

Deputy Chairman
Mr. Brian Garrett

Members
Mr. James Gardner
Mrs. Denise Kennedy
Mr. Kevin Murnaghan
Mr. Brian Reid
Mrs. Brenda Shiel

The new commission which is being established under the Police (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 reforms the police complaints system in Northern Ireland. The commission will have extensive supervisory powers in relation to complaints against members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The commission will be required to supervise any case involving death or serious injury and will have the power to supervise the formal investigation of any other complaint against the Royal Ulster Constabulary if it so wishes.

An effective complaints system which has the confidence of the community can make a significant contribution towards strengthening the relationship between the public and the RUC. In this way the police will be better placed to combat terrorism and to maintain the rule of law.

I believe that the new commission will make a material contribution to strengthening good relations between the RUC and the whole community in Northern Ireland.

I should also like to express my appreciation of the very valuable work done by the outgoing Police Complaints Board.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present cost of (a) the renewal of and (b) application for a firearms certificate in Northern Ireland; and what percentage of the total costs involved these fees cover.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The fee paid upon application for a firearms certificate is £33 and for the renewal of a firearms certificate £21. The fees are set at a level calculated to recover the full costs of operating the system of certification.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) shotguns, (b) ·22 rifles, (c) other rifles, (d) handguns and (e) other firearms are held on firearms certificates in Northern Ireland at the latest available date; and what were the numbers (i) five years and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

	31 December 1987	31 December 1982	31 December 1977
Shotguns	82,554	77,392	69,525
22 Rifles	12,219	12,410	12,491
Other rifles	1,195	1,281	1,423
Handguns	10,566	10,288	10,322
Other firearms	18,659	16,431	12,889

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the shotguns held on firearms certificates in Northern Ireland are semi-automatic.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Policy

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of Britain's bilateral and multilateral overseas aid is currently committed on condition that recipient nations adhere to International Monetary Fund adjustment programmes.

Mr. Chris Patten: The proportion of loans or credits in support of structural adjustment programmes provided by the international development institutions to which we contribute, such as the World Bank, is determined by the board of governors. Typically, the proportion is about 20 per cent.

Programme aid expenditure in the current financial year in support of adjustment programmes agreed with the International Monetary Fund/World Bank, as a proportion of bilateral country aid expenditure, is expected to be 20 per cent.

Ethiopia and Kampuchea

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will commit long-term development aid to Ethiopia and Kampuchea; and if it will be on a conditional basis.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) on 11 January at column 3; and to the answer I gave the hon. Members for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) and for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 22 February at column 20.

Aid-trade Provision

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the companies which have benefited from the aid-trade provision in each of the last five years, stating the amounts received, the projects and the developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 July 1987 at columns 73-76. Aid agreements signed with developing countries under the aid and trade provision in the current financial year to date are as follows:

Pakistan

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total cost of the Government's contribution to the population welfare plan of the Pakistan Government.

Mr. Chris Patten: Total commitments by the ODA to population programmes in Pakistan stand at nearly £8 million.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Maintenance Awards

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of total public recurrent expenditure on higher and further education has been attributable to student maintenance awards in each year from 1979.

Mr. Jackson: The following figures relate to expenditure on further and higher education within the DES programme. The total of maintenance expenditure on mandatory awards in England and Wales and discretionary awards in England is shown as a percentage of recurrent expenditure on universities (Great Britain), voluntary and direct grant colleges (England) and on maintained colleges of further and higher education (England).

Financial years	Percentage attributable to student maintenance awards
1979-80	15
1980-81	15
1981-82	15
1982-83	15
1983-84	15
1984-85	15
1985-86	14

Student Awards

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if a student seeking an award under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1987 who can demonstrate that his circumstances per se comply with Regulation 3(1)(b) needs also to demonstrate that his circumstances comply with one of the categories in Regulation 3(2) in order to qualify.

Mr. Jackson: No.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the interpretation of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1987, the categories in Regulation 3(2) are to be regarded as extending or limiting the face value application of Regulation 3(1)(b).

Mr. Jackson: Regulation 3(2) extends the circumstances which enable a student to qualify as independent under regulation 3(1)(b).

National Leathersellers Centre

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he proposes to take in implementing his plans for the future funding of further education of the particular status of the national leathersellers centre at Nene college, Northampton with particular reference to the type of course provided and the type of students catered for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what safeguards are proposed on future funding through the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to ensure that courses offered by the leathersellers centre at Nene college can continue, even though not all of them are designated advanced.

Mr. Jackson: Assuming the Education Reform Bill becomes law during the current Session of Parliament, Nene college will, under the Bill's provisions, become a free-standing corporate body and transfer from local authority control to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sector. The PCFC will be in funds to support all higher education courses at Nene college currently funded through the advanced further education pool. The Government have said that they will be open to local education authorities, as part of their continuing responsibility for non-advanced further education, to contract for the continued provision of FE courses at PCFC institutions. Authorities' continuing responsibility for such courses will be recognised in the assessment of grant-related expenditure for rate support grant purposes.

Education Reform

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made for schools funded and run as joint shared facilities by district councils and county councils to opt out of the maintained sector.

Mr. Dunn: Under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, any county or voluntary school, other than a primary school with fewer than 300 pupils, will be able to seek grant-maintained status. If the application is successful, property used or held by the former maintaining authority for the purposes of the school will transfer to the school. The Education Assets Board will be responsible for identifying and defining the property to be transferred and, by implication, the property which remains with the authority which previously owned it.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the addition to the Education Reform Bill of provisions to offer protection against possible abuse by any future Secretary of State of (a) the powers which the Bill grants to him over the content of the core curriculum, (b) the control which the Bill grants to him over the testing of children in schools and (c) the influence which the Bill grants to him on the dismissal of teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of organisations and individuals who wrote to us about our proposals for the national curriculum and assessment made points about the dangers of political control. We remain convinced that the safeguards built into the Education Reform Bill provide adequate protection against future abuse. The Bill does not grant my right hon. Friend influence over the dismissal of teachers, and my Department has not received representations on this matter.

Conductive Education

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment has been made of the number of children requiring conductive education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information is not available centrally. It is the duty of individual local education authorities to identify children in their area with special educational needs and to ensure that appropriate educational provision is available for them.

"Your Choice for Life"

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost of production of the video "Your Choice for Life".

Mr. Dunn: The total production cost of the AIDS video for schools "Your Choice for Life" was £103,902.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many copies of the video "Your Choice for Life" have so far been distributed to (a) schools, (b) youth groups and (c) other centres.

Mr. Dunn: Copies of the package, which contains the video and the users' guide, were distributed initially as follows: (a) schools, 5,897 (b) the youth service, 168; and (c) other centres, 702. Copies for the youth service were sent to national organisations and to principal youth officers, not to individual clubs. The figures relate to copies distributed free of charge in England only; further copies of the package are available for purchase.

Departmental Videos

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that any future video produced by his Department stresses that those who are celibate before marriage and faithful within it and who do not use drugs are a virtually no-risk group as far as AIDS infection is concerned;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that any future video produced by his Department for use in schools does not promote the idea that practices other than normal heterosexual relations between husband and wife are acceptable.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that schools have a responsibility to inform pupils of the facts about AIDS and to encourage them to behave responsibly and to avoid behaviour which may place them at risk. Under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, it is the responsibility of governors of schools to decide whether and how sex education shall be given in their schools. Subject to that, pupils should understand how HIV infection may be passed on through sexual activity, both homosexual and heterosexual, and through the use of shared injecting equipment. They must also appreciate that the safest life style—and also the best—is to avoid casual or promiscuous sexual behaviour and to remain faithful to a single sexual partner, who is also faithful, and to avoid drug abuse.

Far from encouraging youngsters to experiment sexually, any responsible programme of teaching about AIDS should alert them to the dangers. In particular, there is no place in any school in any circumstances for teaching which advocates homosexual behaviour, which presents it as the "norm", or which encourages homosexual behaviour by pupils. These messages are written into the DES/Welsh Office video package for schools, "Your Choice for Life", and will form part of any other initiatives from my Department to promote and support the education service's response to AIDS.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that any future video produced by his Department for use in schools does not promote the idea that sexual activity by children under the age of 16 is acceptable.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made clear on many occasions the need for schools to ensure that pupils appreciate the physical, emotional and moral risks of early sexual experimentation and of casual or promiscuous sexual behaviour. The threat posed by AIDS lends added urgency and importance to these aims. It is also essential that pupils understand the law as it relates to heterosexual and homosexual activity, including the respective ages of consent. These points were emphasised in the Department's circular 11/87, "Sex Education at School", and further stressed in the users' guide which forms an integral part of the DES/Welsh Office AIDS video resource package for schools "Your Choice for Life".

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that any future video produced by his Department for use in schools does not promote the idea that drug taking by non-injective means is acceptable.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has a wide-ranging strategy to combat the drugs problem among young people: the aim is to prevent the misuse of drugs in any form. This is made clear in any materials produced.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out in the Official Report a table giving details of each application for voluntary aided status received since 1979, with details of the religious denomination, if any, involved, the size and character of the school, whether boys, girls or mixed, and whether the application was approved or rejected.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Details of applications decided since January 1985 are as follows. Those for previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Most applications have been made to establish new aided schools in place of voluntary schools which have been closed.

Aberdeen University (Funding)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the University Grants Committee to make a statement regarding the provision of transitional funding for Aberdeen university in the current and subsequent financial years.

Mr. Jackson: The University Grants Committee's initial allocations of recurrent grant to universities for 1988-89, and provisional allocations for 1989-90, were announced on 9 February. The provision of any additional transitional funding for Aberdeen is a matter for the UGC in the light of its continuing discussions with the university.

Axe Valley (Secondary Education)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a decision on the proposals from Devon county council on the reorganisation of secondary education in the Axe valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The proposals are under consideration: my right hon. Friend will make a decision as soon as possible.

St. George's Medical School

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to carry out an urgent inquiry into allegations of bias in the selection of medical students at St. George's medical school; and if he will set up a general inquiry into discrimination against women and students from the ethnic minorities in selection for places in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The Commission for Racial Equality has carried out an inquiry into the allegations regarding St. George's hospital medical school, and published a report on 25 February. The school accepts that the allegations of bias are proven and has revised its admissions procedures.

Admissions procedures are a matter for higher education institutions, within the law. My right hon. Friend considers that all institutions of higher education should monitor their applications processes to ensure that they are not acting in breach of their duties under Section 17 of the Race Relations Act 1976 by allowing either direct or indirect discrimination to take place. Discussions have already taken place with the relevent national admissions registries regarding possible monitoring of applicants to teacher training. The Department proposes to open discussions with the polytechnic central admissions system and with the Universities Central Council on Admissions on the possible introduction of such monitoring for their applicants.

My right hon. Friend intends also very shortly to issue a consultative document regarding the monitoring of enrolments by ethnic origin in those institutions covered by the further education statistical record, including the polytechnics and colleges sector of higher education. He hopes that the universities will introduce a parallel system.

My right hon. Friend has no evidence in general of discrimination against women, who constitute almost 50 per cent. of enrolments in higher education, a proportion which has increased in recent years.

My right hon. Friend is committed to the development of a higher education system open to all those who are able to benefit from it, irrespective of gender or ethnic origin. He is confident that higher education institutions in general fully share that commitment.

Inner London Education

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will indicate the number and the nature of responses from organisations and individuals involved in the field of adult education within inner London in response to his consultative document on the organisation of education within inner London, published in September 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many responses to the consultation document issued on 11 September 1987 indicated support for the retention of the Inner London education authority in its present unitary form;

(3) if he will indicate the nature of responses from the churches within inner London to his document on the organisation of education within inner London, published in September 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many responses have been received since he issued his consultative document on the organisation of education in inner London on 11 September 1987; and how many of these relate to the inner London education authority in particular, and to education within inner London in general;

(5) if he will indicate what the views of voluntary groups working in the field of special education were on his consultative document on the organisation of education within inner London, published in September 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(6) if he will indicate the numbers of parents expressing concern about the future of nursery education within inner London in response to his consultative document on the organisation of education within inner London, published in September 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will indicate the response of business interests, in particular the London Chamber of Commerce, to his consultation document issued on 11 September 1987 on the organisation of education in inner London; and if he will make a statement;

(8) if he will indicate the views expressed by voluntary organisations within inner London in response to his consultative document on the organisation of education within inner London published in September 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department received some 5,500 responses on the proposals contained in the consultative document on the organisation of education in inner London, issued on 11 September 1987. Copies of the responses, other than those from individuals, have been placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that we do not intend to publish analyses of these responses.

Horniman Museum

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what additional resources will be made available to the London borough of Lewisham in the event of the Horniman museum being transferred to the borough;

(2) if he intends to bring forward proposals to safeguard the Londonwide status of the Horniman museum;

(3) what information he has on the average number of visitors to the Horniman museum over the last two years and the number of Inner London education authority schoolchildren who made visits during the same period and the division from which they came.

Mr. Dunn: My hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) made it clear in the debate on the Inner London education authority on 17 February at column 1069 that the Government will be considering the arrangements that are most appropriate for securing the future of the Horniman museum. We will wish to consider all the possibilities. Information about visitors to the museum is published by the Inner London education authority in its annual report.

TRANSPORT

M40 Extension

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, Official Report, 23 February column 153, on the percentage of traffic using the M1 which will use the M40, what is the basis for his Department's calculation that a two-lane M40 extension will be adequate to meet expected traffic flows.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The M40 motorway extension between Oxford and Birmingham is proposed to be built as a dual three-lane motorway except for the section between Waterstock and Wendlebury, where dual two-lanes are proposed. The forecast flows between Waterstock and Wendlebury in 2,006 are in the range 30,000 to 38,000 vehicles per day. This is well below the desirable maximum flow of 54,000 vehicles per day for a dual two-lane motorway. We await the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the proposals for the Waterstock to Wendlebury section.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 153, what is the evidence on which he bases his estimate that between 11 per cent. and 17 per cent. of traffic presently using the M1 will use the M40 when it is complete.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimates of the traffic effects of building the M40 extension, including the transfer of traffic from the M1, were based on forecasts derived from the Oxford to Birmingham route traffic model developed by the Department for use in designing the scheme.

Travel Concessions

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of recent United Kingdom and European Community legislation forbidding sex discrimination, he will make an order under section 93(7)(f) of the Transport Act 1985 that would empower local authorities to grant travel concessions to men and women on a non-discriminatory basis.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the categories of persons eligible to receive travel concessions under the powers conferred on him by section 93(7)(f) of the Transport Act 1985.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for every EEC country, the vehicle excise duty or its equivalent, for (a) a 1,000 cc private car and (b) a 50-seat coach.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the United Kingdom, the vehicle excise duty for all private cars is £100, and for a 50-seat coach £84. Information is not available in a comparable form for other EEC states, some of which tax vehicles by reference to unladen weight or horse power rather than engine or seat capacity.

Drigg (Development)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make additional transport infrastructure investment available in the Drigg area of West Cumbria, following the decision last year to make Drigg Britain's only low-level radioactive waste site.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We were already planning several major and minor schemes to deal with problem points on the A595/6 trunk route which serves Drigg. We shall take account of the volume of Drigg traffic as necessary in preparing these and any future proposals.

Investment in local roads and rail access are matters for Cumbria county council and British Rail respectively

Roads (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total capital allocation for highway work allotted to London boroughs and the Greater London council for each year between 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total for each financial year is as follows:

Year	£ million
1983-84	91·0
1984-85	72·0
1985-86	104·5
1986-87	104·0
1987-88	108·8

The figures up to and including 1986-87 include provision for parking. Expenditure requirements from 1986-87 onwards have been affected by the trunking of 72 miles of roads.

Road Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received from local authorities about the leaflet 1/87 "Measures to Control Traffic for the Benefit of Residents, Cyclists and Pedestrians"; and if he will make a statement on progress in implementing its proposals to reduce road deaths.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We received 16 written responses and a similar number of telephone inquiries from local authorities to traffic advisory unit leaflet 1/87. The main purpose of the leaflet was to publicise and exchange information on ways of controlling traffic in residential areas in the interests of improved safety and environmental improvement. Implementation is primarily a matter for local authorities.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish formal responses to replies received to the document "Road Safety: The Next Steps"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's commitment to seek to reduce casualties by a third, and the report's range of ideas and suggestions for consideration have been generally welcomed. Discussions are continuing with a wide range of bodies on many aspects commented on in their memoranda, letters and at meetings with the Department.

Action is being pressed ahead on urgent items such as vehicle safety improvements, research on road behaviour and attitudes, road engineering features and measures to improve the skills of young motorcyclists.

We propose to take stock later this year of the directions and priorities that have emerged from the consultative process.

M63 (Noise Insulation)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of progress in providing insulation for the homes and properties eligible for this assistance as a result of stage 4, junctions 3 to 5, of the improvements to the M63.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Insulation of homes which qualify because of construction noise is under way. When the 90 or so houses in the priority category have been dealt with, we shall turn as quickly as possible to the 340 properties qualifying because of future traffic noise increases.

Ferries

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to defray the cost of the weighing of freight before it is loaded on to class II and class II(A) roll-on/roll-off ferries in places which do not at present have weighing facilities.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department's consultative document No. 7, issued on 23 December 1987, proposed the individual weighing of all lorries before loading on to class II and II(A) roll-on/roll-off passenger ferries. Some of the responses to the Document drew attention to the cost of compliance with this proposal particularly in remote areas. These responses are now being considered.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Airbus

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has received representations from British Aerospace or any of the Airbus partners or their Governments that additional launch aid may prove necessary for the A330-A340 programmes following the decline in the United States dollar; and whether such concerns have been aired in recent meetings between the representatives of these Governments.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom Government have agreed to provide up to £450 million in launch aid for the Airbus A330-A340 programmes. Senior representatives of British Aerospace have discussed with my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster the effects on their Airbus business of the decline in the value of the dollar. They have not made any request for further launch aid for the A330-A340. Representatives of the United Kingdom Government have not discussed such a possibility at recent meetings with other Governments.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the implications of the United States dollar's fall for the prospects of economic and commercial viability of the A330-A340 projects.

Mr. Atkins: A full assessment of the A330-A340's economic and commercial viability, including the possible effects of exchange rate fluctuations, was made by the Government prior to its offer to British Aerospace of up to £450 million launch aid for these programmes.

Consumer Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of caravans and parts (786.11,89), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information can be found in the "Business Monitor" series — copies of which are available in the Library. Sales data are in PQ 3522/3 for 1981 to 1986 and PQ 381.2 for earlier years. The percentage exported and import penetration figures can be found in MQ 12 (previously M 12).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of electric lamp bulbs (778.21), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is as follows:

Exports

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table showing the value of exports from each standard planing region of the United Kingdom to the other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: Data of value of exports on a regional basis are not processed.

House of Fraser (Holdings) plc

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs of House of Fraser (Holdings) plc have been made aware of a possible breach by Lonrho plc of section 204 to 206 of the Companies Act 1985 in relation to share dealings in House of Fraser plc during the period from the date of the inspector's interim report into share dealings in House of Fraser to the date of its acquisition by Al Sayed Investment and Trust (UK) Ltd.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors are aware of representations made in relation to an alleged breach of sections 204 to 206 of the Companies Act 1985.

Consarc (Exports)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's involvement in the export by the Consarc company to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of furnaces capable of making carbon carbon for nuclear war heads.

Mr. Alan Clark: In February 1985 the Government amended the Export of Goods (Control) Order to prevent the export of some equipment needed to complete a contract undertaken by Consarc in the USSR. The action followed an assessment that the Soviet plant might be used to manufacture carbon-carbon for strategic uses. The equipment to be supplied under the contract was not at the time subject to multilateraly agreed COCOM controls and therefore not controlled by national export licensing of the United kingdom or other COCOM partners. Subsequently, COCOM partners agreed to amend their controls similarly.

Outward Direct Investment

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the totals of outward direct investment by Britain in the Third world and by the Third world in Britain in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information was given in my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry's reply to the hon. Member on 4 November 1987 at columns 717-720. Information for 1986 will be published shortly.

Belgian Textile Industry

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the investigation by the European Commission of the Belgian Government's proposed £34 million aid scheme for its textile industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission has yet to announce its decision concerning the proposed aid.

Turkish Acrylic Yarn

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the level of imports of acrylic yarn from Turkey for each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom imports of acrylic yarn from Turkey were: 1985, £1·6 million; 1986, £8·1 million; and for the 11 months to November 1987, £9·8 million.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many workers employed by United Kingdom acrylic spinners are on short-time working as a result of imports of acrylic yarn from Turkey; if he has received any representations on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that no official statistics are available. However, I have received information from the industry that there is now extensive short-time working in this sector. I have received many representations from hon. Members and the industry, and I met representatives of the Confederation of British Wool Textiles on 9 February. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox) on 26 February 1988.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to encourage the European Economic Community to place greater restrictions on imports of Turkish acrylic yarns.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is nothing I can add to the Answer which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox) on 26 February 1988.

Regional Aid

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the aid received in each of the last three years by textile companies, man-made fibre companies and clothing companies under the following categories (a) regional development grants, (b) regional selective assistance and (c) other assistance, under the Industrial Development Act 1982; and how many of the companies involved had less than 500 employees.

Mr. Atkins: Payments to these industries[1] in the last three calendar years were as follows:

£ million

	1985	1986	1987
Regional development grants (RDG)[2]	8·0	21·5	11·3
Regional selective assistance	7·2	9·4	9·7
Other schemes[3]	0·5	0·2	0·4

[1] Payments have been categorised by reference to the 1968 Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) in respect of the original RDG scheme (textiles, including man-made fibres—order XIII; clothing and footwear—order XV). For all other schemes of assistance including the revised RDG scheme data has been provided by reference to the 1980 SIC (textiles—class 43, man-made fibres—class 26 and clothing—class 45, excluding footwear).

[2] Consists of original and revised RDG payments.

[3] Other assistance has been defined as payments under the Support for Major Projects, Innovation Linked Investment, and Advanced Manufacturing Technology schemes.

Information on the proportion of these payments made to companies with fewer than 500 employees is not available.

GATT

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the general agreement on tariffs and trade working party on trade and workers' rights.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposal by the United States Administration for the establishment of a GATT working party to examine the relationship between labour standards and trade was discussed at the GATT council on 4 February. No conclusions were reached. Informal discussions are continuing to find a consensus solution, but opposition remains widespread, particularly from developing countries.

Post Office (Delivery Service)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will meet the chairman of the Post Office, to raise the subject of increasing complaints about the deterioration in the Post Office's delivery service.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has discussed the quality of the Post Office's service regularly at his meetings with the chairman. We agree with the chairman that the service needs to be improved and are in no doubt about his commitment to improve it.

Commercial Arbitration

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress the departmental advisory committee on arbitration is making in its consideration of the UNCITRAL model law on international commercial arbitration and the Arbitration Acts.

Mr. Maude: The departmental advisory committee on arbitration put out a consultative document on the UNCITRAL (United Nations Commission on International Trade Law) model law on international commercial arbitration in October last year. Responses are presently being received. It is hoped that the committee will be able to put forward a recommendation on the model law in the near future. The committee has already reported on a number of other matters concerning arbitration law and practice. I have arranged for copies of the committee's recommendations to date to be placed in the Library.

Child-resistant Closures

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will include bleach in the regulations requiring child-resistant closures for certain types of household products.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 26 February 1988]: I am not prepared to extend the Child Resistant Packaging (Safety) Regulations to cover household bleach, since the best medical advice available from leading paediatricians shows that it rarely if ever causes actual injury to children who ingest it. Indeed, the Scobie committee, which made the case for child-resistant closures for hazardous household chemicals, recommended them for bleach only with over 10 per cent. active chlorine. All household bleaches contain less than this.

Coal Imports

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what would be the cost to the balance of payments of closing the Scottish coalfield and importing the equivalent amount of coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Colliery closures are a matter for British Coal. But the best defence against the situation described is for the industry to produce reliable supplies of coal at prices which are competitive on the world market.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Cheque Encashment Service

30. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any proposals to change the arrangements for the cheque encashment service at the Post Office in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: There are at present no proposals to alter the long-standing arrangements for cheque encashment at the post offices in the Members' Lobby and the Central Lobby. However, following representations from the Post Office, the Services Committee recommended on 2 February that the fee for cashing non-standard "club" cheques should be increased to £1·25 from 1 April 1988. Normal cheques will continue to be charged at the present rate of 20p per cheque. The increased fee for club cheques was approved by the House of Commons Commission on 8 February 1988, on the basis of the long-standing policy that Members and others should pay the going rate for this service.

Veal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he takes to satisfy himself that no veal sold in House of Commons restaurants has come from calves killed by methods of ritual slaughter.

Mr. Wakeham: I am satisfied that the General Manager of the Refreshment Department, who has responsibility for purchasing veal for the restaurants in the House, has been given the necessary assurances by his suppliers to this effect.

DEFENCE

Consultants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the cost to his Department of employing management or computer consultants for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures for expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on management and computer consultancies are as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	2·0
1985-86	3·8
1986-87	14·5
1987-88	[1]14·8

[1] Estimate

Figures for earlier years cannot be produced without disproportionate effort.

Stand-off Nuclear Missile

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the current discussions on the possible development of a stand-off nuclear missile envisage the use of existing warheads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Any weapon system acquired by the United Kingdom as a successor to the free fall bombs which currently provide our independent sub-strategic nuclear capability, would be armed with a new British nuclear warhead. However, no decisions on this have yet been taken.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the current discussions on the possible development of a nuclear stand-off missile flow from the Montebello decisions on the modernisation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's nuclear inventory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The development of a tactical air to surface missile for NATO's aircraft was among the measures recommended by SACEUR in his 1985 proposals for implementing the Montebello decision.

Ionising Radiation

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to his reply of 25 February to the hon. Member for Davyhulme in regard to the levels of ionising radiation to which members of Her Majesty's forces were exposed in the course of the British atmospheric nuclear weapons test and experimental programme (a) what proportion of those participating were issued with personal dosimeters, (b) what was the highest dose to which any individual was exposed, (c) how this level compared with the maximum permitted dosage and (d) how this level compares with the current maximum permitted dosage.

Mr. Sainsbury: About a quarter of participants were issued with dosimeters. The highest exposure recorded, for two individuals, was 30R, equivalent in modern dosimetric terms to 200 milliSieverts effective dose equivalent. The current United Kingdom limit for radiation workers is 50 mSv per annum. ICRP recommends that planned special exposures above the annual limit should not exceed 250 mSv in the lifetime of any individual. The most recent NRPB guidance suggests that the risks associated with an average of 15 mSv per annum, corresponding to about 300 mSv in a working career of 20 years, are not unacceptable, although it recommends that all exposure should be "as low as reasonably practicable", the ALARP principle.

International Commission of Historians

Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has taken steps to assess whether the report of the independent international commission of historians is consistent with the earlier findings of his Department.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 February, the Ministry of Defence, in conjunction with other interested Departments, is conducting a review of the results of the investigation which it carried out in 1986 into the fate of captured British service men and the involvement, if any, of the then Lieutenant Waldheim in the light of the report of the independent international commission of historians. The commission had access to a wider range of sources than was available to the team which carried out the investigation in 1986, and we therefore wish to reconsider the question taking account of the commission's findings.

It is our intention that the review, which will re-examine all aspects relating to the fate of the captured British service men, should be as thorough and comprehensive as possible. Anyone who has concrete evidence that might be relevant to the review is encouraged to submit it to the Ministry of Defence for examination by the review team.

The review will be pursued as quickly as is consistent with proper consideration of the evidence and the need for accuracy. When it had been completed, it is the intention that a report should be published.

I am grateful to Professor Sir Harry Hinsley, the master of St. John's college, Cambridge, for agreeing to scrutinise the results of the review in order to ensure its objectivity and thoroughness.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the review team to report to me on the conduct of the review. I very much hope that anyone who has information to give will do so without delay so that the review can be completed as soon as possible.

Volunteer and Reserve Forces

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to make a further statement on his Department's consideration of the outstanding recommendations of the National Employer Liaison Committee for the Volunteer and Reserve Forces.

Mr. Freeman: Careful consideration has been given to the central recommendation made by the National Employer Liaison Committee that a major publicity campaign should be set in hand covering a number of years to win and maintain employers' support for the volunteer reserves. I am now able to announce that this recommendation has been accepted and work is now proceeding on its implementation.

Red Cross Sign

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of the Red Cross sign for party political purposes, by the Labour party in a pamphlet about the National Health Service; and if he will instigate immediate proceedings to protect the rights to the use thereof residing with his Department.

Mr. Freeman: On 17 February 1988, the British Red Cross Society drew to the attention of my Department a pamphlet and a leaflet published by the Labour party about the National Health Service which appeared to bear the Red Cross emblem or an emblem closely resembling it. Under the terms of the Geneva conventions, Her Majesty's Government are under an obligation to take measures to prevent unauthorised use of the Red Cross emblem or any sign or designation which constitutes an imitation of it. The Geneva Conventions Act 1957 makes it an offence for any person to use the Red Cross emblem without the authority of the Defence Council, or, without the authority of the Board of Trade, any design so nearly resembling it as to be capable of being mistaken for it. As no such authorities have been given, the matter has been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Army Medical Board

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards the Army has to prevent false information being given to the Army medical board.

Mr. Freeman: The Army medical board considers both the clinical assessment and information provided by the patient. The clinical assessment may be confirmed by a second opinion, where this is considered appropriate, by the doctor treating the patient.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which type of Army medical board sat on the case of Captain (retired) Fred Holroyd in June 1975.

Mr. Freeman: No medical board was held on Captain (Retd) F. Holroyd in June 1975. However, a full medical board was held on 1 July 1975, following a special confidential report written in June 1975.

Castledillon (Troop Deployments)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a Royal Engineer survey troop or a Northern Ireland training and advisory team was stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75.

Mr. Freeman: A Royal Engineer survey troop was stationed at Castledillon at that time. There was no Northern Ireland training and advisory team stationed there.

Northern Ireland Training and Advisory Team

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and composition of the Northern Ireland training and advisory team.

Mr. Freeman: There are two Northern Ireland training and advisory teams responsible for advising and assisting in the training of all units due to deploy to Northern Ireland in the internal security role; a team of 41 officers and men for units of the United Kingdom Land Forces and a team of 43 for units of the British Army of the Rhine.

Captain Holroyd (Allegations)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police carried out their investigation into the allegations of Captain (retired) Fred Holroyd; what conclusions were reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 8 February 1988, at column 83.

Service Personnel (Downgrading)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 11 December 1987, Official Report, column 311, he will specify the exact regulations under which the downgrading of Army service men and women may be recommended.

Mr. Freeman: The regulations under which medical downgrading of Army personnel may be recommended is contained in the following Service publications: "A Joint Service System of Medical Classification 1976" (JSP 346); The PULHEEMS Administrative Pamphlet 1987; Regulations for Army Medical Services 1975; Queens Regulations For the Army 1975 and where relevant, the Army Commissioning Regulations 1981.

Medical Reports (False Information)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards there are to prevent false information being given in non-adverse medical reports.

Mr. Freeman: The terms "adverse" or "non-adverse" are inappropriate to medical reports. The medical report is exclusively a clinical summary of the patient's condition which recommends an appropriate fitness/health grading. It does not comment upon the character or ability of the individual to perform his duties.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment (Calculations)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in the light of the recent figures for unemployment in Durham compiled by the unemployment unit, a copy of which has been sent to him, he has any plans to review his Department's method of calculating those figures; and if he will made a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no such plans. The count of claimants at unemployment benefit offices remains the only reasonable means of obtaining monthly unemployment figures, including figures for local areas such as Durham.

YTS

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the number of YTS places needed in order to ensure that there will be enough suitable places for every individual in every area; and if he plans to provide more places than there will be entrants to ensure that entrants have a choice of places.

Mr. Cope: The Government have given an undertaking that a YTS place will be made available for all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one. The Manpower Services Commission will provide 545,000 YTS places in 1988-89. This figure is over 100,000 more than the expected number of YTS trainees, and sufficient to ensure that young people do not necessarily have to take the first place offered to them.

YTS (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 18 years in the Leeds, West constituency and in the Leeds metropolitan district council area, will be offered a YTS place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In 1988-89, about 2,400 young people in the Leeds metropolitan district area are expected to be offered a place on YTS. A separate figure for Leeds, West is not readily available.

The Government have given an undertaking that a YTS place will be made available for all young people under the age of 18 years who want one.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage January's unemployment figures have changed in each region of the United Kingdom over the last (a) year, (b) two years, (c) three years and (d) four years.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available from the Library. The table shows in percentage terms, the change in the numbers of unemployed claimants, excluding school leavers, adjusted for discontinuity and seasonality, in each standard economic planning region of the United Kingdom, over the periods requested by January 1988.

Region	Percentage change over: One year	Two years	Three years	Four years
South East	−23·1	−24·6	−22·6	−17·2
(Greater London)	(−18·3)	(−18·9)	(−15·7)	(−9·3)
East Anglia	−25·4	−25·9	−21·6	−18·3
South West	−20·7	−22·8	−19·9	−13·5
West Midlands	−19·2	−21·4	−21·5	−19·4
East Midlands	−17·5	−18·2	−17·0	−11·5
Yorkshire and Humberside	−15·8	−16·6	−12·3	−7·0
North West	−15·5	−17·5	−16·9	−14·9
North	−14·0	−17·4	−15·9	−10·8
Wales	−16·3	−21·1	−19·0	−13·5
Scotland	−12·2	−8·3	−5·6	−2·5
Great Britain	−18·1	−19·4	−17·5	−13·3
Northern Ireland	−7·1	−1·4	4·9	5·6
United Kingdom	−17·6	−18·7	−16·7	−12·5

Employment Service

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the new employment service.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor), on 28 January, at column 333.

Since then, the Government have set out in the recent White Paper, "Training for Employment", on priorities for the Employment Service; in particular to help unemployed people, and especially long-term unemployed people, to get back into work. An important part of this task will be to serve as a gateway to the new training for employment programme through jobcentre applications and restart interviews.

The Government have identified the employment service as a possible candidate as a departmental agency under the approach described in the efficiency unit report "Improving Management in Government — The Next Steps". We shall be looking closely at how agency status for the employment service could help to improve efficiency in the use of resources and in the delivery of services to the public.

Tourism (North-West) England

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss the promotion of tourism in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee I have met the chairman of the British Tourist Authority a number of times in the past few months to discuss matters relating to the promotion of tourism in all parts of the country.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

ANC and SWAPO

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends meeting representatives of (a) the African National Congress of South Africa or (b) the South West Africa People's Organisation of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

Western European Union

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the next meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Western European Union will take place; and what guidelines are to be discussed on co-location and the future work of the Western European Union.

Mr. Eggar: The next ministerial Council of the Western European Union will take place in the Hague on 18-19 April. Our approach to the issue of co-location remains as set out in my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill) on 5 November 1987. The meeting will consider how to implement the platform on European security interests which was adopted at the last ministerial meeting.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken and what statements have been made, by the Council of Ministers of the Western European Union, in response to the exchange of views on European security between the presidential committee of the Western European Union and the committee of the supreme soviet of the Soviet Union in Moscow; and what proposals there are to further these exchanges of views in Paris.

Mr. Eggar: The visit to Moscow in April 1987 by a delegation from the Western European Union Assembly was not discussed by the Western European Union ministerial Council at its meetings in that month or in October. It is for the Assembly itself, not for the Governments of WEU member states, to decide whether and how to pursue the contacts made during it.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the Western European Union, in the light of changing nuclear defence policy, and on the part it has to play in the verification processes.

Mr. Eggar: There is no change in our nuclear defence policy, nor in that of the North Atlantic Alliance. The Western European Union does not have a role to play in verification of nuclear arms control agreements reached between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Weapons Limitation

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to examine the evolution of relations between Eastern and Western Europe and to report to Parliament at regular intervals on satisfactory systems of verification, the balance in negotiations in the context of the three baskets and the progress towards an early conclusion of an agreement on the limitation of conventional weapons and chemical weapons.

Mr. Eggar: It is already policy to keep East-West relations continually under review, and we report regularly to the House on the topics mentioned.

Belize

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government about the sudden ending of military assistance to the Government of Belize; and with what result.

Mr. Eggar: We have expressed our concern to the United States Government about the ending of the United States military assistance programme to Belize.

Antarctica

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in the current New Zealand discussions on the future of Antarctica, to give scientists a central role in future policy forming and decision taking in relation to Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: The Antarctic treaty meeting in question was the most recent round of the negotiations aimed at establishing an Antarctic minerals regime. Within the treaty and the successful system of agreements which has developed from it, we and our treaty partners seek independent expert scientific advice (eg from the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research) as part of the regular policy-formulation process. The minerals regime currently being negotiated would continue that practice, through the establishment of an advisory committee to ensure the availability of relevant scientific, and other, advice at all important stages.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for the assessment of environmental impact in Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: At the XIVth Antarctic treaty consultative meeting (Rio de Janeiro, 5-16 October 1987) the United Kingdom tabled a recommendation reflecting work already done by the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research and by the United Nations environment programme. This recommendation, which was adopted, sets out guidelines for carrying out environmental impact assessments in advance of any scientific and logistic activities likely to have a significant impact on the Antarctic environment. This is already the practice of the British Antarctic Survey.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to protect unique life forms in Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: Protection of all Antarctic life forms is already provided for under the Antarctic treaty agreed measures for the conservation of Antarctic flora and fauna 1964, the convention for the conservation of antarctic seals 1972, and the convention for the conservation of antarctic marine living resources 1980. Both conventions have been ratified by the United Kingdom, while effect was given to the agreed measures by the Antarctic Treaty Act 1967.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the need for tighter controls for the preservation of the ecosystem of Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: Since the inception of the Antarctic treaty in 1959 the United Kingdom has been a prime mover in negotiating a progressive series of environmental protection measures for Antarctica. We continue to be guided by scientific advice as to any necessary precautionary measures concerning the preservation of the Antarctic ecosystem. We shall be taking full account of such advice in our preparations for this year's Antarctic living resources meetings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of disturbance in Antarctica on the regulatory efect on the global climate.

Mr. Eggar: As part of the international programme of environmental research in Antarctica, scientists from the British Antarctic Survey and the Meteorological Office have been actively involved with other Antarctic treaty countries in experimental studies of the Antarctic ozone hole, most recently in September 1987. The results of their studies will be presented at an international meeting in Colorado in May.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for legal safeguards for mining in Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: The Antarctic treaty 1959 makes no mention of minerals resources, but the consultative parties, including the United Kingdom, have recognised that unregulated minerals activity would be undesirable. We are consequently participating in the negotiation of an Antarctic minerals regime which would ensure that if minerals activity ever takes place it should do so within a legal framework of operational control and environmental protection.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the regulatory committee of 10 nations about the future of mining in Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: No regulatory committee of this kind yet exists. Such bodies are envisaged as part of the future Antarctic minerals regime currently under negotiation by the Antarctic treaty consultative parties.

Bulgaria

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Bulgarian authorities about the denial of human rights to the ethnic Turks in Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We share the hon. Member's concern about reports of human rights abuses in Bulgaria. We have discussed the position of the ethnic Turks with the Bulgarian authorities on several occasions and will continue to do so until it is clear that there is no longer any problem. My right hon. and learned Friend raised the matter with the Bulgarian Foreign Minister during his visit to this country in September 1987. The United Kingdom and others have also raised the question at CSCE meetings and in other international forums, including the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Turkey

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of the increased trade with Turkey, he proposes to increase diplomatic representation in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Following a recent inspection of Her Majesty's diplomatic posts in Turkey and in the light of our increased trade with Turkey, the commercial sections at Her Majesty's embassy in Ankara and at the consulate-general in Istanbul have been significantly strengthened.

Currently staffing levels are considered to be sufficient to meet exporters' present requirements, but we are keeping the situation under constant review.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of (a) the steps taken to speed up the interview relating to the application for entry clearance of M.A., (ref. Imm 63217) about whom the hon. Member for Stretford wrote on 10 November 1987 and subsequently and (b) the expected date of interview; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my letter to him of 26 February 1988.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he gives to entry clearance officers concerning those applicants for entry clearance who do not have to provide information about accommodation and funds and who are not subject, on acceptance, to an initial 12-month restriction on first arrival in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: None. Entry clearance officers consider applications in accordance with the relevant provisions of the immigration rules (HC 169, as amended).

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give for the different parts of the Indian sub-continent the latest information he has on the length of time from application for entry clearance to first interview for those now being interviewed, and the expected time for those applying now for (a) fiancés, (b) fiancées, (c) husbands, (d) wives and (e) dependant children.

Mr. Eggar: The waiting time in the Indian sub-continent as at 31 December 1987 were:

	Actual waiting time (in months)	Expected (estimated)
New Delhi
Fiancé(e)s	7	7
Spouses	3	3
Dependent children	3	3
OI	0	0
Bombay

	Actual waiting time (in months)	Expected (estimated)
Fiancé(e)s	9	9
Spouses	6	6
Dependent children	6	6

Terrorism (Nuclear Materials)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to raise at the NATO Ministers meeting on 2 and 3 March NATO initiatives against prospective illicit use of nuclear materials by terrorist groups.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Nuclear Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy at the NATO Ministers meeting on 2 and 3 March to raise the issue of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty article VI obligations of NATO member states in the context of the 1983 Montebello NATO agreement on nuclear force modernisation.

Mr. Eggar: No. The decisions taken at Montebello, including the agreement to remove 1,400 nuclear warheads from NATO's stockpile, are in keeping with NATO members' obligations under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty. The recent conclusion of the INF agreement and our commitment to a START treaty are further illustrations of NATO's desire to bring about reductions in the level of nuclear weapons. However, nothing in the non-proliferation treaty requires the nuclear weapons states to allow their existing nuclear weapons to decay into obsolescence.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy at the NATO Ministers meeting on 2 and 3 March to raise the issue of the re-use of nuclear materials, including plutonium and highly enriched uranium, from warheads dismantled under the intermediate nuclear forces agreement of December 1987, in support of future NATO nuclear weapon modernisation programmes.

Mr. Eggar: The INF treaty does not provide for the elimination or dismantlement of warheads. Re-use of fissile material from such warheads is entirely a matter for the United States and Soviet Union, not one for the Alliance.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise at the NATO Ministers meeting on 2 and 3 March the implications for the continued adherence by NATO member states to the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty of United States research and development outside land-based laboratories of technologies in the strategic defence initiative star wars programme.

Mr. Eggar: No. The 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty is a treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union only. The United States strategic defence initiative is aimed at conducting research which is permitted by the treaty. The Soviet Union is also conducting an extensive research programme into ballistic missile defence.

Malaysia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Malaysia concerning the detention of prisoners without trial.

Mr. Eggar: Representatives of the Twelve have discussed the recent detentions under the Internal Security Act with the Malaysian authorities and have made known our collective concerns.

UNESCO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the Government's policy towards contacts with UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations.

New Zealand

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit New Zealand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to visit New Zealand.

Hong Kong (Crown Service Employees)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the categories of employees of the Hong Kong Government who are regarded as being in Crown Services for purposes of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Eggar: For the purposes of registration of certain British nationals as British citizens under section 4 of the British Nationality Act 1981,

"Crown Service under the Government of a dependent territory" includes service by all persons employed as Hong Kong civil servants or as members of the Hong Kong judiciary.

International Committee of the Red Cross

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the significance of the worldwide services of the Red Cross in relieving suffering in all its aspects; and what recent contact he and his officials have had with the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Mr. Eggar: We consider that the International Committee of the Red Cross has a vital role to play in promoting the 1949 Geneva Conventions and offering humanitarian relief to civilians and military victims in times of armed conflict, internal strife and other man-made disasters.

The President of the ICRC, Mr. Sommaruga, paid an official visit to the United Kingdom shortly after his appointment in June 1987. He called on my right hon. and learned friend the Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development and myself. I met the vice-president of the International Committee of the Red Cross, Mr. Aubert, in Geneva on 18 February. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials in Geneva and London enjoy regular contact with the ICRC.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial contribution the United Kingdom makes towards the Red Cross in Geneva; and when the figure concerned will next be reviewed.

Mr. Eggar: We gave approximately £7 million to the International Committee of the Red Cross in 1987. Of this, £240,000 went to the regular budget. This contribution is reviewed annually and the estimate for 1988-89 has been submitted for parliamentary approval. In response to ICRC special appeals, we contributed £6·75 million in 1987.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations from (a) the United States administration or (b) the United States Congress concerning plans to air freight British Nuclear Fuels Limited or United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority origin plutonium to the United States for onward shipment to Japan.

Mr. Eggar: The United States Administration approached us in 1986 about guidelines for the return to Japan by air of plutonium recovered after the reprocessing by British Nuclear Fuels plc of Japanese spent nuclear fuel. The guidelines subsequently formed an annex to the United States-Japan nuclear co-operation agreement signed on 4 November 1987. The United States Congress has made no representations to us on this matter.

SCOTLAND

Consultant Surgeons

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, for each consultant surgeon in receipt of a merit award, he will give statistical information on (a) the level A + A, B and C, (b) their average waiting time for in-patient treatment, (c) the length of their waiting list for in-patient treatment, and (d) their average waiting time for an out-patient appointment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The names of award holders are confidential, subject only to their being available in confidence to consultants generally within their board on request to the chief administrative medical officer.

Medical Posts

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of medical posts unfilled in each Scottish health board area, in junior and senior grades.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of medical posts currently vacant is not available centrally.

Translucent-roofed Buildings

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to exempt translucent-roofed buildings up to 30 sq m in ground area from building regulations.

Mr. Rifkind: A public consultation paper on the reform of the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations, issued on 30 November 1987, has invited comment on the proposals to exempt consevatories, greenhouses, carports and covered areas of up to 30 sq and porches of up to 8 sq m.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications were received in the last year for which figuers are available from registered fishing ports in Scotland for grants for modernisation or construction of fishing vessels; and what proportion were successful.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The new national grants scheme for the construction and modernisation of fishing vessels came into force on 4 July 1987. Between that date and 31 January 1988, a total of 45 applications for grants towards the costs of construction of fishing vessels from fishermen based in Scotland was received and 15 of these have been approved to date. The corresponding figures for modernisation projects are 688 and 634.

No-fault Compensation

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been carried out into the feasibility of a no-fault compensation scheme to replace the present law of negligence in cases of medical accidents in Scotland; and what information he has as to in which other countries such a scheme is operating.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no studies relating only to Scotland. The British Medical Association recently submitted the report of a working party on no fault compensation to the Department of Health and Social Security and Scottish Home and Health Department. The introduction of no-fault compensation was examined by the Royal Commission on civil liability and personal injury which reported in 1978. The commission considered that there would be serious difficulties in designing and administering such a scheme and concluded that it should not be introduced. The Government accept that view.

No-fault compensation schemes operate in New Zealand and Sweden.

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money has been spent by the Inverclyde initiative in Inverclyde since its inception.

Mr. Lang: Since inception of the Inverclyde initiative in March 1985, £8·75 million of public money has been spent in the area.

Scottish Fire Service Training School

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the subject of allegations of malpractice at the Scottish fire service training school at Gullane, in the light of new material published recently by the Lothian and Borders fire board and submitted to him; if he will review the procedures of his Department's fire service inspectorate; and if he will order a fresh inquiry into these allegations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The allegations were the subject of an independent inquiry by Her Majesty's Inspector of Fire Services and a senior officer from Strathclyde fire brigade well experienced in disciplinary matters.

The inquiry team interviewed those named in the original letter of allegation and, when some time later Lothian and Borders fire brigade decided to release their statements, they interviewed recruits from that brigade. The inquiry team also interviewed all other instructors named in the statements. Taking into account the oral and written evidence, the inquiry team concluded that the allegations of humiliation and degradation had not been substantiated. I am satisfied that a balanced picture emerged, allowing the inquiry team to come to reasonable conclusions. I am also satisfied that the inquiry was carried out in a proper manner; and that those said to be complaining and those against whom allegations were made were given the opportunity to provide full explanations to the inquiry team, which enabled the incidents complained of to be seen in context.

Her Majesty's Inspector of Fire Services made certain recommendations and suggestions for the improvement of teaching techniques at the school and in liaison arrangements with brigades. These were accepted by the Department. Those affecting the day-to-day running of the school have been put into effect. Further consideration is being given to how best to improve liaison arrangements and proposals will be put to brigades soon. In addition, improved access arrangements have been offered to and accepted by the Fire Brigades Union.

The Scottish Home and Health Department received no complaints from any other brigade; and I am not aware of any other brigade receiving any complaints from any of its recruits who had attended the course in question.

I see no need to review the procedures of the fire inspectorate or to order a fresh inquiry.

Special Branches

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total number of police officers and civilians serving in, or responsible to, the special branches of Scottish police forces in each year from 1968 to the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available in the form requested. The available data are as follows:

	Police officers	Civilians
30 June 1978	72	Not known
31 December 1979	112	Not known
31 December 1980	117	Not known

Salmon Net Fishing

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to lay the order concerning the extension of the weekly close time for salmon net fishing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is intended that an order will be made shortly and laid before the House under the negative resolution procedure as soon as possible thereafter.

Firearms Incident (Mull)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the appropriate procurator fiscal will instigate inquiries into the incident in early February in which foreign gunmen fired shots at an alleged poacher on Mull; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The procurator fiscal at Oban has already received a report in relation to the incident, which he is presently considering.

SDA Investments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list Scottish Development Agency investments in companies in (a) Scottish constituencies and (b) Scottish districts since November 1987.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The information is as follows:

WALES

Roads

5. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the funding of road improvements in rural areas of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288) published on 25 January 1988 sets out the Department's proposals for funding of road improvements throughout Wales.

East Dyfed Health Authority

17. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider giving extra funds to the East Dyfed health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The authority's recurring revenue allocation has increased by £4,989 million or 9·7 per cent., by comparison with 1986-87, and next year will increase by a further £3·4 million, or 6·1 per cent. In addition, in the current financial year it has received supplementary non-recurring revenue allocations amounting to £0·43 million. Its capital allocation has increased by over £0·2 million, or 14 per cent., over 1986-87 and will increase by a further £0·4 million, or 21 per cent., in 1988-89. The authority has also been given loans amounting to £0·534 million this year, mainly in relation to capital schemes. Further allocations in 1988-89 from funds earmarked for centrally funded developments will be announced in due course.

NHS (Funding)

18. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from health workers concerning funding of the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received no direct representations from NHS staff about the overall funding of the NHS in Wales. However, I met representatives of the Welsh board of the Royal College of Nursing on 11 February to discuss its general concerns about the NHS. Arrangements are in hand for a similar meeting with other trade unions representing Health Service staff in Wales.

Opencast Mining

19. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has completed his review of the current guidelines for opencast mining in Wales, as contained in his Department's circular 13/84.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend expects to do so soon.

Welsh Water Authority

20. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the Welsh water authority; and whether he intends to issue any change in the guidelines or priorities laid down by his Department for the authority's activities.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the Welsh water authority on 4 December. He wrote to the chairman on 19 February 1988 setting out the Government's financial targets for 1988-89. Other than circulars, the only guidelines presently proposed are those referred to in paragraph 37 of the document "The National Rivers Authority" published last December.

University Hospital, Cardiff

21. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects building work (a) to start and (b) to be completed on the paediatric cardiology department proposed for the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I understand from South Glamorgan health authority, the managing authority, that work on site is expected to commence this year and to be completed in 1990 subject to satisfactory progress in design and construction.

Housing (Senior Management)

22. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is prepared to re-examine the efficacy of his Department's circular 30/86.

Mr. Grist: No.

South Wales Coalfield

23. Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has discussed recently the south Wales coalfield with the area director of British Coal.

Mr. Peter Walker: The area director was present when I met the deputy chairman of British Coal on 21 January. We discussed a range of issues affecting the coal industry in south Wales.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

24. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received over the proposed test at Trawsfynydd power station.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received a number of representations expressing concern about the proposed test at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station. The test has since been postponed.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority in Wales are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time, nursery education, in nursery schools and nursery classes of primary schools, excluding any children in reception classes in primary schools and any children in private schools; what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents; and what is the average hourly attendance, per week, of these children in (i) full-time, and (ii) part-time nursery education for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information as at January 1987 is as follows:

	Pupils in nursery schools			Pupils in nursery classes in Primary schools[1]
	Full-time	Part-time	Pupils as percentage of three and four year old population	Full-time	Part-time	Pupils as percentage of three and four year old population

[1] Data relate to pupils of all ages, three and four year olds are separately identifiable
Figures for average hourly attendance are not available.

Grants (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of regional development grants and regional selective grants made in Alyn and Deeside for each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional development grants and regional selective assistance in the Alyn and Deeside parliamentary constituency for the financial years 1980-81 to 1986-87 was as follows:

£ million

	Regional development grant[1]	Regional selective assistance[2]
1980-81	1·4	0·3
1981-82	6·1	0·7
1982-83	6·5	1·8
1983-84	6·7	1·8
1984-85	11·4	1·5
1985-86	13·1	2·7
1986-87	8·2	3·5

[1] Regional development grant expenditure represents payments under the original scheme (RDG I) and since 1985-86, the revised scheme (RDG II). Records of RDG I expenditure at a sub-Wales level are kept on the basis only of individual payments exceeding £25,000 and by employment office areas. RDG I expenditure has been apportioned to the Alyn and Deeside parliamentary constituency are on the most accurate basis consistent with these records.

[2] Regional selective assistance expenditure represents payments of industry and training grants. Expenditure on exchange risk losses on European loans and payments under the business improvement services scheme cannot be broken down to a sub-Wales level and is therefore excluded.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of rate support grant paid to Alyn and Deeside council and Clwyd county council in the financial years 1979 to 1987 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms in 1987-88 prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The amounts of rate support grant expressed in cash terms and in real terms at 1987-88 prices are given in the table. The basis for paying rate support grant was changed in 1981-82 and so figures for individual local authorities before that year are not comparable with those for 1981-82 onwards.

Shopping Centre (Dee Estuary)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the proposed shopping centre on the Dee estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations both for and against the proposed redevelopment, of which the shopping centre is but a part. However, as he may be called upon to exercise statutory planning functions in respect of this proposal, it would not be appropriate for us to comment further on the matter.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the projects for which the decommitted European regional development fund grants, referred to in his Department's press notice of 23 February, had been intended; and if he will make a statement about the future of the projects.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since 1975, at total of £18·1 million of European regional development fund grant has been decommitted, involving some 188 projects. These projects have either been partially decommitted because they have not reached the maximum eligible expenditure level estimated at the time of application or they have been wholly decommitted because they have not proceeded as originally envisaged by the applicant.

The detailed information requested about these projects could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Brussels (Secretary of State's Visit)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the programme for his recent visit to Brussels; and if he will list the names of the officials he met.

Mr. Peter Walker: I went to Brussels on 3 February 1988 for a meeting about integrated operations programmes. I had talks with Commissioner Varfis, who is responsible for the co-ordination of structural instruments, Mr. Camhis, his deputy chef de cabinet, and Mr. Schutz of directorate XXII, who is head of the section dealing with integrated approach operations and co-ordination. I also had discussions with the office of the United Kingdom's permanent representative to the European Communities.

A55 (Expenditure)

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the dualling of the A55 expressway across North Wales to be completed; and how much has been spent and is to be spent on the A55, giving the amount for each individual bypass and improvement scheme, together with the dates when they have been or will be completed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The upgrading of the A55 is expected to be completed in the early 1990s, subject to the completion of statutory procedures and availability of financial resources. Information on individual major schemes since 1979 is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sport and Recreation (Tax Exemptions)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking the conferral on non-profit distributing governing bodies of sport and recreation of tax-exempt status without charitable status, on lines analogous to exemption under section 362 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Representations have been received from the Central Council for Physical Recreation and the British Olympics Association.

Retirement Gratuity

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the lost income tax revenue if the tax-free retirement gratuity limit were raised to (a) £30,000, (b) £40,000 and (c) £50,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that information is not available centrally on the number of recipients or amounts of retirement gratuities. The direct revenue costs, in 1987-88 terms, of increases in the tax-free limit for payments made on termination of employment are shown in the table. These estimates assume that the increase in the limit would not affect the distribution of termination payments.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he has any estimate of what a 1p, 2p, 3p, 4p, 5p, 6p and 7p cut in the standard rate of income tax would represent as a percentage increase in gross pay for a man on average national earnings;

(2) if he has any estimate of what a cut of 1p, 2p, 3p, 4p, 5p, 6p and 7p in the standard rate of income tax would represent as a percentage increase in gross pay for a man on 75 per cent., 80 per cent., 90 per cent., 125 per cent., 150 per cent., 175 per cent and 200 per cent. of national average earnings.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is in the table. The calculations assume that the man's earnings are his only source of income. Average earnings are those for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. This figure is projected to 1988-89 in accordance with the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contribution in paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987. The married man's allowance and higher rate thresholds for 1988-89 have been calculated by reference to the statutory formula for indexation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the manner of the answer given on 11 February 1986, Official Report, columns 427-28, he will update and publish the table detailing the breakdown of the costs or yields of reinstating the 1978-79 tax regime, taking the 1987-88 income tax base.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 February 1988]: If the 1978-79 income tax regime were indexed to 1987-88 levels by reference to the statutory formula and applied to the 1987-88 income tax base, the direct revenue effect would be an additional yield of £11·7 billion in a full year.

The levels of the main allowances and thresholds, compared with the actual 1987-88 values would be:

Personal allowances	Indexed 1978-79 regime £	1987-88 £
Single and wife's earned income allowance	2,055	2,425
Married man's allowance	3,205	3,795
Additional personal allowance	1,150	1,370
Aged single allowance (over 65 but under 80)	2,720	2,960
Aged single allowance (over 80)	2,720	3,070
Aged married allowance (either partner over 65 but neither partner over 80)	4,335	4,675
Aged married allowance (either partner over 80)	4,335	4,845
Aged income limit	8,400	9,800

0-3,550	0-5,250	Exempt
3,551-4,700	5,251-6,300	10
Over 4,700	Over 6,300	15

Investment income surcharge was abolished in 1984-85.

Taking the 1987-88 income base as given, the direct revenue costs of the 1987-88 tax regime compared with the indexed 1978-79 tax regime can be broken down as follows:

	Yield (+) Cost (−) £ million
Increases in personal allowances	−3,970
Abolition of reduced rate band at 25p	+2,850
Decrease in basic rate of 6p	−7,980
Increase in basic rate limit of £1,200	−400
Changes in higher rate thresholds up to 60 per cent.	−800
Abolition of higher rates above 60 per cent.	−590
Abolition of investment income surcharge	−830
Total	−11,720

In the table above, the effect of each change has been calculated on the assumption that each of the changes which precede it has already been made.

Sporting Rights

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revaluation is currently being undertaken of sporting rights; and whether the revised assessments of the value of sporting rights over particular areas of land will be included in a document accessible to the public.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Sporting rights are currently being revalued as part of the general revaluation of all non-domestic properties in England and Wales. The revaluation, which will take effect from 1 April 1990, will be based on the levels of rental values as at 1 April 1988. The new valuation list will be accessible to the public.

Luncheon Vouchers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider allowing luncheon vouchers to be tax-free in the hands of employees up to a minimum of £1 per day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend considers a wide range of matters in the run-up to the Budget.

Nominal Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the lowest rate of nominal income tax, and the date on which each such rate was set, in (i) Italy, (ii) Luxembourg, (iii) the Netherlands, (iv) Portugal, (v) Spain, (vi) Japan, (vii) Denmark, (viii) the United States of America, (ix) New Zealand, (x) Canada, (xi) Australia, (xii) Belgium, (xiii) West Germany, (xiv) France and (xv) Greece; and what assessment he has made in each case of the effect on the international competitive position of the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Below is a table of countries showing in each case the lowest rate of nominal income tax and the date on which such rate was set.

Country	Lowest nominal rate Per cent.	Effective from year
Italy	12·0	1986
Luxembourg	10·0	1987
Netherlands	14·0	1988
Portugal	4·0	1979
Spain	25·0	1988
Japan	10·5	1984
Denmark	22·0	1987
United States of America	15·0	1988
New Zealand	15·0	1987-88
Canada	17·0	1988
Australia	24·0	1987-88
Belgium	24·2	1987
Federal Republic of Germany	22·0	1975
France	5·0	1973
Greece	6·0	1985

Explanatory Notes:
(a) In Luxembourg, Spain Australia, Belgium, France and Greece the lowest bracket on the tax table is actually 0 per cent. For these countries the first figure appearing after 0 per cent. has been chosen.
(b) In some countries local income tax is also charged.
(c) In Germany it is proposed to reduce the lowest rate of nominal income tax to 19 per cent.

This Government's policy of reducing income tax rates has increased incentives and encouraged enterprise, thereby improving the international competitive position of the United Kingdom economy.

Farming (Taxes)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to review the effect of capital transfer tax and capital gains tax on the farming industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The hon. Gentleman will understand that I cannot anticipate the Chancellor's Budget Statement.

Fraud

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions were brought in the Durham constabulary area for income tax fraud offences in each of the last five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret the Inland Revenue does not keep records of tax prosecutions by locality.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average amount of money recovered annually by (a) a senior Department of Health and Social Security fraud inspector and (b) a senior investigation officer in the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1988]: The yield from DHSS investigations is not a matter for me. As regards the yield from Inland Revenue investigations, I have nothing to add to my replies to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 29 January 1988 at column 371.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 425, he will give the information requested about cases of tax fraud for such categories as can be provided without undue cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 February 1988]: I have nothing to add to my answer of 20 January at column 725. This is because smaller cases include investigations by local offices. Such information could not be collated without very substantial cost.

"Paying for Local Government"

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copies of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) were distributed free to right hon. and hon. Members; and how many were sold to the general public.

Mr. Brooke: On publication in January 1986, 800 copies of "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) were supplied to the Vote Office. A further 4,022 copies have been recorded as official issues, which include sales to Government Departments and may include further supplies to the Vote Office. All other sales total 6,949 copies: it is not possible to say how many were bought by the general public, as Her Majesty's Stationery Office's retail customers include local authorities and other public bodies.

HMSO Publications (Prices)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to reduce the general level of prices of Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications, particularly Government Green and White Papers and Hansard.

Mr. Brooke: I am satisfied that Her Majesty's Stationery Office is taking all reasonable steps to keep the prices of its publications as low as possible while still meeting its financial targets as a trading fund. In recent years the average price of parliamentary publications, except Hansard, has risen much less than the increase in the RPI for books.

Hansard is treated exceptionally in that it has long been supported by an annual Vote from Parliament which enables the prices to be set at a lower level than would be necessary to recover the high costs of overnight production. It is this Government's policy to reduce dependence on this subsidy and, while Her Majesty's Stationery Office continues to take steps to reduce the costs involved, recent increases in the price of Hansard have been steeper than for other Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications.

Less Developed Countries

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of United Kingdom-registered banks' claims on less developed countries for 1987.

Mr. Lilley: An analysis as at end-June 1987 of the claims, by country, of United Kingdom registered monetary sector institutions and their branches and subsidiaries worldwide can be found in table 15 of the February 1988 edition of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Government Telecommunications Network

Mr. Terry Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the new switch SL100 for the interface between Government telecommunications network numbers was installed; when the switch failed; and what action is being taken by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency as a result of this failure.

Mr. Brooke: The SL100 switch on the Government telecommunications network was brought into operation on Monday 27 July 1987. Major problems have occurred on two occasions since then. The first was due to the severe storm on 16 October 1987. As a result of the interruption to the mains power supply throughout Greater London, and the failure of the emergency standby power supplies, the switch ceased to function for some 4½ hours until the mains power supply had been restored. The Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency subsequently worked closely with the Property Services Agency to determine and implement improvements to the emergency standby power supplies.

The second problem occurred on the morning of Thursday 11 February 1988 and continued for most of that day. This seriously affected the majority of telephone calls passing through London on the Government telecommunications network. The CCTA worked closely with the company maintaining the switch to ensure that full service was restored as rapidly as possible, but some random intermittent difficulties on the GTN have persisted since then. The fault was due to corruption of software within the switch and urgent detailed investigations are continuing to determine the cause of this and to clear up the remaining difficulties.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by what amount the private medical insurance premium tax offset rule reduced the revenue received from income tax in 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what is the estimated figure for 1987-88;

(2) how much the medical insurance premium tax offset rule would yield in the current years if it applied (a) for earnings of less than £12,500 per annum, (b) for earnings of less than £15,000 and (c) for earnings of less than £20,000; and whether he has available any estimates of the yield in previous years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 8 and 9 February 1988]: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the £8,500 earnings threshold below which employees are not in general taxable on benefits in kind provided by reason of their employment. These rules have applied since 1982-83 to private medical insurance.

It is tentatively estimated that the cost of exempting employees who earn less than £8,500 from tax on employer-provided private medical insurance premiums is of the order of £10 million in each of the years 1985-86 to 1987-88.

The table shows the estimated direct revenue yield in both 1985-86, the latest year for which data are available and the projected yield in 1987-88 arising from the taxation of the benefit of employer-provided medical insurance received by directors and by employees with earnings above the thresholds shown.

Earnings threshold £	Estimated yield 1985-86 £ million	Projected yield 1987-88 £ million
8,500	58	80
12,500	49	70
15,000	45	65
20,000	29	50

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the average medical insurance premium paid per taxpayer in receipt of private medical insurance as a fringe benefit for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88; and how many taxpayers have been in receipt of such benefit.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 January 1988]: I regret the delay in answering this question.

Information is available in respect of the years shown. The benefit of employer-provided private medical insurance premiums was taxable for all employees up to 1981-82 but only for directors and for employees with earned income of £8,500 a year or more from 1982-83 onwards. The estimates of the number of recipients relate to the number of taxpayers liable to tax on the benefit and exclude employees earning below £8,500 per year where appropriate. The average premium is net of any contribution made by the employee to the employer.

	Numbers	Average net premium £
1980-81	[1]315,000	100
1983-84	[1]530,000	150
1985-86	625,000	250
1987-88	[2]735,000	300

[1] Excludes married women in receipt of the benefit.
[2] Projection.

These estimates are derived from the surveys of expenses and benefits. I regret that information is not available for the intervening years.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost of providing tax relief on private medical insurance.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in receipt of medical insurance as a fringe benefit are currently eligible for tax relief on the premium: what is the cost to the Exchequer of this relief; and what estimate he has of the projected cost to the Exchequer of extending eligibility to tax relief to all those covered by private medical insurance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 29 January 1988]: I regret the delay in answering these questions.

The direct revenue cost, at 1987-88 levels, of giving relief at marginal rates of income tax on private medical insurance premiums, including contributions made by employees towards employer-paid premiums, is estimated to be about £150 million. If the benefit of employer-paid premiums paid on behalf of directors and of employees with earned income of £8,500 per year or more were also exempted from income tax, there would be an additional cost of £80 million. These estimates make no allowance for any behavioural changes. Granting tax relief on private medical insurance would be expected to lead to an increase in the number of subscriptions and to an increase in the cost of relief.

It is tentatively estimated that, in 1987-88, about 150,000 employees receive the benefit of private medical insurance from their employer but are not taxed on the benefit because their earned income is below £8,500 a year. The cost of this exemption is of the order of £10 million.

Income Tax

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated income tax forgone in 1986-87 by the Treasury from taxpayers earnings (a) between £20,000 and £50,000 and (b) more than £50,000 as a result of employee contributions to approved pension schemes.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 4 February 1988]: I regret the delay in replying to this question.

The latest estimate of the cost of tax relief in respect of employees' contributions to approved pension schemes in 1986-87 is £1·6 billion. I regret that it is not possible to provide an analysis of this amount by range of earnings.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated income tax forgone in 1986-87 by the Treasury from taxpayers earnings (a) between £20,000 and £50,000 and (b) more than £50,000 as a result of employer contributions to approved pension schemes.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 4 February 1988]: I regret the delay in replying to this question.

The latest estimate of the cost of tax relief in respect of employers' contributions to approved pension schemes in 1986-87 is £3 billion. I regret that it is not possible to provide an analysis of this amount by range of earnings.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what economic and econometric evidence he has which indicates (a) the effects of cutting the higher rates of income tax on the work effort and efficiency of those high paid workers affected by the cuts and, (b) the effects of cutting the standard rate of income tax the effects on the national work effort.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 February 1988]: Cutting marginal tax rates undoubtedly gives a stimulus to enterprise, initiative and effort. The effect inevitably takes some time to build up. Econometric studies identify a positive incentive effect, though they tend to look only at short term effects. I know of no recent United Kingdom studies specifically on the effect of reducing higher rates of income tax.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for each of the six cases of tax evasion in 1987 in which more than £1 million was recovered, whether the evasion involved a company or an individual; and what was the amount of (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) capital gains tax, and (d) inheritance tax owed.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1988]: It is not the practice to give information that may be related to the affairs of a particular taxpayer. Of the total tax involved, almost 80 per cent. was corporation tax; almost 18 per cent. was income tax: and the remainder capital transfer tax and capital gains tax.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for each of the 19 cases of tax evasion in 1987 for which more than £500,00 was recovered, what was the proportion of the sum recovered that was (a) tax, (b) interest, and (c) penalty.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1988]: It is not the practice to give information about individual cases. Of the 19 cases for 1986-87, the proportions for the total of the net settlements were:

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Budget)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average amount each taxpayer in the United Kingdom contributed through direct and indirect taxes to the budget of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for each year since 1978-79; and what will be the contribution in 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 February 1988]: The information is as follows:

The figures exclude expenditure by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and other agriculture departments. They also exclude costs of agricultural support borne by consumers through higher prices.

Funeral Insurance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking tax relief to those who take out simple and inexpensive insurance to cover the cost of their own funeral and to plan for their own funeral arrangements.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer Monday 22 February 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received no such representations.

Revenue Contributions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will estimate the average contribution to total Exchequer revenues which would, on average, be made by an individual during the course of his life.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 February 1988]: An individual's lifetime tax contributions will depend on a large number of factors, including date of birth, marital status, pension provision, lifetime profile of earnings, assumptions about public expenditure; fiscal policy, and changes in the tax system. CSO figures (Economic Trends November 1986) suggest that in 1985, the latest year available, the average individual paid £744 in income tax and employee's national insurance contributions and £528 in taxes on final goods and services.

Public Bodies (Audits)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a list in the Library of the auditing arrangements for each public body.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Government Departments are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General and his counterpart in Northern Ireland. The nationalised industries are audited by commercial auditors. Local authorities are audited by the Audit Commission for Local Authorities in England and Wales, the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland and the Local Government Audit Service in Northern Ireland. For details of the audit arrangements of the health authorities, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) by my hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) on 13 January at columns 330-31. Information about the audit arrangements for other public bodies is set out in column 5 of "Public Bodies 1987", a copy of which was placed in the Library on 2 December.

Appropriation Accounts (Certification)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what statutory authority accounting officers seek certification by the Comptroller and Auditor General of appropriation accounts.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The statutory authority for the Comptroller and Auditor General's certification of appropriation accounts is contained in section 22 of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1866.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an index of currency movements against the pound sterling, with a base of December 1983 = 100, for each quarter since January 1984, relating to United States dollar, Canadian dollar, yen, Swiss franc, Australian dollar, Swedish krona, Finnish mark, Norwegian krone, Austrian schilling, French franc, Belgian franc, Dutch guilder, Spanish peseta, deutschmark, Danish krone, Italian lire and Irish punt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Movements of the £ sterling against the Australian dollar, Finnish mark, Norwegian krone and Austrian schilling are set out in the table. For the other currencies, I refer my hon. Friend to Table 13·1 in "Financial Statistics" published monthly by the Central Statistical Office, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 1 as part of the personal baggage of passengers that are (a) held on a Great Britain firearms or shotgun certificate, (b) the Northern Ireland or (c) the Republic of Ireland equivalent;

(2) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 4 as part of the personal baggage of passengers (a) that are held on a Great Britain firearms certificate, (b) with a Great Britain shotgun certificate and (c) not held on either a Great Britain firearms or shotgun certificate;

(3) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 2, as part of the personal baggage of passengers which were held in the United Kingdom and out of compliance with the Firearms Act 1968;

(4) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 1, as part of the personal baggage of passengers, which were held in the United Kingdom and out of compliance with the Firearms Act 1968;

(5) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 3 as part of the personal baggage of passengers (a) that are held on a Great Britain firearms certificate, (b) with a Great Britain shotgun certificate and (c) not held on either a Great Britain firearms or shotgun certificate;

(6) how many firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 2 as part of the personal baggage of passengers (a) that are held on a Great Britain firearms certificate, (b) with a Great Britain shotgun certificate and (c) not held on either a Great Britain firearms or shotgun certificate;

(7) how many firearms and shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 1, as part of the personal baggage of passengers (a) that are held on a Great Britain firearms certificate, (b) with a Great Britain shotgun certificate, and (c) not held on either a Great Britain firearms or shotgun certificate;

(8) how many firearms and shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 3, as part of the personal baggage of passengers, which were held in the United Kingdom and out of compliance with the Firearms Act 1968;

(9) how many firearms and shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act 1968 have been entered, for each week in 1987 and in 1988 to date, in the register at London Heathrow airport terminal 4, as part of the personal baggage of passengers, which were held in the United Kingdom and out of compliance with the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Lilley [holding answers 25 February 1988]: Customs and Excise keeps no register of the kind referred to by the hon. Member. However, firearms, shotguns and other items covered by the Firearms Act are liable to seizure by Customs if they are imported in contravention of import licensing restrictions. In the calendar year 1987, 39 firearms, two shotguns, and 58 other items covered by the Firearms Act were seized at Heathrow, together with a substantial quantity of ammunition.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Medical Students (Statistics)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of (a) women and (b) men medical students who qualified in (a) 1958, (b) 1968 and (c) 1978 were found to be practising 10 years later.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested. The Department is funding a long-term project of research on doctors' careers. A survey of doctors five years after qualification has been published (British Medical Journal volume 285, 14 August 1982); a survey 10 years after qualification is about to be completed by the medical careers research group at Churchill hospital, Oxford.

Hospital Patients (Costs)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per patient treated over each of the past three years in (a) each of the Birmingham hospitals, (b) the Burton upon Trent hospitals and (c) the other South East Staffordshire district health authority hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information could not be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, in 1986-87, costing returns submitted by the five Birmingham health authorities and by South East Staffordshire health authority show average costs per patient treated in major acute hospitals were as in the table. My hon. Friend may like to contact the West Midlands regional health authority for further information.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for (a) the numbers of families with children dependent on supplementary benefit and (b) the number of children dependent on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: In February 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of families with children under the age of 16 years dependent on supplementary benefit was 1,137,000. The number of children under the age of 16 years dependent on supplementary benefit was 2,123,000.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the difference between the £8 special payments made to severely disabled war pensioners and the sum forgone as a result of the computer error on the retail prices index; and will he make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The £8 special payments fall short of the benefit lost by severely disabled war pensioners as a result of the error by amounts ranging from a few pounds to over £50, although cases of the latter are few in number. The position is complex and it will take some time to identify members of the high loser groups. We shall, however, be making additional compensation payments in the summer to those war and industrial disablement pensioners who have lost significantly more than £8.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the gross and net cost of raising child benefit in a full financial year in line with the rise in tax thresholds in 1988-89, assuming that they are uprated according to the statutory formula.

Mr. Scott: The rise in the retail prices index between December 1986 and December 1987 was 3·7 per cent. If child benefit were to be uprated in April 1988 by 3·7 per cent. the rate would be £7·50 per week. In 1988-89 the additional gross cost of this would be £156 million and the additional net cost would be just over £100 million.

Pension Schemes

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning proposals by some employers with occupational pension schemes to withdraw death-in-service and other benefits from employees who opt for a personal pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of any such representations. Any employee considering leaving an occupational scheme should, of course, weigh any benefits which might be lost against any advantages that might be gained from making alternative arrangements, and seek expert advice as necessary.

Consultants

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the number of sessions worked by consultants in the Royal Liverpool and Broadgreen hospitals, Liverpool; and what is his estimate of the number of additional sessions which could be worked if all consultants worked full-time for the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the Liverpool health authority, who may be able to provide the information requested.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reach a decision on the possible redefinition of repetitive strain injury for the purpose of compensation, in the light of research now being funded by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Scott: We are advised on matters relating to the industrial injuries scheme by an independent body, the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. I understand that the council expects the results of two research projects on repetitive strain injuries to be available by mid-1989 and that further consideration of this matter will be deferred until then.

Kaltostat Dressings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Kaltostat dressings will be agreed for use by by general practitioners; and what estimate he has made of how much will be saved annually by their use.

Mr. Newton: No decision has yet been taken on whether this product will be added to the list of dressings which general practitioners may prescribe.

Irish Nationals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the circular to his Department's offices relating to the vetting of benefit applications by Irish nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is not the Department's policy to vet benefit claims on the basis of the claimants nationality. Guidance on the verification of identity as part of the process of establishing entitlement to benefit was published in Circular S50/85.

Central Register

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which other Government Departments have access to the Department of Health and Social Security/ National Health Service central register list of patients.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department's benefits staff have access to the Department of Health and Social Security/ National Health Service central register list of patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's benefit staff do not have access to the list of patients maintained by the National Health Service central register.

Hypothermia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths from hypothermia-related causes were registered in (a) the Leeds West constituency and (b) the Leeds metropolitan district council area since 1983, by month of registration.

Mrs. Currie: The Leeds, West parliamentary constituency is wholly contained within Leeds metropolitan county district. The table shows the number of registrations of deaths to usual residents of both areas which contained a mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, by month of registration from 1983. Ward (and thereby constituency) data for 1987 are not yet available.

Housing Benefits

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many one-parent families are in receipt of housing benefits; and how many are in receipt of (a) standard housing benefits, (b) certificated housing benefits and (c) housing benefit supplement, in Bristol, South and nationally.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Nurses

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of nurses presently employed by Leeds West district health authority; and what the numbers have been for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: Such figures as are available are shown in the table.

Because of the 1982 NHS reorganisation figures on a consistent basis with those for later years are not available centrally for the years prior to 1982.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the total funds made available for each year between 1983 and the present for the post-basic training of nurses for neonatal intensive care and the number of nurses trained, by regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Information on the funding made available by health authorities for post-basic training of nurses for neo-natal intensive care nursing is not held centrally. It is for health authorities to determine their post-basic training needs, and the resources which can be allocated, in the light of local needs and priorities.

The numbers of nurses who completed training for special-intensive care of the newborn in each region during the year ended 31 March 1987 were:

Mental Illness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the levels of spending on mentally ill people in the Leeds, West district health authority for each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Information on health authority expenditure by type of patient is not collected centrally. Hospital costing returns submitted to the Department show expenditure on hospitals of different types, and costing returns in respect of community health services show expenditure relating to the major areas of activity only. Thus we have information on expenditure by hospitals categorised as mental illness but not on expenditure on the growing volume of activity in psychiatric units in general hospitals etc.

Following is information derived from the hospital costing returns submitted by Leeds, West district health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982:

Revenue expenditure on hospitals categorised "Mental Illness"

1982-83	10,394,187
1983-84	10,652,452
1984-85	11,028,507
1985-86	11,314,123
1986-87	11,309,706

Note: The figures exclude expenditure incurred on the mentally ill within psychiatric units in general hospitals and so on and within the community health services. Such costs are not separately identifiable centrally.

Benefit (Training)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether 16 and 17-year-olds who are unable to obtain a YTS place will be paid the same rate of benefit as those receiving training.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have guaranteed that all persons aged 16 and 17 who want a YTS place will be offered one before the end of the extended period of entitlement to child benefit. Once a YTS place has been obtained a training allowance of £28·50 per week will be payable (£35·00 per week in the second year). After the extended period of child benefit a bridging allowance of £15 per week will be paid by the Department of Employment for up to eight weeks a year to young people who apply for a YTS place having left or lost a job or a previous YTS place.

Freeline Social Security

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he established the Freeline Social Security service on 0800-666555; for what purpose; whether it has been in continuous service since that date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many staff are employed to answer Freeline Social Security on 0800-666555; how many calls are dealt with on an average working day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Freeline Social Security which succeeded Freefone DHSS was introduced on 6 April 1987 to provide a free advice and information service on general social security matters for members of the public and to supplement the service provided by DHSS local offices. The 10 Freeline Social Security centres which employ 90 staff have been in continuous service during normal working hours since their inception. In the year to 9 February 1988 they dealt with, on average, 3,073 calls a day.

The Department regards Freeline as a significant and successful enhancement of the service that it provides to the public.

Meals Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report details relating to the meals allowance payable to people in boarding accommodation but who do not have all the meals provided, showing (a) the percentage increase in such meals in each year from 1982 to 1987, (b) figures available for each constituent within the United Kingdom and (c) regional variations in the cost of such meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Statistics on the number of people in boarding accommodation who do not have all meals provided are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the regional variations in the cost of such meals is not collected.

The maximum payable by way of meals allowances has remained at £29·40 a week since November 1984. Percentage increases from 1982 to 1984 are set out in the table.

RHAs (Clerical Officers)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of clerical officers employed by each regional health authority for each year since 1979 until the latest year for which figures are available, together with the estimated number of clerical officers required by each regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible. Information on the number required by each regional health authority is not available centrally.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the average salary of a clerical officer in each of the regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: I regret that earnings information at this level is not available centrally.

Manchester Royal Eye Hospital (Cataract Unit)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 23 February, when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on the outcome of the recent discussions between the Central Manchester health authority and the regional health authority about the possible establishment of a day care cataract unit at the Manchester royal eye hospital.

Mrs. Currie: This matter, along with a range of other proposals for new patient service development in the region, will be considered by the regional health authority at its meeting on 22 March.

"Firecode"

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Stretford of 3 February, Official Report, column 663, what information he has about steps taken by district health authorities to follow the advice given in the "Firecode" documents;

(2) what steps he takes to monitor the compliance by district health authorities, with the advice given in the document "Firecode"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We regard fire safety in all NHS units as very important particularly as many patients are frail or immobile. Circular HC(87)24 asked health authorities to ensure that the fire precautions set out in the "Firecode" were scrupulously observed. Regional health authorities were asked to monitor district health authorities' observance of the precautions. During 1988-89 the Department's health building directorate will be reviewing each RHA's performance on fire safety in the premises for which it is responsible and its monitoring of DHAs. Any major shortcomings will be taken up in the National Health Service Board's review of the RHA and, if appropriate, in the ministerial review. As a result we should have significant information on compliance with the new "Firecode" by the end of the year.

Social Fund

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what contingency funds and arrangements exist for use in the event that a local office's social fund allocation for grants and loans appear unlikely to last the full financial year.

Mr. Scott: As the Secretary of State's directions and guidance to social fund officers in the "Social Fund Manual" make clear, social fund officers are expected to manage their local office budgets to meet needs of highest priority throughout the financial year and so as to remain within their budget for that year. There are some contingency arrangements at national level to meet, exceptionally, demands which were unforeseen and unexpected, for example, local disaster leading to extra demands for crisis loans.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give financial support to independent research to monitor the effects of the social fund on claimants, and to make the report of such a study publicly available.

Mr. Scott: We propose to commission independent research later in the year into the extent to which the social fund is meeting its objectives; the question of publication will be decided in due course.

Invalid Care Transfer

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why invalid care allowance is not payable by credit transfer.

Mr. Scott: Payment by automated credit transfer requires a computerised database of claimants. Although it is the aim eventually to provide such a facility for the payment of all benefits, I regret that the necessary computer facilities are not yet available for invalid care allowance.

Speech Therapists

Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what difficulties are being experienced in the recruitment of trained speech therapists in (a) Wolverhampton and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information on the recruitment of speech therapists is not collected centrally. The position in a particular district is a matter for the district health authority. Numbers of speech therapists in post in the NHS nationally have been increasing by about 8 per cent. on average per year.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what steps he is taking to ensure that there is adequate representation of black, and ethnic minorities on (a) the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and (b) similar bodies for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Newton: We are aware of the concern to increase the number of members of ethnic minority origin on the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. In making appointments to the council, and to similar bodies, efforts are made to identify members of ethnic minority groups who are able and willing to undertake public work.

Administrators

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the ratio of administrators to beds in (a) the National Health Service, (b) the South-West regional health authority and (c) the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority on 1 January 1965, 1 January 1975, and 1 January 1985; and what is the projection for 1 January 1988.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 December 1987]: Full information is not available in the form requested. For 1965, there are no comparable data with the later years. Projections for 1988 are not available centrally.

The work of administrative and clerical staff spans the whole range of health authority activity, not just hospital in-patient services, and a substantial number are engaged in direct clinical support roles. Crude ratios of administrative staff to available hospital beds, therefore, are misleading and do not provide helpful comparisons. The available information as requested, however, is shown in the table.

Benefit Offices (Staff Safety)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been made by trade unions representing staff in local offices about the safety of staff following benefit regulation changes in April.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 February 1988]: No written representations have been received, but discussions have taken place about the safety of staff at departmental Whitley council meetings.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the percentage of patients awaiting operations in the Leeds, West district health authority who have been waiting for (a) under one month, (b) under two months, (c) under three months, (d) under six months, (e) under nine months, (f) under 12 months and (g) between 12 months and two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the September 1987 figures for in-patient waiting lists, urgent and non-urgent, for each district in the Yorkshire region.

Mr. Newton: The September waiting list figures are being compiled now and will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Her Majesty's Government intend to publish the quarterly waiting list returned filed by all district health authorities and special health authorities on 31 June 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The returns for 30 June were seriously incomplete, due to initial difficulties in switching to the new and more detailed information system. Putting these figures into a form in which they might usefully be published requires extensive work, and we are currently giving priority to the returns for September, which I hope to be able to publish shortly.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table for each district health authority and special health authority, showing for each the total numbers of people waiting for treatment in September 1982 compared with the numbers at March 1987, the numerical change and the percentage increase or decrease, listed with the biggest increase first and the largest decrease last.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply 18 January 1988, c. 570]: The information requested is given in the table.

[1] The waiting list for Milton Keynes was formerly held by Aylesbury Vale Health Authority but was taken over by Milton Keynes Health Authority in 1984 following the development of Milton Keynes General Hospital. The above table shows a comparable reduction in the Aylesbury Vale figures.

[2] The waiting list figures for March 1987 are affected by the transfer of Black Notley Hospital from the North East Essex District to Mid Essex DHA on 1 April 1986.

[3] No March 1987 figures available for Hampstead Health Authority and the Royal Marsden Hospital.

[4] In September 1982 the data for the Eastman Dental Hospital was collected by another unit.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the numbers of people waiting for treatment in March 1978 and March 1987; and if he will break this list down by regional health authority, district health authority and special health authority.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 570]: The information requested is given in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Commodities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the effect on output of wheat, rapeseed and other commodities in surplus of the measures which the German Government have said they will introduce to cushion the effect of the decisions taken by the EEC at the meeting of the Council of Ministers and whether he expects other countries are likely to take similar measures.

Mr. MacGregor: I assume the hon. Member refers to set-aside. It is not possible to predict its effect on output, as this will depend on the uptake of the scheme in the individual member states.

EC (Depreciation of Stocks)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his statement on the meeting of the EEC Council, Official Report, 15 February, columns 705-17, why the cost of depreciation on EEC stocks has not been written off under the guideline; and under what provision of the treaty of Rome the Commission decided not to include such depreciation in the annual budget.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 22 February by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at column 17.

Agricultural Policy

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the General Synod of the Church of England to discuss the social and economic prospects for agricultural tenants.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested by the General Synod, nor has my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales been approached by the Church in Wales, but I frequently meet representatives of landlords and tenants to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Negative Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the result of the representations to the European Commission on the subject of negative monetary compensatory amounts as barriers to the efficiency of the United Kingdom's agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I expect this to be considered in the context of the forthcoming price-fixing.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research Her Majesty's Government are sponsoring into alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None. Although one chlorofluorocarbon (dichlorodifluoromethane) is currently permitted as a food contact freezant under the Miscellaneous Additives in Food Regulations 1980, its usage is very small, and alternative liquid freezants (carbon dioxide and nitrogen) are already permitted by the same regulations. The latter materials are already used preferentially by quick-frozen food manufacturers, as the processes utilising them are both more cost-effective and environmentally acceptable.

Houses (Land Slippage)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to how many houses, by county, have been affected in the last five years by land slippage through land drainage problems and coastal erosion.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not readily available.

Bass Fishery

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to take for the long-term management of the bass fishery.

Mr. Gummer: On 24 July 1986 I announced, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) at column 500 that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I were undertaking consultations on measures recommended by the Ministry's directorate of fisheries research for the management of the bass fishery in England and Wales. Those consultations produced a full and detailed response from both commercial and recreational fishermen.

Following careful evaluation of this response and further investigation by our scientists, my right hon. Friend and I have reached conclusions about the sort of measures needed to protect young bass, safeguard recruitment to the spawning stock and maximise yields to the fishery. Although alternative options have been considered, we are of the view that the general line of the approach recommended by our scientists is the correct one, with an increase in the minimum landing size for bass, together with the introduction of mesh size controls for gill and other specified nets and the closure of nursery areas.

Our conclusions are therefore that the following measures would be appropriate:

(i) minimum landing size to increase from 1 January 1989 the national mimimum landing size for bass from 32 to 36 cm to prohibit from the same date the carriage of bass under 36 cm by British vessels to ask the EC Commission to propose a corresponding increase in the Community minimum landing size

(ii) mesh size controls

to prohibit from 1 January 1990 the use of gill and other specified nets with mesh sizes of between 60 and 99 mm by British fishing vessels within British fishery limits, south of lines of latitude drawn through Donna Nook in Lincolnshire and Havering Point, Cumbria, subject to an exception for certain types of net between 60 and 99 mm used to catch grey mullet in specified fisheries to establish from 1 January 1990 24 nursery areas to protect juvenile bass stocks, in which only fishing activities which are not considered detrimental to juvenile bass stocks would be permitted.

(iii) nursery areas

The intention would be to apply the minimum landing size throughout Great Britain. The prohibition on the carriage of under-size bass would apply to all British fishing vessels. The mesh size controls would not be applied to waters off Scotland, north east England, Cumbria and Northern Ireland, where the numbers of bass taken are negligible. Within the area in which the mesh size controls would apply there would also be a ban on the carriage of gill and other specified nets with mesh sizes of between 60 and 99 mm unless properly lashed and stowed in such a way that they could not be readily used.

Full details of these proposals are being sent to organisations representative of the commercial and recreational fisheries and other interests and copies are also being placed in the Library of the House. Written comments are being invited by 31 May. My officials will be looking to discuss the local implications of the proposed measures, and in particular the proposals for individual nursery areas, in detail with representatives of local fishing interests before final decisions are taken.

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the exact date and time when he first became aware of the high level of rainfall at the time the Chernobyl nuclear accident plume was over West Yorkshire in early May 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the last sentence of my previous reply to this matter on 10 February 1988, at column 240. The exact date of receipt was 30 June 1986; the time of receipt was not recorded.

ENERGY

Energy Subsidies

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has commissioned or intends to commission, studies evaluating the cost-effectiveness of the subsidies, both direct and indirect, including tax reliefs, given to (a) the nuclear industry, (b) the oil and gas industry, (c) the coal industry and (d) the energy efficiency-renewable energy industries; what these are in 1987 prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department's current support for the areas in question is described in volume II, chapter 6 of the public expenditure White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91", Cm. 288, published in January 1988. The cost-effectiveness of this support is kept under regular review.

Nuclear Research

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current percentage levy by (a) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and (b) the Energy Technology Support Unit on (i) nuclear and (ii) non-nuclear research work to fund underlying nuclear research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Energy's contribution to the UKAEA's funding of the underlying research programme is made through a 10 per cent. levy on the majority of its nuclear programme letters, and smaller levies on contracts for non-nuclear work, including a charge of 6 per cent. on the work undertaken by the energy technology support unit. The balance of programme funding comes from levies on work for the UKAEA's other customers, and other arrangements designed to produce comparable levels of funding.

Imported Coal

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the level of direct or indirect subsidy enjoyed by imported coal from: South Africa, the United States of America, Poland, Colombia, Australia and China.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government do not collect information about any subsidies which may be paid to overseas coal producers, as few coal-producing countries publish such information.

Scottish Coalfield (Work Force)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what would be the net cost of making the work force of the Scottish coalfield redundant and paying them benefits instead of wages.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not available.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels Limited to discuss the future of Sellafield and the effects of reprocessing of nuclear waste on the inhabitants of the east coast of Ireland and west coast of Britain.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of BNFL regularly. I shall meet him next on Monday 29 February when I open the company's exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall. Reprocessing is a proven and safe technology which keeps open the possibility for recycling valuable uranium and plutonium as fuel.

Nuclear Policy

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from the Irish Government and their Minister for Energy regarding nuclear energy policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 15 February 1988 at column 516.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any nuclear material of any kind has been transported to the Drigg or Sellafield sites from the Mol site in Belgium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am informed that irradiated fuel from a joint United Kingdom/Belgium irradiation test programe in the BR3 reactor at Mol was returned to Sellafield on completion of the programme. The last receipts were in 1984-85.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress the Government have made towards clarifying guidelines for the use of third party financing in the public sector, for energy efficiency investment provided by private sector energy management companies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The guidelines issued by the Treasury and the Energy Efficiency Office last May clarified the use and assessment of contract energy management in the public sector, and these still apply. A number of public sector projects are under way or in development.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he is making towards launching a suitable scheme for labelling the energy efficiency of homes; and when he expects to launch such a scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department's Energy Efficiency Office jointly funded (with the Department of the Environment) the development of the Building Research Establishment domestic energy model, which provides the technical basis for the Milton Keynes energy cost index for new houses. Meanwhile, the EEO continues to advise and encourage private sector firms seeking to stimulate market demand for home energy labels in new or existing homes.

Private Sector Energy Producers

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Government expect to resolve the difficulties in relation to establishing a rating system for private sector electricity power stations and combined heat and power producers, which will permit them to be assessed for rating on an equitable basis with power stations operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will be making a statement on the rating of independent electricity suppliers very shortly.

Home Insulation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many projects are now operating under the neighbourhood energy action home insulation scheme; how many homes have been insulated; what is the estimated target for the current year; and what is the total level of support from public funds through the Government and their agencies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are now 434 such projects operating; the number of homes insulated to date is estimated at 450,000; the target number of homes to be insulated is 200,000 in 1987-88 and a further 300,000 in 1988-89. Total Government funding (for start-up costs, wage costs, and for the draught-proofing work of projects) is estimated at £45 million in 1987-88 rising to £55 million to £60 million in 1988-89.

Energy Labelling Scheme

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to launch an energy labelling scheme for electrical appliances; when discussions with the industry first started on a voluntary scheme; and what progress has been made.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have no plans to launch an energy labelling scheme for electrical appliances.

My Department has, since before 1980, been in discussion with the manufacturers of electrical appliances, and a pilot energy cost labelling scheme was developed by the John Lewis Partnership and Eastern Electricity in collaboration with the Energy Efficiency Office. As a result of this study, all John Lewis Partnership stores and all electricity board showrooms now display simple energy cost labels on refrigeration goods on a voluntary basis. Many other manufacturers and retailers as a matter of course provide energy consumption data for electrical appliances, either in their sales brochures or in the form of "energy labels".

In the period 1986-87, the Energy Efficiency Office produced two leaflets: one for consumers which explains the basis for energy cost labels on refrigeration goods, and one for retailers and manufacturers explaining the standard method of estimating the annual energy costs for refrigeration goods, washing machines and dishwashers from the basic energy consumption data provided by the manufacturer. Any retailer or manufacturer who so wishes may draw upon these leaflets to produce a simple energy cost label. Copies of these leaflets are available from the Energy Efficiency Office.

Electricity (Private Producers)

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to satisfy himself, in the light of the conclusions of the Price Waterhouse Report on electricity tariffs available to private producers, that the existing tariffs offered by the electricity boards comply with the provisions of the Energy Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no reason to believe that in setting tariffs in the light of the Price Waterhouse report, the electricity supply industry has acted otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Energy Act 1983.

Tariffs fixed under the 1983 Act have to be based on the "avoided cost" principle, must not show undue preference and should be published; they must also be set after consultation with the consultative council and the Electricity Council.

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average percentage of each batch of spent Magnox nuclear fuel processed at BNFL b205 factory deemed to be accounted as a process loss; and what covering agreements there are with customers to accept such process losses.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Processing of spent Magnox nuclear fuel at Sellafield releases both uranium and plutonium for future use. I am informed that up to 3 per cent. by weight of waste is produced; which is isolated for safe storage.

There are arrangements with overseas customers for the eventual return of such waste.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the European Commission has fully informed (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) other Governments of the partner countries in supply and co-operation agreements or contracts, of the safeguards convention applied to the accounting of nuclear materials subject to these agreements in mixed civil-military installations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Government participate in the negotiation of arrangements for the application and implementation of Euratom safeguards in the mixed civil-military installations in the United Kingdom. Other Governments are not involved in these negotiations.

Power Stations (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 11 February, columns 346-47, on European Economic Community environmental impact assessment regulations, which of the projects (c), (e), (f), (g) in the original question are to be subject to applications for planning consent on or before 2 July under current Departmental plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An application for outline planning consent for the European demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay (project C), which is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, was submitted on 30 May 1985. The CEGB sought my consent to construct the proposed coal-fired power station at Fawley (project E) on 3 February this year. I am advised that those concerned have no plans to submit planning applications for projects F or G before 2 July 1988.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost of supplying the statement and White Paper on privatising electricity to every employee of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The cost of supplying the statement and the White Paper was met by the Electricity Council. I have therefore asked the chairman of the council to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of non fossil-fuelled generating capacity the proposed privatised electricity distribution companies will be required to contract for.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will be consulting the industry on this question. I anticipate that the level will be set to reflect, first, the existing level of nuclear power generation and, secondly, an appropriate level of other non-fossil fuel sources.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to introduce legislation to (a) provide powers to restructure and privatise the electricity supply industry, (b) establish a regulatory system for the electricity supply industry and (c) modernise the law on electricity supply.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to introduce legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the power stations that he proposes should form a new private generating company comprising 30 per cent. of existing capacity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The new company will own a broad spread of plant of various sizes and ages to enable the new company to compete at all levels of system demand. The precise allocation of plant is a matter for consultation with the industry.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in how many nuclear installations in the Unietd Kingdom nuclear materials from the safeguarded and unsafeguarded nuclear cycle are processed simultaneously;

(2) in how many, and at which, nuclear installations in the United Kingdom civil safeguarded and military unsafeguarded nuclear materials are processed or stored simultaneously.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: There is one facility at British Nuclear Fuels Springfields where some civil natural uranium is co-processed with defence uranium. Both safeguarded and unsafeguarded material is present at various BNFL and Atomic Energy Authority sites.

Sellafield (Safeguards)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many installations at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield site are open to continuous physical inspection by either: (a) Euratom or (b) International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards inspectors;

(2) how many installations at the British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield site contain civil and military materials together, either simultaneously or sequentially.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) on 4 June 1986 at columns 594-95.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) for each of the installations under particular safeguards provisions at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield, if he will list the date on which the reporting to Euratom of isotopic data on plutonium was begun;

(2) for how many installations at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield all plutonium stocks and flows recorded for and reported to Euratom include the plutonium isotopic data;

(3) for how many of the installations at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield the particular safeguard provisions to which reference is made in Commission regulation 3227/76 have been brought into force;

(4) whether the inspection reports, without giving specific details, of meetings to discuss implementation questions regarding the Euratom safeguards provisions agreed in June 1986 for Sellafield, have identified any areas where British Nuclear Fuels plc recording or reporting systems require improvement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 July 1987, at column 19. The meetings referred to in my reply are continuing and include discussion of particular safeguards provisions for Sellafield, none of which are yet in force, and the reporting of plutonium isotopic data.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many installations on the British Nuclear plc, Sellafield site are designated for civil use only.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: The facility for the production of fuel for the Dounreay prototype fast reactor is used exclusively for civil purposes as will be the thermal oxide reprocessing plant (THORP) which is currently under construction.

Nuclear Facilities (Safeguards)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for how many, and which, nuclear facilities in the United Kingdom facility attachments, pursuant to the 1978 United Kingdom-International Atomic Energy-Euratom tripartite safeguards agreement are in force.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: There are facility attachments in force for the prototype fast reactor and its associated reprocessing plant at Dounreay and the centrifuge enrichment plants at Capenhurst.

Plutonium

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what formal agreements there are between Japan and the United Kingdom concerning the physical protection of reprocessed plutonium being transported from Sellafield to Japan in the 1990s;

(2) what formal agreements there are between United States of America and the United Kingdom concerning the physical protection of reprocessed plutonium being transported from Sellafield to Japan in the 1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 February 1988]: All exports of nuclear materials are made within the guidelines set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, James Callaghan, on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-516. This includes the requirement for adequate physical protection.

Detailed arrangements for these shipments will be agreed nearer the time.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for the last calendar year or 12 months for which figures are available, the total number of planning applications submitted to local authorities, the number refused, the number appealed against, the number of appeals subsequently upheld, and the number of times costs were awarded; and what the comparable figures have been in each of the past five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The tables include the information requested.

Figures for planning applications are taken from Government statistical service news release number 52 dated 1 February 1988. The figures for planning appeals are published in the chief planning inspector's report April 1986 to March 1987. These documents are in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest numbers of homeless people in the London borough of Newham; and what is the cost to the borough.

Mrs. Roe: The number of households accepted as homeless by the London borough of Newham in July to September 1987 appears in "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Supplementary tables".

The latest information available from the borough on the costs incurred in the operation of the homelessness provisions appears in "Homeless Statistics, 1984-85 actuals", published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Newham did not respond to the 1985-86 and 1986-87 surveys. The figures cover all the costs falling outside the Housing Revenue Account and the hostel and lodging house costs falling on the HRA: the costs of HRA dwellings used either permanently or temporarily to house the homeless are not included.

Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Planning Appeals

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration is being given to introducing legislation whereby individual members of the public, singly or collectively, would have the right of appeal to him where a local authority grants planning permission.

Mr. Waldegrave: In our response (Cm. 43) to the fifth report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985-86, we endorsed the Committee's view that it would not be appropriate to give to third parties rights to appeal against the grant of planning permission.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) official cars and (b) other vehicles operated by his Department use lead-free petrol.

Mr. Chope: There are 16 cars in the Department of the Environment running exclusively on unleaded petrol. There are a further 700 vehicles capable of running on unleaded fuel where it is available.

Planning Permission (Appeals)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many cases a local authority's refusal of planning permission was (a) the subject of an appeal to him and (b) upheld by him in the last year for which figures were available; and what equivalent figures he has for the city of Durham.

Mrs. Roe: In 1987, the number of appeals received against planning decisions of local authorities, or their failure to determine applications, the number of such appeals decided by the Secretary of State or inspectors appointed by him, and the number dismissed were as follows:

	England	City of Durham
(a) Received	21,548	15
Decided	17,113	15
(b) Dismissed	10,589	5

Lambeth (Housing)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing investment programme approvals have been given to Lambeth council in 1987-88 under the estates action programme; and how many he estimates will be given in the following year.

Mrs. Roe: Lambeth Council did not apply for estate action funding in 1987-88 but have submitted four outline bids for 1988-89. These are now being considered. We will tell Lambeth shortly which of these bids we should like them to work up more fully. Any approvals and additional allocations will follow as soon as the council can give us firm information on costs, phasing and other details of the schemes.

Water

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location of public water supplies in the area of the Anglian water authority which failed to meet the bacteriological standards set out in the EEC drinking water directive in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any public water supplies in the Anglian water authority area failing to comply with the bacteriological standards in the EC drinking water directive in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the households currently housed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales are one-parent families; and what percentage this is of the total number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mrs. Roe: At 30 September 1987, there were about 11,300 households temporarily placed in bed — and — breakfast accommodation by English and Welsh local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. Information on the number of one-parent families placed in such accommodation is not collected.

Homeless People

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest estimate for the number of homeless people in Leeds; how many are under 21 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Numbers of households accepted as homeless are reported by local authorities, but not information on ages or on numbers of people. The households accepted by Leeds city council in the third quarter of 1987 appears in the latest issue of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Supplementary tables", which is available in the Library.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any nuclear waste material of any kind has been transported to the Drigg or Sellafield sites from the Mol site in Belgium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Irradiated fuel from a joint United Kingdom/Belgium irradiation test programme in the BR3 reactor at Mol has been returned to Sellafield on completion of the programme. The last receipts were in 1984-85.

Drigg (Development)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make additional infrastructure investment available in the Drigg area of West Cumbria, following the decision in 1987 to make Drigg Britain's only low-level radioactive waste site.

Mr. Ridley: It is for BNFL and the local authorities to make additional infrastructure investment available in the Drigg area.

BNFL has already contributed some £10 million towards the development of infrastructure in west Cumbria.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Drigg Action Group, Cumbria, concerning the status of, and future developments at, the Drigg site; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from the organiser of the Drigg Action Group about the Drigg site. A copy of the reply has been sent to the hon. Member.

Sports and Leisure Management

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to bring sports and leisure management within the class of defined activities as set out in the Local Government Finance Bill; and what timetable he proposes for the implementation of the provisions relating to all such defined services.

Mr. Chope: The Department issued consultation papers on both these issues last autumn. We are still considering the responses.

Rating Reform

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take on the introduction of the new community charge to ensure that the inequalities of the grant-related expenditure formula for Harborough and similar large rural type authorities are not perpetuated in the new system of local government finance, either in the transitional period or in the longer term.

Mr. Howard: The needs assessment to be introduced in the new community charge system will continue to reflect the real disparities in the circumstances of different areas which affect authorities' need to spend in order to provide a standard level of service efficiently, but they will be simpler and more stable than at present. The details of the methodology will be decided after discussion with local authority representatives.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 19 November 1987, Official Report, column 671, if he is now in a position to list the precise parts of a farm business liable to pay the non-domestic rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A farm business may take many forms. However all such businesses are liable to be rated unless they come within the terms of section 26 of the General Rate Act as amended by the Rating Act 1971.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his definition of agricultural buildings in the context of the proposed uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to section 26 of the General Rate Act 1967 as amended by the Rating Act 1971. The Government have tabled amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill which would replicate those provisions in the new non-domestic rating system.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 1 March 1988

SCOTLAND

Orthopaedic Consultants (Ayrshire and Arran)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for each orthopaedic consultant employed by the Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and will arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average waiting time for operations for each orthopaedic consultant employed by the Highland health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and will arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Mobile Homes

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licensed residential mobile home stances there are in each district and islands authority in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reference was made to the EC Commission about his Department's ban on the carriage of monofilament nets; and what representations were received from the Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As was stated to the hon. Member on 17 April 1986, at column 457, the Commission of the European Communities was consulted about the terms of the order before it was laid. In reply the Commission indicated that the order was compatible with Community law and in conformity with the common fisheries policy.

On 5 November 1987, the Commission confirmed that the measures in the order could now be regarded as technical measures, covered by article 14(1)(b) of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3094/86 which replaced Council Regulation (EEC) No. 171/83 on 14 October 1986.

Rural Areas (Assistance)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of all central Government assistance to rural areas for the last financial year in Scotland on a per capita basis.

Mr. Lang: The information is not readily available in the form requested.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures for the number of households accepted as homeless in Scotland in each year from 1978 until the latest available year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of applicant households under the homelessness legislation who were assessed as homeless by local authorities are set out in the following table.

Financial year	Number of homeless cases
1978-79	7,494
1979-80	7,443
1980-81	7,022
1981-82	8,268
1982-83	8,665
1983-84	8,094
1984-85	9,851
1985-86	[1]10,906
1986-87	[1]9,668

[1] Provisional.

Children (Education)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many four-year-old children in each local education authority in Scotland attend reception classes in primary schools; what percentage of the estimated four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents; and what is the average pupil-to-teacher ratio in each local education authority area for these classes, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available.

Bridges (Tolls)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to abolish tolls on the Forth road bridge and the Tay road bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs of the collection of tolls on the Tay road bridge in the years 1986 and 1987; and what were the interest charges paid in respect of the Tay road bridge during the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of tolls on the bridge is the responsibility of the Tay Road Bridge joint board. However, I understand that collection costs for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 amounted to £352,000 and £350,000 respectively. Interest charges on the loan outstanding to the Secretary of State amounted to £208,096 and £206,328 respectively.

Health Workers (Disruptive Action)

Mr. Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations in Scotland had to be cancelled as a result of the disruption by health workers on the day of action on 24 February.

Mr. Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations have been cancelled as a result of disruptive action by health workers in the current year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: 2,447.

Mr. Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effects detrimental to patients have resulted from disruptive action by health workers in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: If significant numbers of staff or staff in key areas withdraw their labour, health care is bound to be affected in a wide range of ways: for instance, inadequate levels of nursing cover in a major psychiatric hospital; geriatric and psychogeriatric patients having to be fed cold evening meals off paper plates; disruption of the normal delivery of supplies, including laundry and food, to hospitals; and long-stay patients having to use disposable paper sheets. I am informed by the health boards that on 24 February there was inadequate emergency cover for one or more services in more than 20 hospitals, as shown in the following list. Over 2,400 operations have not taken place this year because of industrial action, a needless waste of highly skilled manpower and advanced facilities. Industrial action is adversely affecting existing patients and is bound to lengthen waiting lists.

Argyll and Clyde
Vale of Leven, Hawkhead, Barshaw, Merchiston.

Fife
Lynebank, Dunfermline and West Fife, West Fife District General Hospital.

Forth Valley
Royal Scottish National Hospital.

Greater Glasgow
Knightswood, Victoria Southern General, Canniesburn, Duke Street.

Lothian
Herdmanflat, Western General, Roodlands, Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, West Lothian Unit.

Tayside
Royal Liff, Strathmartine, King's Cross, Dundee Royal Infirmary, Ninewells.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the statistics for the assisted places scheme in the 1987-88 school session in Scotland, and the income scale which will apply to the scheme in school session 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the beginning of the current school session there were 2,591 pupils receiving assistance under the assisted places scheme. Additional pupils will be admitted to assisted places throughout the 1987-88 school session and I expect that the final total will exceed that for the 1986-87 session.

The scheme continues to concentrate assistance on lower income families. In 1987-88 1,183 pupils (46 per cent. of those in the scheme) will be receiving full fee remission because they have a family income of £6,972 per annum or less. A further 223 pupils (9 per cent.) have family incomes between £6,973 and £8,000 per annum and 99 (4 per cent.) between £8,001 and £8,500.

For school session 1988-89 I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contributions for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	Parental contribution (percentage)
That part (if any) which exceeds £7,092 but does not exceed £7,711	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £7,711 but does not exceed £8,341	12
That part (if any) which exceeds £8,341 but does not exceed £9,591	15
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,591 but does not exceed £11,513	21
That part (if any) which exceeds £11,513 but does not exceed £14,023	24
That part (if any) which exceeds £14,023	33

The relevant income scale is open ended, but the remission can of course be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total local authority capital expenditure on housing from 1974, including the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, where appropriate by block allocation, at current prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table shows total expenditure at current prices on the relevant blocks from 1 April 1974 including estimated expenditure for 1987-88 and planned expenditure for 1988-89.

	£ million
HRA	4,169
Non-HRA	1,357
Other	118
Total LA expenditure	5,644

Argyll and Clyde Health Boards

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many senior officials of the Argyll and Clyde health boards have been suspended or paid off in the last six weeks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two senior officials have been suspended during the last six weeks.

Pay Beds

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by each health board, the average number of pay beds occupied by private patients daily in Scottish National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form sought is not available centrally. The figures show numbers of pay beds in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland, the number of bed days available annually and the annual number of bed days occupied by private patients. Pay beds, when not occupied by private patients, are available for use by National Health Service patients.

Health board	Number of pay beds	Available bed days	Bed days occupied by private patients

HOME DEPARTMENT

Durham Prison

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the prisoner capacity for which Durham prison was designed and (b) the number of prisoners currently held there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The certified normal accommodation for male prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Durham, is 675 and for female prisoners 39. On Friday 26 February there were 1,074 male prisoners and 36 female prisoners held there.

Fines

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of persons imprisoned for non-payment of fines in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 7.4 of the latest issue, Cm. 210, for 1986), a copy of which is in the Library. Information for 1987 will be published later in the year.

Leicester (Official's Visits)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the recent visit of his Department's officials to Leicester on 16 February, showing the number of (a) officials and (b) members of the public present at the meeting;

(2) what was the cost to public funds of the visit to Leicester of his Department's officials on 16 February.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 15 February at column 439. There were five officials at the meeting in Leicester on 16 February. A picket of the hall was organised by the Indian Workers Association and only about a dozen members of the public were present. The cost to the Department was approximately £500.

Lunar House

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the public enumerator board in the public inquiry office at Lunar house, Croydon, was made operative again after its recent period out of service.

Mr. Renton: It was restored to operation on 19 February 1988.

Custody

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the inconsistencies in the use of custody in different magistrates' courts in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The handbook for the courts, "The Sentence of the Court", gives guidance on the use of custody and aims to promote uniformity of approach. We take opportunities to stress this guidance in speeches and in discussions with magistrates. We provide the courts with information so they can compare their decisions on custody with those of other courts. Some differences in sentencing patterns are to be expected, since some courts have a higher proportion of more serious offenders.

Offenders (Electronic Tagging)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce electronic surveillance as a condition of bail, probation, parole or executive release on a trial basis in either the Greater London area or any other part of England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 9 February, at col. 140, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

Recidivism

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who were granted parole in 1985 and 1986 whose original offence involved violence, sex or robbery were reconvicted (a) during the period of their parole licence or (b) within 12 months of the expiration of that licence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1985 and 1986, 409 and 537 parolees respectively were recalled to prison for committing further offences of some kind; but it is not known how many of these had been released on parole licence following imprisonment for offences involving violence, sex or robbery.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of persons who were the subject of a prison sentence in England and Wales had re-offended within two years of the completion of the sentence, for the latest convenient period;

(2) what percentage of persons who were the subject of a period of youth custody in England and Wales had re-offended within two years of the completion of the order, for the latest convenient period.

Mr. John Patten: Reconviction rates for offenders discharged in 1983 were published in table 8 (b) of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 210), a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Police Cells

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained in police cells in England and Wales on the last day of August, September, October, November and December 1986, each month in 1987 and January 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers of prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales on the dates specified by the hon. Member were as follows:

	Number
31 August 1986	91
30 September 1986	131
31 October 1986	106
30 November 1986	219
31 December 1986	67
31 January 1987	338
28 February 1987	323
31 March 1987	380
30 April 1987	286
31 May 1987	355
30 June 1987	581
31 July 1987	753
31 August 1987	313
30 September 1987	818
31 October 1987	910
30 November 1987	912
31 December 1987	474
31 January 1988	758

Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced prisoners and (b) remand prisoners in England and Wales committed suicide whilst in custody in each year since 1974.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following figures refer to deaths in prison department custody in respect of which suicide verdicts were subsequently returned:

	Sentenced	Remand
1974	2	4
1975	6	8
1976	9	11
1977	7	4
1978	8	8
1979	12	9
1980	9	12
1981[1]	8	7
1982	8	9
1983	12	9
1984	10	13
1985[2]	7	14
1986	5	12
1987[3]	13	26

[1] Excludes one inmate who had been committed to Broadmoor and who was awaiting removal there.
[2] Excludes one inmate awaiting extradition proceedings.
[3] Excludes three inmates (two sentenced, one remand) who apparently committed suicide but whose inquests have not yet been held and one inmate held under Immigration Act powers.

Prisoners (Self-inflicted Injuries)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced prisoners and (b) remand prisoners in England and Wales inflicted a serious injury upon themselves whilst in custody in each year since 1974.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only available statistical information relates to 1976 and later years. The information, which is reproduced in the following table, does not distinguish between sentenced and unsentenced prisoners or between different types or degrees of injury.

Annual number of prisoners reported as having caused self-injury between 1 January 1976 and 31 March 1987.

Period	Number of Prisoners
1976	1,132
1977	1,077
1978	1,204
1979	1,267
1980	1,145
1981	1,166
1982	1,027
1983	1,012
1.1.84—31.3.85	1,382
1.4.85—31.3.86	1,155
1.4.86—31.3.87	1,559

Police, Prison and Probation Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons from ethnic minority groups are employed as (a) police officers, (b) prison officers and (c) probation officers in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were 1,108 police officers from the ethnic minority communities as at 31 December 1987. Because of a low response rate to ethnic monitoring surveys, I regret that accurate information on numbers in the prison service is not yet available. Nor is it available for the probation service, where manpower returns seeking this information are still being analysed.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where the prison department intends to hold 14 to 17-year-old males and 15 to 17-year-old females, who are sentenced to less than four months custody after the Criminal Justice Bill has been passed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Male offenders aged 14 to 16 sentenced to less than four months custody will in due course be accommodated separately from young adult offenders aged 17 to 20, either in separate young offenders institutions or in discrete units of them. Female offenders aged 15 to 16 may not be sentenced to custody for less than four months; those aged 17 will be held as now in female establishments with designated provision for young offenders.

Strip Searches

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners in England and Wales were strip-searched during 1986 and 1987; and on how many occasions illegal contraband or smuggled drugs were found.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not collected centrally.

Probation and Community Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of persons placed on a probation order in England and Wales during 1985 and 1986 completed their period of supervision without a further appearance before a court;

(2) what percentage of persons placed on a community service order in England and Wales during 1985 and 1986 completed their period of supervision without a further appearance before a court.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information can be found in table 7.42 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 233), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of persons who were the subject of a probation order in England and Wales had re-offended within two years of the completion of the order, for the latest convenient period;

(2) what percentage of persons who were the subject of a community service order in England and Wales had re-offended within two years of the completion of the order, for the latest convenient period.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is published in Home Office statistical bulletins issue 18/83 "Reconvictions of those given Community Service Orders" and issue 34/86 "Reconvictions of those given Probation Orders". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Probation Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra probation officer posts will be created during the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The following figures are taken from table 11.8 of the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, Vol. II (Cm. 288-II):

	1987-88 Estimated Outturn	1988-89 Plans	1989-90 Plans
Probation Officer Manpower	5,711	5,733	5,745

The creation of specific main-grade probation officer posts is a matter for individual area probation committees.

Police Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police officer posts will be created during the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the programme announced in May 1986 there would be 500 additional police officer posts available in 1988-89 for allocation to provincial forces if the specific need for them is established. Three hundred posts would be available for the Metropolitan police subject to my right hon. Friend being satisfied with the use made by that force of the increase allowed in 1986-87 and 1987-88. The programme allows for similar growth in 1989-90.

Prison Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra prison officer posts will be created during the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: 1,360 additional prison officers will be recruited in 1988-89. Decisions for 1989-90 have not yet been made.

Murder

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted of murder since 1965; how many of these have been subsequently released from prison; and how many of these have been subsequently charged with another crime.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The number of persons convicted of murder is published annually in table S2.1(A) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables Vol. 2"; the figures for 1965-86 are given in the following table. The corresponding figure for 1987 is not yet available. The readily available information on those re-convicted after release on licence relates to all offences of homicide, most of which are murder, and is published in tables 2 and 6 of Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 18/87 "Reconvictions and Recalls of Life Licensees". Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Life Sentences

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons sentenced to life imprisonment were released from prison in each of the most recent five years for which figures are available; and what was the average sentence served by all those released over that five year period.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The readily available information is as follows.

The average times served under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales by those first released on licence from life sentences in 1982, 1983 and 1984 was about ten and a half years; for those in 1985 was about ten and a quarter years and for those in 1986 was about 11 years. There are wide variations in the periods served in custody from which this average is calculated. Reasons for this may include the range of offences for which life sentences are passed and any time which may have been served in other custodial care before entering a prison department establishment which is not included in the estimate. The average figure is lower because it excludes the long periods being served by some of those given life sentences following the abolition of capital punishment in 1965, who have not yet been released. The Home Secretary has made clear that his policy, other than in exceptional circumstances, is that those found guilty of certain heinous categories of murder will serve a minimum of 20 years in custody; those who are judged to remain a danger to the public will not be released. This average excludes persons who have died in custody or been discharged for other reasons.

The corresponding numbers first released on licence from life sentences in these five years were:

Year	Number
1982	101
1983	102
1984	66
1985	61
1986	43

Further details of the lengths of the periods served before release are given in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", table 1(f) of the latest issue, for 1986 Cm. 210, a copy of which is in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Turkey

Q49. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will seek to pay an official visit to Turkey.

The Prime Minister: I hope to visit Turkey in the first half of this year.

London Docklands

Q80. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to make an official visit to the London docklands.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Brussels Council (Annexe to Presidential Notes)

Q135. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government treat annexe V of the presidential notes published after the Brussels Council meeting of 12 February, which sets out circumstances in which the budgetary restraints may be disregarded, as part of the Council agreement; if she agreed to the inclusion of this annexe; if Her Majesty's Government treat the implementation of the annexe as falling to be considered by majority vote of the Council or by unanimity; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Annex V of the note from the presidency (SN 461/1/88) was, with minor amendments, attached to the final conclusions of the European Council (SN 517/88) as annex I. It is free standing and has no effect on the arrangements for budget discipline in agriculture agreed at the Council. It refers to existing provisions in the treaty and does not confer any new powers on the Council.

Special Advisers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy towards the appointment by a Minister of a special adviser (a) who is employed by a political lobbying firm with interests in that Minister's departmental policies and decisions, (b) whose employers are currently under investigation by that Minister's Department for possible illegal conduct and (c) whose employers are paid advisers to companies whose activities are the subject of investigation by that Minister's Department in relation to possible illegal conduct; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Special advisers are civil servants, and their terms of appointment are similar to those of other civil servants: apart from certain exceptions which reflect the special nature of their role they are subject to the same rules of conduct (including paragraph 9870 of the Civil Service code which sets out general principles of conduct). They are required to avoid conflicts of interest between their business affairs and their work in a Department. It is for each Minister to ensure that the necessary steps are taken to avoid such conflicts arising.

Engagements

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having meetings with Secretary Shultz and with King Hussein later today. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

DEFENCE

YTS

93. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many places are provided currently on the YTS by Her Majesty's Forces; and how many of these are taken up.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on Thursday 18 February at column 737.

Atomic Weapons Research Establishment

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many scientific seminars and conferences within the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment have been open to scientists from universities and other such educational institutions during the last two years; and on what occasions.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our records do not show any such seminars or conferences during the last two years, though from time to time scientists from academic institutions visit AWE sites by invitation.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel from the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment have taken part in scientific seminars and conferences within United Kingdom universities and other such institutions of higher education during the last two years; and on what occasions.

Mr. Sainsbury: AWE staff participate from time to time in seminars and conferences which are relevant to their fields of expertise. Details of such participation are not, however, held centrally and could not be collected without disproportionate effort.

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to review Government policy on the withholding from pre-1973 war widows of the enhanced pension benefits paid to post-1973 war widows.

Mr. Freeman: When improvements were introduced into the armed forces occupational pension scheme in 1973 it was recognised that in view of the very great costs which would have been involved, and in accordance with normal superannuation practice, the new provisions could not be given retrospective effect. That remains the position.

Cemeteries

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give details of cemeteries by name, location and number of graves maintained in London by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission;

(2) if he will give details by graveyard location of crosses of sacrifice maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission in London;

(3) if he will give details by each London graveyard of the amount expended by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission on maintenance in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: There are 22,625 war graves in 265 cemeteries in the London area. These graves are maintained by various agencies (usually the cemetery owners) on behalf of the commission. Some maintain them free of charge; others are paid fees. It is not possible to identify the cost of maintaining London cemeteries alone; the current cost nationally is approximately £1·57 million per annum. The commission maintains 65 crosses of sacrifice in cemeteries in the London area.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the reply by the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), Official Report, 10 February, column 289, on the meeting of nuclear experts, he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting to which reference was made; and if he will arrange for a copy of the final communiqué to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The expert meeting, which was held in Brussels on 15 February, was initiated by the EC Commission for a discussion and exchange of views on the handling, reprocessing and storage of radioactive waste in member states. No conclusions were drawn and no communiqué was issued.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cyprus

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is his practice to inquire before committing public money by way of aid to Cyprus what proportion of it will be applied for the benefit of (a) Greek Cypriots and (b) Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Chris Patten: When allocating aid funds for specific purposes for Cyprus we now check whether the intended beneficiaries are from the Greek or Turkish communities.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether aid given to Cyprus by Her Majesty's Government in the last three financial years has been applied predominantly for the benefit of Greek Cypriots.

Mr. Chris Patten: Both communities have benefited, but the larger share has gone to the Greek Cypriot community.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the £222,000 proposed to be allocated to Cyprus by way of bilateral aid in 1987-88 will be applied for the benefit of Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Chris Patten: The exact proportion will not be known until the 1987-88 accounts close later this year, but it is provisionally estimated that 42 per cent. of aid funds for Cyprus will benefit Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with reference to paragraph 9 of Cm. 232, what he regards as an appropriate proportion of aid for training Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our general view is that the proportion of aid for training Turkish Cypriots should be rather less than half the total, bearing in mind the ratio of Greek to Turkish Cypriots. But this will vary from year to year, depending on the quality of the candidates coming forward and on other factors.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the savings would be if child benefit were taxed for (a) all taxpayers, (b) taxpayers on all the higher rates of tax and (c) taxpayers on the 60 per cent. rate of tax, in 1987-88 and in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue yield from taxing child benefit is estimated to be about £1,200 million in 1987-88 and 1988-89. If child benefit were taxable only for taxpayers whose marginal tax rate was higher than the basic rate, the yield would be expected to be about £150 million in 1987-88 and £170 million in 1988-89. It is tentatively estimated that the yield from taxing child benefit for top-rate taxpayers only is of the order of £20 million to £30 million in both years.

The estimates for 1988-89 assume no change to current tax rates and statutory indexation of allowances and thresholds.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to average per capita disposable income for each region in the United Kingdom after taking account of average mortgage repayments in each region.

Mr. Major: The only available regional information on average per capita disposable income after taking account of mortgage repayments is from family expenditure surveys. Data for 1985 and 1986 combined are:

	£ per person per week
North	58·77
Yorkshire and Humberside	59·44
East Midlands	63·43
East Anglia	67·77
Greater London	82·43
Rest of the South East	76·87
South West	69·63
West Midlands	59·84
North West	62·16
Wales	60·73
Scotland	62·54
Northern Ireland	52·16
United Kingdom	66·83

Data from the family expenditure survey are subject to sampling variation. Comparisons between these regional figures should also be interpreted carefully as mortgage repayments per capita vary between regions according to the proportion of mortgaged dwellings as well as with the average size of mortgages.

Departmental Spending Programmes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the relative price effect experienced for each Department's spending programme for each year since 1979, and the retail price index for each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: Since the introduction of cash planning in 1981 the Government have not compiled information on price movements systematically in the way that would be needed to calculate relative price effects for each departmental programme (or the planning total itself). Some Departments produce specific price indices for their own use. Appendix 3 to the Minutes of Evidence taken before the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee (HC 292) lists the information which is available.

The retail prices index is published each month in the Employment Gazette. However, the GDP deflator is the measure of inflation used by the Government for public expenditure comparisons. This measures the rise in general inflation across the United Kingdom economy as a whole while the RPI is a consumer price index. The latest estimates of GDP deflators for the years since 1979 are as follows:

	GDP deflators
1978-79	51·3
1979-80	59·9
1980-81	71·0
1981-82	78·0
1982-83	83·7
1983-84	87·6
1984-85	91·5
1985-86	96·9
1986-87	100·0
1987-88	104·3

Wildfowling Clubs

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the area of foreshore and intertidal land leased to wildfowling clubs; and if he will list in the Official Report the names of the clubs and the areas involved in each case.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 5 February 1988]: The Crown Estate Commissioners do not lease Crown foreshore to wildfowling clubs. In some areas, with a total linear mileage of approximately 160 miles, they have granted leases of shooting rights to the trustees of 12 clubs affiliated to the British Association of Shooting and Conservation. These leases are subject to comprehensive management plans agreed with all interested parties such as the Nature Conservancy Council, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, local authorities and adjoining landowners. Under these leases some 35 miles of foreshore are shot over. It is not normal practice for the names of these organisations to be published.

Wildfowlers

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances bona fide wildfowlers are permitted to enter on to, or participate in hunting activities on, foreshore and intertidal land in England and Wales which is held by the Crown Estate Commissioners but not leased to another party.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 5 February 1988]: Where shooting rights have not been granted over areas of foreshore in England and Wales by the Crown Estate Commissioners, they have given an authority to members of the British Association for Shooting and Conservation to be on the foreshore in question with shotguns and ammunition. This authority does not extend to the discharge of shotguns, which is, of course, subject to common law and any other legislation relevant to particular areas.

Treasure Trove

3. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his review of treasure trove procedures.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 29 February 1988]: I have now received the report of the review of ex gratia awards to finders of treasure trove. That report makes a number of recommendations for improvements to the existing arrangements for handling treasure trove. I am considering those recommendations and expect to make an announcement shortly.

Wildlife Conservation

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the area of foreshore and intertidal land leased to wildlife conservation organisations; and if he will list in the Official Report the names of the organisations and the areas involved in each case.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 5 February 1988]: Approximately 55 per cent. of the foreshore of England and Wales is part of the Crown estate. Of the remainder, the bulk of it is owned by the Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall.

The Crown Estate Commissioners lease about 280 miles of foreshore to wildlife conservation organisations. The organisations and approximate amounts are as set out:

Organisation	Foreshore mileage
National Trust	37
Nature Conservancy Council	65
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds	12
Pembrokeshire Coast National Park	159
Devon Trust for Nature Conservation	¼
Landmark Trust	¼
West Wales Naturalists Trust	3
Essex Naturalists Trust	2
Kent Trust for Nature Conservation	1

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Treaties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he now expects to publish the treaties of the European Communities, as amended by the Single European Act treaty, in the treaty series of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: We have now received from the Community Publications Office the text of the treaties of the European Communities as amended by the Single European Act. The test is being reprinted by HMSO for publication in the treaty series.

Cyprus

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with reference to paragraph 7 of Cm. 232, what proportion of the funds available for Cyprus under the FCO scholarships and awards scheme was applied in 1986-87 and will be applied in 1987-88 for the benefit of Turkish Cypriots.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1986-87 Turkish Cypriot students benefited from approximately 20 per cent. of the funds available for Cyprus under the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme and about 64 per cent. in 1987-88.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 19 November 1987, column 618, on plutonium and safeguards, he will make a further statement on the current effectiveness of safeguards accounting systems in the European Community, in the light of new information recently revealed concerning the Mol SCK/CEN nuclear centre in Belgium, the Nukem nuclear facility in the Federal Republic of Germany and the nuclear transport company Transnuklear.

Mrs. Chalker: A joint inspection by Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency into the safeguards aspects of the Mol/Transnuklear affair has produced no evidence of any failure of Euratom safeguards. We therefore have no further statement to make on our assessment of procedures for safeguarding weapons-grade nuclear material.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that recent evidence concerning the inadequacy of EURATOM's capacity to safeguard weapons grade nuclear materials in Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany are discussed at the meeting of NATO Ministers on 2 and 3 March, in the context of protection measures of NATO facilities against prospective threats from nuclear-armed terrorists.

Mrs. Chalker: A joint inspection by Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency into the safeguards aspects of the Mol/Transnuklear affair has produced no evidence of any failure of Euratom safeguards. My right hon. and learned Friend does not therefore intend to raise the subject at the NATO ministerial meeting.

Council of Ministers

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present seven meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for March.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 7 March to discuss the European Court of Auditors' annual report on the 1986 financial year; prepare for the April IMF interim committee meeting; and consider the Commission's quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community. The agenda may also include a follow-up to the European Council agreement on the future financing of the Community.

The Agriculture Council meets on 7/8 March to discuss follow-up action on agricultural stabilisers; olive oil production aid; set-aside of farmland; cessation of farming (early retirement); hormones; pesticide residues; and materials and articles in contact with food.

The Transport Council will meet on 14/15 March. Discussion will cover access to the road haulage market; increasing the road haulage permit quota; draft proposals on international bus liberalisation; vehicle taxation; the Commission's proposed amendments to social regulations (driver's hours); the width of refrigerated lorries; vehicle weights and dimensions and road haulage tariffs.

The Environment Council meets on 21 March to consider proposals for the control of emissions from large combustion plants; the control of discharges of chromium into water; the reduction of wastes from the production of titanium dioxide; the control of chloroform; emission standards for small cars; and the protection of the ozone layer from chlorofluorocarbons. The Council will also discuss a proposal for a five-year programme illustrating the favourable impact of environmental projects on unemployment.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 22 March to discuss follow-up action to the European Council conclusions on financing the Community; the 1988 guidelines for the Community's programme of aid to developing countries in Asia and Latin America; the Commission's recent sectoral negotiations with Japan; and progress made in negotiations with Hungary on a trade and co-operation agreement.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 22 March to discuss a number of measures relevant to completion of the single European market.

The second Agriculture Council this month, on 28 and 29 March, will concentrate on the 1988 price-fixing proposals.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report the total grants made under the business sponsorship incentive scheme in each financial year since its inception and the total related business sponsorship for the same years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: Grants paid and related sponsorship in each year, inclusive of administration costs, amounted to:

	£ million grants	£ million related sponsorship
1984-85	0·5	2·6
1985-86	1·3	2·7
1986-87	1·75	3·6
1987-88 (to date)	1·5	2·7

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will provide a breakdown of the total grant made under the business sponsorship incentive scheme for the most recent complete financial year in the following categories (a) drama, (b) opera, (c) dance, (d) music, (e) visual arts, (f) film and (g) museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The grant paid in 1986-87 amounted to £1·75 million. It was distributed among a wide range of art forms as follows:

Theatre	264,342
Opera	80,500
Dance	137,500
Music	371,147
Visual Arts	181,079
Film	59,334
Museums	45,733
Festivals	372,077
Other art forms and administration	238,288
Total	1,750,000

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the latest estimates of total business sponsorship of the Arts in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will give a detailed breakdown of how these estimates were made.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The latest estimates of arts sponsorship are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	20
1986-87	25

A figure for 1987-88 is not yet available but current indications are that it will be in the region of £30 million. The estimates are based on membership surveys carried out by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts and statistics from the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Percentage-for-art Legislation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has about which EEC countries have percentage-for-art legislation; and if he will introduce similar legislation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 February 1988]: I understand that there are some arrangements along these lines in France but comprehensive information is not available. I have no plans to introduce such legislation in the United Kingdom.

Museums and Galleries (Government Funding)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) if he will publish figures showing (a) central Government funding in real terms, and (b) the percentage change in central Government funding in real terms for each of the national museums and galleries for each year since 1974;

(2) if he will publish figures showing the total percentage change in Government funding in real terms for each of the national museums and galleries between 1979-80 and the most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The allocations to individual national museums and galleries may not be directly comparable from one year to the next because the system (prior to 1986-87) of re-voting excess receipts in the second financial year after they were earned, and changes in the needs and responsibilities of particular institutions, distort the figures. Also the expenditure on building and maintenance work, which will continue to be managed by the PSA as a single programme until the end of this financial year, cannot be accurately attributed to individual museums.

The aggregate cental Government funding for the national museums and galleries for which I am responsible (including the British Museum (National History) but excluding the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside which have been funded by central Government since 1986-87) in each year since 1974-75 is shown in 1974-75 prices (using the GDP deflator for this purpose).

	£'000	Percentage change
1974-75	16,457	—
1975-76	18,406	11·8
1976-77	18,488	0·4
1977-78	22,033	19·2
1978-79	26,381	19·7

	£'000	Percentage change
1979-80	24,397	−7·5
1980-81	25,490	4·5
1981-82	25,275	−0·9
1982-83	27,397	8·4
1983-84	27,198	−0·7
1984-85	28,204	3·7
1985-86	28,846	2·3
1986-87	28,040	−2·8
1987-88	29,103	3·9

The percentage change in the aggregate Government funding in real terms for the national museums and galleries from 1979-80 to 1987-88 is 19·4 per cent.

On 5 November last year I announced a cash increase of 15·9 per cent. in the provision for the national museums and galleries for the next three years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Boston Compact

92. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has on the numbers of permanent jobs obtained in the private sector by inner-city school leavers via the Boston compact; and in what ways Her Majesty's Government are assisting local United Kingdom education authorities involved in similar local compacts to obtain private sector jobs for inner-city residents.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government do not collect such statistics but reports from Boston indicate that in 1987 some 1,007 eligible students obtained employment in the 375 firms which took part in the compact.

My Department is enthusiastic in supporting LEAs which come forward with plans for introducing the compact scheme and will actively encourage both local employers and LEAs to develop such initiatives.

Teacher Training (Equipment Purchases)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to assist students on initial teacher training courses in craft, design and technology with meeting the costs of purchasing equipment needed for their courses.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As from September 1988 eligible bursary students on initial teacher training courses in craft, design and technology will receive an additional equipment allowance of £200 to help towards the cost of materials and tools needed for their course. This sum will be paid as a one-off grant to each student. I believe this will further improve the attraction of training in CDT.

Four-year-olds

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many four-year-old children in each local education authority in England attend reception classes in primary schools; what percentage of the estimated four-year-old population in each local education area this represents; and what is the average pupil-to-teacher ratio in each local education authority for these classes, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: Information on reception classes is not collected centrally.

Tertiary Colleges

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he uses in deciding whether to approve or reject local education authority proposals for the establishment of tertiary colleges; and if, in the light of proposals contained in the Education Reform Bill, he anticipates any changes in respect of those criteria.

Mr. Dunn: As explained in circular 3/87, my right hon. Friend considers any school reorganisation proposal involving the establishment of a tertiary college on its educational merits, and he will continue to do so.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local education authorities whose proposals to establish tertiary colleges since 1979 have been (a) approved, (b) rejected and (c) accepted subject to modification, and the numbers in each category, for the years 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the first two months of 1988.

Mr. Dunn: Information is available only from August 1980 when the Education Act 1980 came into force. The table shows those proposals under section 12 of that Act decided since that date which involve the establishment of one or more tertiary colleges, the LEAs concerned, and the decision made by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors. In 1985 one proposal involving the establishment of one or more tertiary colleges was approved and one was rejected; in 1986 five such proposals were approved and two were approved with modifications; and in 1987 two such proposals were approved, one was approved with modifications, four were rejected, and one was withdrawn by the LEA. No such proposals have yet been decided in 1988.

Education Reform

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are (a) the shortest, (b) the longest and (c) the average periods of time taken by his Department to reach a conclusion on proposals for reorganisation submitted by local education authorities during the last three years.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend's aim is to decide all proposals submitted to him under section 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980 as quickly as possible after the elapse of the two months allowed for the receipt of objections and the further month for the LEA to comment on these. Some proposals are decided very soon thereafter; the average time taken for decisions on all proposals is currently about seven months.

Council for Educational Technology (Amalgamation)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the proposed amalgamation of the Council for Educational Technology and the Micro-Electronics Education Support Unit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I wrote to the chairmen of these two bodies on 7 January 1988 proposing amalgamation [Official Report, 11 January 1988, column 55.] They have since written back indicating their agreement. I have accordingly notified them that the amalgamation will take effect from 1 April 1988.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consumer Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of video tape (898.31,32), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken up by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information in respect of recorded and unrecorded video tape is as follows:

Video tape	1983 £ million	1984 £ million
Output	55·9	60·7
Imports	131·3	113·3
Exports	73·2	79·3

The figures relate to establishments employing 50 or more people, and therefore figures for export and import ratios are not given as they are likely to overstate the true position.

No figures are available for other years as they would disclose information about individual firms.

Imported Furs

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce new labelling rules to discourage the trade in imported furs from animals caught in steel-jaw leg-hold traps.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department is currently consulting publicly on a proposed order under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 which would require the labelling of goods made from the fur of certain species to the effect that those species are commonly caught by means of leg-hold traps. The purpose of this measure would be to ensure that the consumer has the information necessary to make an informed choice.

Cameras

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of photographic cameras (881.11), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Photocopying Apparatus

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of photocopying apparatus (751.82,759.19), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is shown in the table.

Photocopying Apparatus

	1982 £ million	1983 £ million
Sales [1]	141	109
Imports (cif)	187	249
Exports (fob)	267	229

[1] Sales date relate primarily to units in the United Kingdom with a minimum employment of 75.

Calculating Instruments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of calculating instruments (874.21,29), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Domestic Electric Heaters

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of domestic electric heaters (775.82,89), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is as follows:

Domestic Electric Heaters

	[1]Sales £ million	Imports (cif) £ million	Exports (fob) £ million

1986	147	16	27

[1] Sales data relate primarily to units in the United Kingdom with a minimum employment of 25 up to 1980 and of 100 thereafter.

Vacuum Cleaners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of vacuum cleaners, domestic, (775.71), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information can be found in the fourth quarter issue of each year of Business Monitors PQ 3460, "Domestic electrical appliances" (previously PQ 368 "Electrical appliances primarily for domestic use"). These publications are available from the Library of the House.

Dishwashing Machines

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of dishwashing machines (745.22,23,7753), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Video Cassette Players

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of video cassette players (763.81), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Record Players

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of record players and decks (761.2,763.18), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is shown in the table.

1982	69	22	34

[1] Sales data relate primarily to units in the United Kingdom with a minimum employment of 50.

Tape Recorders

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of tape recorders (778.86), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Cassette Decks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of cassette decks (763.88), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Theatrical Producers

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which self-regulatory organisation theatrical producers are supposed to register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Theatrical producers will only need to be authorised if they are carrying on investment business as defined in the Act. Schemes for pooled investment in theatrical productions fall within the definition of collective investment schemes, and authorisation is required by persons operating or establishing them or winding them up. Any person may apply to any of the recognised self-regulating organisations whose scope rules cover the relevant investment activities or for direct authorisation by the Securities and Investments Board. If the main investment business is the management of investors' funds they may well find that the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation is the most appropriate organisation.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the increase in the productivity of the British Steel Corporation since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The figures for BSC in respect of European Coal and Steel Community treaty activities are as follows:

Man hours per tonne liquid steel

Year
1979-80	13·2
1980-81	14·5
1981-82	9·4
1982-83	9·3
1983-84	7·1
1984-85	7·0
1985-86	6·3
1986-87	6·2
1987-88	n/a

Source: British Steel Report and Accounts 1986-87.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the future of British Steel's pension scheme.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a number of representations from individual pensioners and employees of BSC seeking clarification of the position after privatisation. Both the Government and the corporation are well aware of the concern of those affected by this issue and we hope it will be possible to clarify the position shortly. It has, of course, been the experience of previous privatisations that satisfactory arrangements have been made on this point.

Regional Offices

Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his Department's plans for the network of regional offices.

Mr. Atkins: The White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" (Cm. 278) announced that the Department's presence in the regions is being strengthened and extended. In addition to the seven main regional offices, we plan three major new sub-offices in the south-east and a network of over 20 other offices at which business men can make contact with the Department.

Cloth and Yarn (Dyeing)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to end the provision whereby imported cloth and yarn dyed in Britain qualifies as originating in Britain.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. The European Community's non-preferential origin rules at present allow the dyeing and finishing of cloth as an origin-conferring process. Following consultation with the United Kingdom industry, my Department will not be objecting to the retention of the existing rule during current negotiations in Brussels.

Mr. Peter Luff

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what steps the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry took to satisfy himself before the appointment of Mr. Peter Luff as his special adviser that Mr. Luff had no interests or associations incompatible with his role as a special adviser; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will dismiss Mr. Peter Luff from his post as special adviser in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Secretary of State sees no grounds for considering his dismissal. Under the terms of his appointment, he is, amongst other things, required to comply with the general principles of conduct of civil servants, the rules relating to outside activities and the use of official information or experience.

Animal Furs (Advertising)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will consider outlawing the advertising of animal furs.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no plans to do so. My Department is, however, consulting publicly on a proposed order under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, to require goods made from the fur of certain species to be labelled to the effect that the animals are commonly caught by means of the leg-hold trap. Under this proposal, advertisements would also be required to contain this information where the prospective purchaser could buy the fur without prior inspection.

Domestic Upholstered Furniture

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to the statement on 11 January by the Minister for Corporate ahd Consumer Affairs, he will now make a statement on the draft regulations for flammability of domestic upholstered furniture.

Mr. Butcher: The Draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations are being made available today. These, together with a consultation letter inviting comments on the detailed proposals, are being sent to a wide variety of interested organisations. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries and the Vote Office.

Lloyd's

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement of the manner in which the Council of Lloyd's proposes to implement recommendation 70 of the Neill committee of inquiry into regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's.

Mr. Maude: Yes. I have discussed this with the chairman of Lloyd's. It was the nominated members' proposal that the annual report on the progress of regulation should be adopted by the whole council. He has also assured me that should the nominated members wish to express any reservation that would also be recorded in the Lloyd's annual report and accounts.

Collective Investment

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he proposes to transfer functions under the Financial Services Act 1986 in respect of collective investment schemes to the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry considered carefully the draft regulations and other material sent to him by the Securities and Investments Board in the light of the reports he has received from the Director General of Fair Trading and also of the other representations which have been made to him. He is satisfied that the various conditions laid down under the Financial Services Act for a transfer of functions to the board are fulfilled. I accordingly laid before the House on 24 February a draft order under section 114 of the Act transferring certain functions to the board. The functions in question include most of the transferable functions in relation to collective investment schemes in the Act.

Belgian Carpet and Polypropylene Yarn (Aid)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has yet received confirmation of the repayment of aid by a Belgian carpet and polypropylene yarn manufacturer ordered in 1987 by the European Commission.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The recovery of this aid is the responsibility of the European Commission, which has assured us that the repayment will be made.

Inner Cities

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what meetings he has sought with representatives of local authorities prior to publishing his White Paper on the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 29 February 1988]: I have many meetings with representatives of local authorities and others to discuss the contribution which they can make to encouraging inner city regeneration.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future role his Department envisages for local authorities in the regeneration of inner city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Local authorities can play an important role in creating the right conditions for business growth and individual enterprise. For further reading I commend the paper, "The Local Right—Enabling not Providing," by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, published on 29 February by the Centre for Policy Studies (Policy Study No. 92).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rural Development

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his strategy for rural development in Northern Ireland; if he will establish a rural development agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The social and economic problems of rural areas in Northern Ireland are fully considered in the annual public expenditure survey process. The continued operation of existing administrative and financial arrangements, including assistance available from the European Community, provides the appropriate means for dealing with rural development in Northern Ireland. I have no plans for the establishment of a rural development agency.

Tonsillectomy Operations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the waiting time for tonsillectomy operations in each of the four health board areas in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to identify tonsillectomy as a separate treatment within waiting list information. Patients waiting for this operation are included in ENT waiting lists.

The table shows, for each health and social services board, the numbers of in-patients on ENT waiting lists by time spent on lists, at 30 September 1987. These figures are provisional.

Stalker Inquiry

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library the original terms of reference for the Stalker inquiry into the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its alleged shoot-to-kill policy.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 25 February 1988]: As is usual practice with police reports covering criminal investigations, neither the report by Mr. John Stalker nor the report by Mr. Colin Sampson will be published. Accordingly, I do not intend to place a copy of the terms of reference for the Stalker inquiry in the Library of the House.

Salmonid Waters

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the rivers and streams in Northern Ireland which have been designated as salmonid waters under European Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The table lists those waters which have been designated as salmonid waters under European Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any knowledge of leakage from council dumps in Northern Ireland polluting salmonid waters in Northern Ireland in the last five years; and if he will give details of any such incidents.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The information requested is not collected centrally and could only be assembled at disproportionate cost. Information on the main polluting discharges is however being compiled and I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

The following non-tidal waters are designated within Northern Ireland under the terms of the (EEC) directive on the quality of freshwaters needing protection or improvement in order to support fish life (78/659/EEC)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he knows of any reason why the Ardilea river, County Down, should not be designated a salmonoid water under European Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: I am not aware of any reason why the Ardilea river should not be designated as a salmonoid water under European Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any proposal to designate the Ardilea river, County Down, as salmonid water under European Economic Community directive 78/759/EEC.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: There are no proposals at present to designate the Ardilea river as a salmonid water under European Economic Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete the process of monitoring rivers and streams in Northern Ireland to decide whether they reach the standards set down for salmonid waters in European Community directive 78/659/EEC.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: A total of 1,062 km of the main salmonid waters have already been designated and are monitored to ensure that the requirements of European Community directive 78/659/EEC are met. It is the Department's intention to extend designations as resources permit, but, with other priorities, I am unable to give firm dates for completion.

Water Quality

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, when planning permission is sought for any development which might lead to the pollution of any lake, river, stream or reservoir in Northern Ireland, the quality of such water is assessed before the development takes place; whether the maintenance of water quality is taken into account in deciding whether planning permission is granted; and whether procedures differ in respect of water which does not before development meet the standards laid down in European directive 78/659/EEC and waters which do.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 February 1988]: Any development from which a discharge to a waterway may contain polluting materials requires a consent under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and the conditions attached to such consent are designed to ensure that the discharges will not cause pollution. The conditions attached to discharges to salmonid waters are designed to ensure that the standards of these waters, which are regularly monitored, will continue to comply with the standards laid down in European directive 78/659/EEC.

Ports

Mr. William Ross: to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) the imports and (b) the exports from each port in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 26 February 1988]: Figures for Northern Ireland imports and exports are not separately identified in United Kingdom trade statistics. However figures for the total traffic of goods through Northern Ireland ports which includes imports and exports are available. These are as follows:

Note:

(i) The tables give tonnages of goods through the ports and exclude weights of containers and weights of materials shipped for dumping at sea.

(ii) Inward Traffic refers to all goods taken into Northern Ireland from Great Britain and elsewhere through the Northern Ireland ports. Northern Ireland is not necessarily the ultimate destination for these goods. Similarly Outward Traffic covers all goods taken out through the Northern Ireland ports, destined for Great Britain or for foreign countries. The origin of the goods is not necessarily in Northern Ireland.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

12. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which travel-to-work areas had the highest level of unemployment in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland at the latest available date; and what was the percentage unemployed in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: The travel-to-work areas with the highest rates of unemployed claimants in England, Wales and Scotland at 14 January 1988 were Newquay, south Pembrokeshire and Cumnock and Sanquhar. The numbers of unemployed claimants in these travel-to-work areas expressed as a percentage of the number of employees in employment plus the employed were 26·7, 25·1 and 28·9 per cent. respectively.

16. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people leaving school at 16 years found jobs in 1983 and in the most recently available year.

Mr. Nicholls: Thirty per cent. of those young people aged 16 on 1 September 1984, who had left school between September 1984 and February 1986, went directly into full-time employment. A further 41 per cent. went into YTS, which has become the major route into work for school leavers and offers high-quality training. This information, drawn from England and Wales youth cohort study, is not available for earlier years.

29. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for those people registered as unemployed in the constituency of Basildon and for the same period in each of the past four years.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon in January of each year since 1984. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

January
1984	6,834
1985	7,273
1986	6,793
1987	6,437
1988	4,726

38. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in unemployment for the Sheffield travel-to-work area over the past 12 months, and what has been the comparable position for Yorkshire and Humberside as a whole.

Mr. Lee: On 14 January 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area was 40,539, a fall of 14·6 per cent., since January 1987. The comparable figure for the Yorkshire and Humberside region as a whole was 266,031, a fall of 15·9 per cent.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent unemployment figures.

68. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: The seasonally adjusted level of adult unemployment fell by 50,800 between December and January, to 2,563,100, the lowest figure on a consistent basis since April 1982. The figure has now fallen by 647,000 since July 1986, the largest sustained fall on record.

44. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the levels of unemployment and advertised jobs vacancies in Wyre Forest in 1986 and 1987; and what plans he has to improve training links between education institutions and industry in the area.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the annual average number of unemployed claimants in the Wyre Forest local authority area and the annual average number of unfilled vacancies (excluding community programme vacancies) at jobcentres[1] which cover an area most closely corresponding to the Wyre Forest local authority area for 1986 and 1987. Total numbers of advertised job vacancies are not available, but it is estimated that nationally about one third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

The Government support collaboration between education institutions and employers in developing training to meet local needs. The MSC is, for example, providing funding for such a local collaborative project in Kidderminster which is addressing the training implications of new technology in the carpet industry.

43. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres in the north-west region was 20,167. This represents an increase of 2 per cent. since January 1987.

47. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in Yorkshire.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres in south Yorkshire, north Yorkshire and west Yorkshire was 12,185. This represents an increase of 12.5 per cent. since 1987.

52. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were out of work in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency at the most recent count; and what the figure was two years ago.

Mr. Lee: On 14 January 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency was 2,798. The corresponding figure for January 1986 was 3,768. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

58. Mrs. Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in the northern region of England.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies in the community programme, registered at jobcentres in the northern region was 10,180. This represents a decrease of 1·2 per cent. since January 1987.

61. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were in full-time employment in Britain in May 1979; and how many people are in full-time employment today.

Mr. Lee: In June 1979 (there are no estimates for May) there were 19,950,000 full-time people in the employed labour force in Great Britain. In September 1978, the latest date for which figures are available the figure was 18,765,000. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and HM forces.

66. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently in full-time and part-time employment.

Mr. Lee: In September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available there were 18,765,000 full-time and 5,741,000 part-time people in the employed labour force in Great Britain. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and HM forces.

71. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the figures for registered unemployed persons in all the Greater London travel-to-work areas for (a) the latest available date and (b) the end of December 1987, 1986 and 1985, in actual figures and as percentages.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of unemployed claimants in absolute terms and as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed in the Greater London travel-to-work areas at the latest available date, 14 January 1988, and the closest date to the end of December of each of the years requested are as follows:

	London TTWA		Heathrow TTWA
	Unemployed claimants	Per cent.	Unemployed claimants	Per cent.
14 January 1988	302,073	8·7	37,123	5·5
8 January 1987	369,066	10·6	49,463	7·3
9 January 1986	382,156	10·9	52,676	7·7

The comparison is affected by changes in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

74. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the fall in unemployment over the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: On 14 January 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, was 2,563,100, a fall of 549,100 over the last 12 months.

77. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in England and Wales.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres in England and Wales was 206,360. This represents an increase of 20 per cent. since January 1987.

79. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of young people aged between 18 and 24 years currently in employment and in January 1987.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the age composition of the employed labour force are available only for June of each year. In June 1987, the estimated number of those in the employed labour force aged 18 to 24 years inclusive in Great Britain was 4,455,000 compared with 4,299,000 in June 1986.

82. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in the south-west of England.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres in the south-west region was 16,544. This represents an increase of 13·8 per cent. since January 1987.

87. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the changes in unemployment in the Yorkshire region since 1983.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in January of each year since 1983 on a consistent basis were as follows:

	Number
January 1983	258,700
January 1984	267,500
January 1985	283,600
January 1986	298,200
January 1987	295,300
January 1988	248,700

88. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres in East Anglia.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres in the East Anglia region was 7,813. This represents an increase of 32·1 per cent. since January 1987.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in unemployment for the Castleford travel-to-work area over the last 12 months; and what has been the comparable change for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 14 January 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the Castleford and Pontefract travel-to-work area was 8,071, a fall of 11·5 per cent., since January 1987. The comparable figure for the Yorkshire and Humberside region as a whole was 266,031, a fall of 15·9 per cent.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for those people registered as unemployed in the constituency of Pontefract and Castleford and for the same date in each of the last four years.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Pontefract and Castleford in January of each year since 1984. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Number
January 1984	5,487
January 1985	5,683
January 1986	6,236
January 1987	6,222
January 1988	5,508

"Training for Employment"

17. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from voluntary organisations concerning the White Paper "Training for Employment".

Mr. Chope: None.

Uniform Business Rate

18. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from small business organisations concerning the proposed uniform business rate.

Mr. Cope: I have received several representations from small firms organisations about the proposed national non-domestic rate. I have also received representations from small businesses about excessive rates burdens.

Job Seekers

19. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new initiatives are planned to assist job seekers to obtain employment in areas of high housing costs.

Mr. Lee: My Department is co-operating closely with the Housing Corporation in its planned development of the job movers scheme which has recently been introduced under the auspices of the Department of the Environment.

Skill Shortages

20. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss skill shortages in British industry.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to discuss issues including skills demand and supply with fellow members of the National Economic Development Council, including the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, at the next meeting in April.

59. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which measures the Training Commission is undertaking to clearly identify skill shortages in London and to ensure that the training programmes of the new adult training organisations address those areas of skill mismatch.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission gathers information on skills demand and supply from a wide range of sources, including its computer-aided local labour market information system, in-depth studies of industries and occupations, surveys of vacancies at jobcentres and from other external sources.

The White Paper "Training for Employment" emphasises the importance of longer-term unemployed people acquiring skills in demand in local labour markets. The new training programme for unemployed adults will, therefore, be locally planned and delivered both in London and elsewhere and will take account of local labour market conditions including evidence of skill needs.

67. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the engineering industry.

Mr. Cope: The strength of our economy means that some employers, including some engineering employers, are finding it more difficult to meet some of their skill needs through recruitment. But employers can influence the supply of skills they need by providing the proper incentives for individuals to acquire the right skills and experience and by making the necessary investment in training.

The Government have given a lead by more than doubling their own investment in vocational education and training since 1979. Especially through two-year YTS for school leavers and now, the new £1·4 billion training programme to provide unemployed adults with the skills which today's jobs demand. The Manpower Services Commission also has programmes to encourage employers to recognise and meet their own training needs. Under the engineering science and technology initiative more resources have also been made available to increase relevant higher education opportunities.

78. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the electronics industry.

Mr. Cope: The strength of our economy means that some employers are finding it more difficult to meet some of their skill needs through recruitment. But employers can influence the supply of skills they need by providing the proper incentives for individuals to acquire the right skills and experience and by making the necessary investment in training.

The Government have given a lead by more than doubling its own investment in vocational education and training since 1979. Especially through two-year YTS for school leavers and now, the new £1·4 billion training programme to provide unemployed adults with the skills which today's jobs demand. The Manpower Services Commission also has programmes to encourage employers to recognise and meet their own training needs and make the necessary provision.

Under the engineering science and technology initiative, more resources have also been made available to increase relevant higher education opportunities.

Unemployment (Inner Cities)

21. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his Department is doing to obtain permanent jobs in the private sector for inner city unemployed persons, particularly the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission provide a wide range of national programmes which aim to equip individuals with the skills and motivation to compete for available jobs. The new training programme for unemployed adults which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 February is designed to help long-term unemployed people gain the skills they need to enter the labour market. This will be of particular help to unemployed inner city residents and is being established with inner city needs in mind.

Tourism (Inner Cities)

22. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to encourage tourism in the inner cities.

Mr. Lee: Inner city tourism will continue to benefit from the English tourist board's section 4 financial assistance, its tourism development action programmes, and other strategic development initiatives. The ETB is participating in the "Great English City Breaks" campaign to promote weekend breaks to the 14 cities currently involved. The British Tourist Authority is also involved in a number of joint marketing schemes to attract foreign tourism to inner cities.

Manufacturing (North-West Region)

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in manufacturing jobs in the north-west region from May 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Figures for May 1979 are not available. Between June 1979 and December 1987, the number of employees in employment in manufacturing industry in the north-west region fell by 363,000. However, over the past four years the decline in manufacturing employment in that region has been more than offset by rises in employment in services and self-employment.

Industrial Training

24. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss training quality in British industry.

69. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss skill shortages in British industry.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State often meets the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss a wide range of issues connected with training, and will continue to do so.

YTS

25. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of YTS.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of January 1988 some 413,000 young people were receiving high-quality training on YTS. Of those young people who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and 1987, 74 per cent. went into work or further education and training. This is welcome and shows that YTS is now firmly established as a standard method of recruitment and training for many employers.

81. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds are currently undertaking training on the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There were some 413,000 young people on YTS at the end of January 1988. Of these, 238,000 were 16-year-old school leavers in the first year of a two-year training programme, 151,000 were 16-year-old school leavers in the second year and 24,000 were 17-year-old school leavers on a one-year training programme. The large number of young people now well into their second year of training in the new two-year programme shows significant progress towards ensuring that all young people under 18 years of age obtain qualifications relevant to work.

83. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to raise standards of training at the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: From April, all YTS providers will have to meet the high standards required of approved training organisations. The Manpower Services Commission has published its priorities for quality development in YTS and is working with these approved organisations to raise standards still further. Meanwhile the Training Standards Advisory Service has begun its programme of carrying out full inspections of all YTS schemes on the ground. A further assurance of quality is the commitment to have vocational qualifications approved by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in all YTS schemes.

Local Employer Networks

26. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of local employer networks.

Mr. Cope: The response from employers, employers organisations and others to this important initiative continues to be encouraging. Contracts have been exchanged for 85 networks and a further 40 are expected to be in place by the end of September.

Government Training Schemes

27. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are on Government training schemes in Sunderland.

Mr. Cope: At 31 January 1988, there were 3,184 young people in training on YTS in Sunderland.

Tourist Grants

28. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the amount of money which will be made available for section 4 tourist grants in England in 1988-89.

Mr. Lee: The total which will be made available to the English tourist board for payments under the section 4 scheme in 1988-89 is £13.2 million. A rise of 10 per cent. over 1987-88.

Adult Training

30. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Training Commission to discuss adult training.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State often meets the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss training issues including adult training and will continue to do so.

Tourism (Employment)

31. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to encourage the tourism and hotel industries to promote career opportunities for young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I am constantly encouraging the tourism and hospitality industries to promote the excellent and varied career opportunities that they can offer to young people. I am particularly gratified to see the wide range of careers material now being produced by the industry itself.

46. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in the tourism sector in the Yorkshire and Humberside region during the past five years.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the number of new jobs created are not available. However, there has been a net increase of 32,000 employees in employment in the hotel and catering industry in the Yorkshire and Humberside region over the period June 1982 to June 1987. This figure does not include the self-employed, for whom a comparable estimate is not available.

Hotels

32. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of new hotels currently under construction in England.

Mr. Lee: The latest English tourist board survey of investment in major tourist projects shows that in December 1987, a total of 37 new hotels were under construction in England.

Job Clubs

33. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have found work through job clubs in the north-east over the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: Between November 1984, when the first job club opened, and December 1987, a total of 4,412 people had found work through job clubs in the north-east. A further 1,345 took up a place on the community programme, a training scheme or the enterprise allowance scheme.

37. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of job clubs in placing people in jobs.

Mr. Lee: The aim of the job club service is to help long-term unemployed people to help themselves find a job. From April 1987 to December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, 74,653 people passed through job clubs of which 40,685—54 per cent.—found jobs. A further 10,249—14 per cent.—gained a place on the community programme, entered training or took up the enterprise allowance scheme.

Ministerial Visit (Sweden)

34. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his visit to Sweden.

Mr. Fowler: I visited Sweden from 22 to 24 November last year, at the invitation of the Swedish Government, in order to study employment and training policies and programmes in that country. During my visit I met representatives of the Swedish Government and industry with responsibilities in these areas. I was also able to see, at first hand, something of the operation of policy both at Government training and employment centres and within private industry.

Industrial Apprenticeships

35. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has introduced to encourage the creation of apprenticeships in industry.

Mr. Cope: It is for employers in the first instance to ensure the apprenticeship training that their industry needs. The Government encourage them to adopt cost-effective practices such as training to standards instead of wasteful time-serving. They also make a substantial contribution to support apprenticeship training by way of YTS. Through the scheme, the Government have made available more money than ever before for the training of young people—£1,036 million in 1987-88.

The extension of YTS to a two-year scheme has increased opportunities for all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers to benefit from the structured programme of training and work experience previously available only to those undertaking the limited number of apprenticeships then available.

Self-employment

36. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cope: There were 2·9 million self-employed people in the United Kingdom in June 1987. This represents an increase of 1 million on the number of self-employed in June 1979, with an increase of 234,000 between 1986 and 1987 alone.

Approximately one in nine of the employed labour force is now self-employed. This increase is indicative of the success of the measures we have introduced to encourage and support self-employment.

57. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received about the effect of Government policies on the self-employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I receive many representations on this subject both from organisations and individuals. The rise in the number of self-employed from 1·9 million in June 1979 to 2·9 million in June 1987 is evidence that the measures we have introduced since 1979 have been effective in encouraging individuals to set up their own businesses and to contribute to the economic revival of the United Kingdom.

"Training for Employment"

39. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations his Department has received on the proposals contained in the White Paper "Training for Employment".

54. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding his White Paper "Training for Employment".

Mr. Cope: The White Paper sets out the Government's plans for securing continuing reductions in unemployment and for sustaining jobs growth. It calls upon employers, individuals and trade unions to play their part, in particular to equip longer-term unemployed people for the jobs which the economy is generating. We believe that the soundness of the approach set out in the White Paper is widely recognised. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has as yet received no representations about the Government's plans.

Strikes

40. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost through strikes in 1987 and 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in 1987 is provisionally estimated as 3,476,000. This compares with 9,405,000 working days lost in 1978.

55. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of work days lost due to strikes in December 1987 and December 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in December 1987 is provisionally estimated as 38,000. This compares with 542,000 working days lost in December 1978.

Training

42. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to reduce the number of young people entering work at 16 years without training.

Mr. Cope: The Government will continue to underline the value, to employers and young people alike, of quality training for young recruits. We have asked the Manpower Services Commission to ensure that YTS continues to develop both in quantity and quality so that it becomes the normal route for 16 and 17-year-old school leavers from school to employment. The national expansion of the technical and vocational educational initiative (TVEI) will increase the opportunities to gain vocational skills and qualifications for all those at school from the age of 14-18 years.

63. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of gross domestic product expended on training for the employed in 1979 and in the last available year.

Mr. Cope: I regret that this information is not available. Estimates of the costs of employers' training activities will be available in 1988 as part of the study of the funding of vocational education and training currently being undertaken by the Manpower Services Commission.

73. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to make it a duty on all employers to provide training for all employees between 16 and 18 years of age.

Mr. Cope: No. The objective of improving the quality and quantity of the training given to young people is more effectively pursued through practical, voluntary measures such as YTS, which offers young people a structured programme of quality training and work experience and is the main route into employment for the under-18 age group.

75. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to increase the numbers of employees receiving regular training and retraining.

Mr. Cope: The number of employees receiving training continues to increase according to the labour force survey. Preliminary estimates show that in spring 1987, a total of 2,381,000 employees of working age received training in the last four weeks compared with 1,806,000 in 1984—an increase of over 30 per cent.

The Manpower Services Commission will continue to develop its policies to encourage employers to train adequately to meet skill needs. These include the development of a framework for training qualifications; the encouragement of industrywide training arrangements where appropriate; support for local collaboration between firms and training providers; the provision of training information and advice; special support for small firms.

The Manpower Services Commission is also developing a strategy to build employer commitment to training by demonstrating the contribution of training to firms' performance.

91. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the gross domestic product was expended on training for the unemployed in 1979 and in the last available year.

Mr. Cope: The inforation is not available in the form requested because some training schemes are available to both employed and unemployed people. However, the total expenditure on training programmes through the Manpower Services in 1978-79 was £380 million and in 1986-87 was £1,400 million. This represents 0·22 per cent. and 0·36 per cent. of gross domestic product respectively.

84. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lothian secured full-time employment during 1987 as a result of Manpower Services Commission training schemes; and if he will express this number as a percentage of the total unemployment in Lothian.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available in the form requested. In Lothian and Borders regions for the period April 1986 to August 1987—the latest period for which information is available — 6,090 people left YTS. Of the 3,426 who responded to the survey of leavers, 1,884 were in full-time employment three months after leaving YTS. Of the 836 people who completed old job training scheme courses in the period September 1986 to August 1987, a total of 515 responded to the survey and of those 288 were in full or part-time employment three months after leaving old JTS. Figures are not available in respect of other training schemes. As trainees are not unemployed claimants, it would not be appropriate to express the result as a percentage of the total unemployed.

Tourism

45. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the English tourist board to discuss propdsals to increase overseas visitors to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I hope to meet the chairman of the English tourist board in the near future to discuss various matters concerning the promotion of tourism in this country.

48. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the implications for the tourist industry of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Lee: I have received representations on this subject from a number of organisations representing firms in the industry, and also from individual operators.

50. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many section 4 tourist grants were made by the English tourist board in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the financial year 1986-87, a total of 630 project applications were approved by the English tourist board. The total of section 4 assistance offered was £13·95 million. Between April 1987 and February 1988, a total of 561 project applications have been approved, with assistance offered totalling £14·12 million.

85. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas tourists visited Britain in 1987; and what proportion visited areas of the country outside metropolitan London.

Mr. Lee: Figures for the number of overseas tourists are not yet available for the whole of 1987. However, in the first 11 months of 1987 there were 14·9 million visits to the United Kingdom by overseas residents, some 14 per cent. more than in the same period of 1986. It is not possible to say what proportion of these visited areas outside London but 57 per cent. of visits to the United Kingdom in 1986 included at least one night spent outside London.

Industrial Relations

49. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service to discuss industrial relations in England and Wales.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers from this Department meet the chairman of ACAS from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Skill Shortages (Computer Services)

51. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the computer services sector.

Mr. Cope: The strength of our economy means that some employers are finding it more difficult to meet some of their skill needs through recruitment. But employers can influence the supply of skills they need by providing the proper incentives for individuals to acquire the right skills and experience and by making the necessary investment in training. The Government have given a lead by more than doubling their own investment in vocational education and training since 1979, especially through two-year YTS for school leavers and now, the new £1·4 billion training programme to provide unemployed adults with the skills that today's jobs demand. The Manpower Services Commission also has programmes to encourage employers to recognise and meet their own training needs. Under the engineering science and technology initiative, more resources have also been made available to increase relevant higher education opportunities.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

53. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many small businesses obtained loans with assistance from the loan guarantee scheme in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In the financial year May 1986 to April 1987, a total of 1,050 loans to a value of £40·37 million were made to small businesses under the loan guarantee scheme. In the period from April 1987 to the end of January 1988, a total of 938 loans had been issued to a value of £37·32 million. In January this year simplified administrative procedures for loans up to £15,000 were introduced and are expected to result in a further increase in the use of the scheme.

Injuries at Work

56. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest available number of injuries at work; and what figure was in 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is as follows:

Reported occupational injuries to employees and self-employed persons in Great Britain

	[1]1979	[2]1986-7p
number of reported deaths	615	405

Employment Bill

60. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the implementation of the proposals contained in the Employment Bill.

Mr. Cope: My hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have met representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the proposals in the Employment Bill on several occasions. The most recent meeting was yesterday. We have no current plans to meet the general secretary to discuss implementation of the Bill.

New Businesses

62. Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of new businesses assisted by enterprise agencies in 1987.

Mr. Cope: Local enterprise agencies are independent organisations accountable to their own boards and sponsors. This Department does not have comprehensive information on the number of new businesses they assist. Business in the Community's most recent survey of agencies, undertaken in spring 1986, showed that 118 agencies responding to a question on business start-ups claimed to have helped create more than 10,000 new businesses.

Restart

64. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 542, he will explain why some 12 per cent. of people interviewed on the Government's restart programme were not offered positive help in finding a job; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The circumstances of some people interviewed under restart are such that an offer of help is inappropriate. They include those already on programmes such as job club as well as those who, for a variety of reasons, are about to cease claiming unemployment benefits.

76. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest number of people obtaining full-time work after participating in the Government's restart scheme.

Mr. Lee: The aim of the restart programme is to help unemployed people into employment by selecting the best way open to them from a wide range of employment, training and job search opportunities available. It is not possible to say how many of those people selected for interview under restart ultimately obtain full-time work, since we do not follow up every participant.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

65. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982 more than 320,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. A total of 102,500 places are available this year. Although this figure is likely to be exceeded, a total of 110,000 places will be available next year.

Enterprise Agencies

70. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further plans he has for encouraging enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: The Government remain firmly committed to the encouragement of local enterprise agencies (LEAs). In the long term, the future of LEAs, which are essentially autonomous private sector-led organisations, must rest primarily with their boards and private sector supporters. This Department, through its local enterprise agency grant scheme is continuing to encourage the development in England of a network of viable, private sector-led LEAs capable of surviving without specific Government funding beyond the scheme's five-year duration. The Government also support training for LEA staff and promote broader awareness of LEAs through its grant to Business in the Community.

Small Firms (Government Contracts)

72. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being introduced to assist and to encourage small firms in obtaining contracts from Government Departments.

Mr. Cope: We are making considerable efforts to assist and to encourage small firms to obtain Government contracts, primarily by improving the quality of information made available to them. We publish a booklet, "Tendering for Government Contracts", which gives guidance on what Government Departments seek to buy and the names and addresses of the relevant contacts. This information is also available on Prestel. Departments, including the Ministry of Defence and this Department, also publish booklets providing more specific information on the purchasing opportunities within their Departments.

Government tendering and approval procedures have been greatly simplified and contracts under £10,000 are now exempt from normal approval procedures. Government Departments are also under instruction to pay their invoices promptly.

Further assistance and information is available from the Department's small firms service which can be contacted by dialling the telephone operator and asking for Freefone Enterprise.

Blackfriars Consultants Ltd. (Employment Proposals)

80. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what study his Department has made of proposals by Blackfriars Consultants Ltd., to reduce unemployment; a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department has received no specific proposals from Blackfriars Consultants Ltd.

Unions (Postal Ballots)

86. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about clause 13 of the Employment Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In addition to comments on the proposals contained in chapter 5 of the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members", my Department continues to receive letters and requests for meetings about the provision requiring postal voting for union election ballots and political fund ballots.

International Labour Statistics

89. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the most recent percentage unemployment figure for (a) the European Economic Community, (b) the European Free Trade Association group of nations, (c) the United States of America and (d) Japan.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is given in the table. The figures are not directly comparable because of national differences in definitions and methods of compiling the statistics. In particular, the figures for the USA and Japan are based on surveys rather than registrations at Government offices.

Workfare

90. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to set up a pilot workfare scheme.

Mr. Cope: We have no plans to set up a pilot workfare scheme.

Pay Slips

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce measures to require employers to issue pay slips and detailed information about taxation paid to the Inland Revenue to all employees promptly.

Mr. Nicholls: Under sections 8 to 11 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 most employees already have the right to receive from employers a detailed written pay statement containing this information at or before the time of payment.

Careers Services

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what extra assistance he plans to make available to local authorities to enable their careers services to provide extra help to young people arising from the proposed withdrawal of income support from young people under 18 years.

Mr. Cope: 1,063 posts are currently funded in local authority careers services under this Department's direct grant strengthening scheme. In 1988-89, as foreshadowed in the public expenditure White Paper, an extra 72 posts, directly funded by this Department will be targeted on those local authorities where our present level of support insufficiently recognises the difficulties faced by young people in the labour market.

Small Businesses

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he has taken to ascertain the level of interference with the success of small businesses caused by paperwork and legal restrictions in providing employees with a note on disciplinary and grievance procedures;

(2) if he has any statistical evidence to support the Government's view that provision of a note on disciplinary and grievance procedures imposes a burden on small businesses.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 February 1988]: There is evidence from a number of surveys that some employers are reluctant to recruit additional staff because of the employment protection legislation.

WALES

Speech Therapy (Children)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the availability of speech therapy provision for children in (a) Clwyd and (b) the other counties in the Principality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The level of provision of speech therapy for children is a matter for the district health authorities to decide in the light of competing priorities. The number of speech therapists in Clwyd has almost doubled from 12 to 23 between 1979 and 1987 and the numbers in Wales increased similarly during the same period from 64 to 130. In addition, the Department has recently agreed to fund a further two speech therapist posts in Clwyd under the mental health development scheme.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many three and four-year-old children in each local education authority area in Wales are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time nursery education in private nursery schools; and what percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Morriston Hospital (Burns Unit)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the burns unit to be established at Morriston hospital.

Mr. Grist: Subject to satisfactory progress in planning by the managing health authority, West Glamorgan health authority, and subsequently in construction, I expect the unit to be completed in 1992.

Rural Areas (Assistance)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of all central Government assistance to rural areas for the last financial year in Wales on a per capita basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Give-as-you-earn

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to how many employers in Wales are registered with the give-as-you-earn payroll deduction scheme;

(2) what information he has as to which charities in Wales have benefited from the give-as-you-earn payroll deduction scheme since its inception; and in each case what has been the actual benefit to the charity concerned.

Mr. Peter Walker: I do not have this information.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken by his Department to make employees in Wales aware of the give-as-you-earn payroll deduction scheme for registered charities.

Mr. Peter Walker: That is a matter for the Wales Council for Voluntary Action.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to how many adult speech therapists are employed per 1,000 of the population by each of the social services departments of local authorities in Wales;

(2) what information he has as to how many adult speech therapists able to carry out their work through the medium of Welsh are employed per 1,000 of the Welsh-speaking population in each of the social services departments of local authorities in Wales;

(3) what information he has as to how many adult speech therapists able to carry out their work through the medium of Welsh are employed per 1,000 of the Welsh-speaking population in each of the social services departments of local authorities in Wales:

(4) how many adult speech therapists in each local authority area in Wales are able to carry out their work through the medium of Welsh;

(5) what is the ratio of child speech therapists able to carry out their work through the medium of Welsh to Welsh-speaking pupils in (a) Wales and (b) each local education authority in Wales;

(6) what is the ratio of child speech therapists to school children in (a) Wales and (b) each local education authority area in Wales;

(7) how many child speech therapists able to carry out their work through the medium of Welsh there are in each local education authority area in Wales; and what proportion they represent of the total numbers of speech therapists in each authority area.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally. However the table shows the number of speech therapists employed by district health authorities in Wales, whose work includes speech therapy in schools.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what cases of non-fulfilment of obligations under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 by social service departments in Wales have been brought to his attention during each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Cases have been brought to my attention but the detail asked for could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the increase in applications and references to local authorities in Wales for the provision of aids, adaptations and modifications in the homes of disabled people under the requirements of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information about the numbers of applications and references to local authorities is not held centrally, but details of the provision of such services are published annually by the Welsh Office in "Activities of Social Services Departments".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has regarding delays in the implementation of provision of services for disabled people by local authorities in Wales under the requirements of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Representations alleging delays are received from time to time and these are fully investigated by the Department.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek to secure for his departmental library a copy of "The Difficulties of Local Authorities in Maintaining Services to People with Disabilities" by W. F. R. Stewart, published by the Disabilities Study Unit, Wildhanger, Amberley, West Sussex.

Mr. Grist: Yes.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning delays in the publication of statutory instruments laid by him in the present Session.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am not aware of any delays.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Ministers (Meeting)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Fisheries Ministers' meeting on 29 February in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Together with my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 29 February and 1 March.

The Council agreed a series of fish tariff quotas which will enable the processing industry in the United Kingdom and other member states to obtain specified quantities of some species of fish at reduced rates of tariff from third countries. Last year the Council did not manage to settle this issue until June: reaching an agreement so much earlier this year will help our processing industry to make full use of these quotas.

The Council also agreed in prinicple a new Community fisheries agreement with Morocco, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament and the completion of national parliamentary scrutiny procedures. This is a very important agreement which ensures that the Spanish and Portuguese fleets can resume fishing in Moroccan waters from which they were excluded at the beginning of this year. The additional cost of this agreement will be met by transfers from within the 1988 budget.

The Commission's proposed amendments to the basic marketing regulation, which would change the tuna market support regime and introduce regimes for additional species, were again discussed but no conclusion was reached.

Research and Development

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the report on agricultural research and development in the United Kingdom will be published;

(2) what steps he intends to take to enable hon. and right hon. Members, the agricultural industry, consumer groups and other concerned organisations to comment on the report on agricultural research and development in the United Kingdom before decisions based on the report's findings are taken;

(3) when the report on agricultural research and development in the United Kingdom will be completed.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The current examination of Agricultural Departments' research and development programmes (including work on fisheries and food) is an internal exercise which it would not be appropriate to publish. It is part of the normal process within Government of reviewing policy. I expect to receive a report in a few weeks' time but cannot yet say what consultations might be appropriate in the light of this advice or when any subsequent decisions might be taken. I will, however, keep the House informed of developments.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of producing the report on agricultural research and development in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The current internal review of Agricultural Departments' research and development programmes is expected to cost around £40,000.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of the term "near market research" that is being used in the report on agricultural research and development in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Near market research is not a term of art and there is no formal definition of it. It is, however, a convenient way of referring to the sort of work of direct commercial benefit which Government believe industry should fund more of. Part of the purpose of the review is to seek to identify what should be classified under this heading.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Meningitis

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the collection of data on the incidence of meningitis in the Wirral health authority covers all those with Wirral addresses who have been moved to a hospital outside the health authority area.

Mrs. Currie: Under the Public Health Acts and Infectious Disease Regulations, the doctor in attendance is responsible for notifying cases of specified infectious diseases, including acute meningitis, to the proper officer in the local government district concerned.

If patients are admitted to hospital outside the district in which they become ill, the hospital doctor will notify the proper officer of the district in which the hospital is situated. That proper officer will, in turn, send a copy of the notification to the proper officer of the district in which the patient became ill, and the notification will be included in the latter district's return to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

The statistics of notifications, therefore, relate to the area where the disease is first suspected or diagnosed, which is not necessarily the area of usual residence of the patient.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of meningitis have been reported in the Wirral health authority area in December 1987 and January of the current year.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available for the exact area requested. Infectious diseases are notified on a local, rather than health, authority basis, and Wirral district health authority covers the whole of Wirral county district and part of Ellesmere Port and Neston county district.

During the period 28 November 1987 to 1 January 1988 there were two notifications of acute meningitis received from Wirral county district, of which one was meningococcal meningitis. During the period 2 January to 29 January 1988 the figures were six and three respectively.

During these same periods no notifications of meningitis were received from Ellesmere Port and Neston county district.

The data should be regarded as provisional; corrected notifications are often received from doctors. Corrected notification figures for December should be available during April 1988 and for January figures during July 1988.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths attributable to meningitis have been recorded in each of the last five years (a) nationally and (b) in Cleveland.

Mrs. Currie: Meningitis can be caused by a number of different organisms. I assume my hon. Friend is interested in meningococcal meningitis, deaths from which are shown in the table. The latest year's data available are those for 1986.

Number of deaths with meningococcal meningitis (ICD 036.0) assigned as underlying cause. 1982-86. England and Wales, usual residents of Cleveland county

Hospital Beds

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish for (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) Sunderland district health authority lists depicting the average daily number of beds available in 1979 to the latest available date for all specialties and for acute specialties.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table. The number of in-patient cases treated per available bed by Northern regional health authority has increased from 14·6 to 19, between 1979 and 1986. In Sunderland district health authority the increase has been from 18 to 21·5, over the same period.

Community Care

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money he intends to allocate in 1988-89 for the provision of care in the community, and how much is to be allocated to each (a) region and (b) district.

Mr. Newton: In the main the Department does not identify funds for specific purposes such as provision of care in the community within its overall allocations to regions or in its indicative figures for local authority social services expenditure. The allocation of resources to district health authorities is a matter for regions, and it is for regions and districts to determine, within a national framework of health care priorities, and in the light of local needs and circumstances, how all their resources can best be used. So far as local authorities are concerned, it is for them to determine the level and balance of their expenditure on the provision of social services.

Fraud (Prosecution)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions were brought in the Durham constabulary area for social security fraud offences in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: The information, in the form requested, is not available. Seven local offices have catchment areas either in full or in part within the Durham constabulary area. The total number of cases authorised for prosecution in respect of social security benefit fraud, including unemployment benefit, for the seven catchment areas in each of the past five years is as follows:

1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the plight of pre-1973 war widows;

(2) whether he has received any representations from overseas concerning the plight of British pre-1973 war widows.

Mr. Portillo: Numerous representations have been received recently about the position of pre-1973 war widows, following the circulation of letters by the Royal British Legion and War Widows Association of Great Britain to Members of Parliament and to peers. One person from overseas made representations in 1986.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will review his decision to cancel the provisionally arranged meeting with Mrs. Iris Strange of the British War Widows and Associates and representatives of the All-Party Group for pre-1973 War Widows;

(2) whether, since cancelling the provisionally arranged meeting with Mrs. Iris Strange of the British War Widows and Associates, he has had meetings with representatives of other organisations representing war widows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Although my noble Friend, who has special responsibility for war pensions, said in July 1987 that he did not think a meeting with Mrs. Strange would be helpful, he has told my hon. Friend he would be glad to see him to discuss this. Since July 1987 he has not had a formal meeting to discuss war widows pensions with any organisation specifically representing war widows, although he has met representatives of a number of organisations concerned with the interests of war widows and war disablement pensioners.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has concerning the current ages of pre-1973 war widows;

(2) what estimates he can make of the numbers of pre-1973 war widows who are currently dying each year;

(3) whether he has any information concerning the numbers of second world war widows who are still alive;

(4) whether he has any information concerning the numbers of pre-1973 war widows who are still alive and who lost their husbands in service other than during the two world wars.

Mr. Portillo: The standard rate of war widows' pension under the war pensions scheme administered by DHSS is the same regardless of when the husband served or died. Records only distinguish between those whose husbands served between 1914 and 1921 and those whose husbands served from 1939 onwards. They do not distinguish pre and post-1973 widows, second world war widows or widows who lost their husbands in service other than during the two world wars. Definitive information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Estimates of the numbers of post-1973 war widows and assumptions about their ages suggest, however, that at December 1987 in the region of 56,000 war widows were pre-1973 widows, of whom about 51,000 were aged 65 or over, and that the number of pre-1973 war widows is currently falling by about 2,000 a year due to death or re-marriage.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any information concerning the numbers of first world war widows who are still alive.

Mr. Portillo: At December 1987, 5,100 first world war widows were in receipt of a war widows pension.

Sex Change Operations

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many individuals underwent sex change treatment in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of these individuals received that treatment under the National Health Service;

(2) what is the total number of patients who have so far received either sex change hormonal treatment or surgery under the National Health Service;

(3) how many courses of sex change treatment were commenced in the latest year for which figures are available by (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) other categories; if he will indicate how many of these commenced courses of treatment which ended up in (a) males remaining male, (b) males becoming female, (c) females remaining female, (d) females becoming male and (e) other outcomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of sex change operations performed annually;

(2) if he will estimate the total cost to the National Health Service of sex change treatment and operations.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers involved are so small that no reliable estimate of the operations carried out can be made from normal statistical returns. It is, however, unlikely that the number of operations carried out in England exceed 100 a year.

A detailed breakdown of costs is not available, but, based on information from the gender reassignment service at Charing Cross hospital, it appears that the cost of the operations involved and associated treatment is likely to be about £2,500. It is not possible to identify separately the costs for those patients receiving treatment who do not also have an operation.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps are taken by his Department to regulate sex change treatments;

(2) whether there is any restriction on the age of individuals who may undergo sex change treatments (a) under the National Health Service and (b) privately.

Mrs. Currie: Transexualism is a clinically recognised condition, for which in certain cases gender reassignment is the most appropriate form of treatment. It is for health authorities to decide the scale of resources allocated for this service and for doctors to decide on criteria for the acceptance of patients and on the treatment procedures in each individual case. The international Gender Dysphoria Association criteria recommend that, in the selection for operation, patients should be over 21 years and under 65 years of age.

Abortion

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the Pontefract district health authority area for each year from 1983 up to the latest year for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to savy the life of the pregnant woman; and what is the latter figure expressed as a percentage of the former.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions performed on usual residents of Pontefract District Health Authority, and number of mentions of ground 5[1] 1983-86

Year	Number of Abortions	Mention of Ground 5
1984	339	0

[1] Ground 5 of the 1967 Abortion Act permits abortions to be performed "In emergency to save the life of the mother".

Epilepsy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he hopes to be able to announce the location of the two epilepsy units suggested by the report of the working party on services for people with epilepsy;

(2) when he hopes to be able to respond to the report of the working party on services for people with epilepsy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am unable to add to my reply to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 18 December 1987 at column 924.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to be able to announce arrangements for the implementation of those parts of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 which have not yet been implemented.

Mr. Scott: The Government have always made it clear that implementation of the Act would be phased and dependent upon discussions with the local authority associations to identify resource implications. These discussions are continuing.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants of supplementary benefit at the Bathgate local office of his Department will (a) have their benefit frozen at its current level under the transitional arrangements for the introduction of income support and (b) have their benefits increased at the time of the introduction of income support.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the social security position of patients discharged from long-stay mental hospitals after 31st March;

(2) what representations he has received on the treatment in the Income Support Regulations of long-stay mental patients discharged after 31 March;

(3) how much extra income support patients discharged from long-stay mental hospitals after 31 March will receive, if they are deemed to be receiving higher level supplementary benefit prior to the new regulations coming into force.

Mr. Scott: Until 11 April discharged patients will be able to claim supplementary benefit or an increase in it. Where appropriate they may also qualify for an increase in severe disablement allowance or invalidity benefit, or claim attendance allowance. If they have received supplementary benefit, severe disablement allowance or invalidity benefit for 52 weeks or more prior to their discharge, supplementary benefit will be calculated at the long-term rate.

From 11 April supplementary benefit will be replaced by income support. Claimants under 60 who have been incapable of work for 28 weeks or more, who receive invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance, attendance allowance or mobility allowance or who are blind will qualify for the disability premium. Claimants aged 60 or more will receive the pensioner premium or, if they qualify for it, the higher pensioner premium. In addition, people living alone who are in receipt of attendance allowance and where no one is receiving invalid care allowance in respect of their care will qualify for the severe disability premium.

We have received a number of representations about the income support position of people living in institutions on 11 April who are discharged into the community after that date. Information about the extra amount of income support which would be required by patients discharged from long-stay mental hospitals before or after 11 April to maintain an actual or deemed supplementary benefit level is not available.

Income Support

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received on the treatment in the Income Support Regulations of those recovering from mental illness and seeking work;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect the disregard provisions of the Income Support Regulations will have on the ability of industrial therapy units to secure employment for their attenders; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the effect of the disregard provisions of the Income Support Regulations on people recovering from mental illness seeking work.

Mr. Scott: Evidence was received from many organisations representing the mentally and physically handicapped during the consultation period for the reform of the income-related benefits, including the British Institute of Industrial Therapy and MIND. Most organisations welcomed the new levels of disregards. People who are returning to part-time work after a mental illness or who attend an industrial therapy unit are able to earn £5 or £15 a week without it affecting their benefit. The higher disregard is available to those people who are receiving the disability premium, lone parents or members of couples who have been in receipt of benefit continuously for two years. We have undertaken to monitor these changes and to review their effect as necessary.

Disability Premium

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the financial effect of the loss of disability premium and the reduction in disregard on people recovering from mental illness seeking work.

Mr. Scott: People who qualify for the disability premium solely on grounds of their incapacity for work will lose the premium, and they may lose the higher earnings disregard when they become capable of work again. The disability premium will be £13·05 for a single person or lone parent and £18·60 for a member of a couple. The higher earnings disregard will be £15; the normal earnings disregard will be £5.

Industrial Therapy Units

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each industrial therapy unit (a) the total number of attenders in the year for which figures are most recently available and (b) the number of those helped to find employment by the units.

Mrs. Currie: I regret this information is not held centrally.

Charities

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount to be distributed to charities as a result of the error in the retail prices index, by what criteria the charities will be selected; and how much will be paid to charities for the benefit of one-parent families, people with disabilities and unemployed people respectively.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the total amount to be distributed to charities in England, Scotland and Wales will be about £7 million. This sum will be paid to charities whose work broadly benefits those who have lost out as a result of the error. We have been discussing with the voluntary sector the way we can best meet this objective and how funds should be distributed and we shall make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Income Support (General) Regulations 1987

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 do not include provisions analogous to regulations 4(6) to (8) of the Supplementary Benefit (Resources) Regulations 1981; and whether this involves any change in the treatment of trust funds in the assessment of entitlement to means-tested benefit.

Mr. Scott: As the provisions in regulations 4(6) to (8) of the Supplementary Benefit (Resources) Regulations 1981 to assume a notional resource according to the discretion available under a trust are not present in either housing benefit or family income supplement, we concluded that it would be a simplification not to carry them forward into the new regulations. This is a change which will assist claimants. From April, any resources held in trust to which a person is absolutely entitled will be taken into account from the outset in the income-related benefits. An exception is made where the trust fund is derived from a payment due to a personal injury. Resources held under a discretionary trust, including those arising from personal injury, will be taken into account when the payments are actually made.

National Quality Assessment Package

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will place in the Library the full results of the 1987 national quality assessment package for local social security offices, of which a summary is given in table 15.28 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288-II.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. This will be done at the end of March 1988.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the annual average real rise in private rents eligible for housing benefit in (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90, and (c) 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: The expenditure plans published in Cm. 288 are based on the assumption that, leaving aside the effects of the Government's proposals to decontrol new private lettings, rents paid by private tenants receiving housing benefits will increase in real terms by 3 per cent. in each of the three years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Health Authorities (Repossession of Appliances)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on how much money is lost to the National Health Service each year as a result of health authorities not repossessing physical support appliances such as crutches, hearing aids and wheelchairs.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 26 February 1988]: Arrangements for the return of items they provide are the responsibility of individual health authorities. No information is available on the revenue which might be lost as a result of non-return of disability equipment. It is known that many health authorities take steps to recover unused items but studies have shown that it is not always cost effective to retrieve and recondition equipment for reasons of expense, safety and hygiene.

National Health Service Staff (Injuries)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many Health Service staff have received payments under the National Health Service injury benefits scheme in the last two years, indicating the range of payments and the average payment;

(2) what action he is prepared to take to improve job opportunities for nurses injured either mentally or physically in the course of their work;

(3) what statistics and other information are kept by his Department on National Health Service staff injured at work; and whether that information is recorded according to type of injury;

(4) whether he will set up a working party to consider the introduction of a no-fault compensation scheme for nurses and other National Health Service staff injured at work;

(5) what advice is given to health authorities on the amount of training which should be given to nurses and other National Health Service staff on the lifting and movement of patients;

(6) whether he will introduce guidelines for health authorities on the resettling in work of nurses injured as a result of their duties, and on whether such a settlement would be of equivalent income, status and job satisfaction.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 29 February 1988]: While we recognise the physical stresses which may be experienced by nurses and believe that much can be done to prevent injuries through training in lifting techniques, careful selection of staff and an ergonomic approach to working methods and environment, the instruction and training of NHS staff is the responsibility of the health authorities themselves and of the various training bodies.

The curriculum for nurse learners includes training in the lifting and handling of patients as does the pre-registration training of certain of the professions allied to medicine, such as physiotherapists and occupational therapists.

All NHS staff, including nurses, who are injured or contract a disease in the course of their employment are covered by the NHS injury benefits scheme. This is a no-fault scheme which compensates those injured at work for loss of earnings and which can provide a pension of up to 85 per cent. of NHS earnings where there is a permanent reduction in a person's earning ability. If an employee is absent from work temporarily on reduced or no pay a temporary allowance is payable.

The number of new claims for NHS injury benefits during the last two years were:

1986—821
1987—896

Benefits range from a once only lump sum payment of 12 per cent. of annual salary to the pension mentioned above plus a once only lump sum of 50 per cent. of annual salary. No figures on average payments or on NHS staff injured at work are held centrally.

Under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act health authorities are responsible for the health, safety and welfare at work of their employees. Current guidance is that staff returning to work after prolonged or repeated sickness may need help and assessment to determine whether changes in working methods, alternative work or rehabilitation are necessary. Appropriate local action is decided in the light of individual circumstances.

We have no plans to issue new guidelines.

Chlamydia

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has for creating greater public awareness of the incidence of the sexually transmitted disease, chlamydia.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The symptons caused by chlamydia are common to many other infections and consequently diagnosis of it is usually possible only after the analysis of samples taken. This is usually done when a patient attends at a clinic. However, the Health Education Authority's leaflet "Guide to a healthy sex life", which has been made widely available to the public, contains a section on the causes, symptoms and treatment of non-specific genital infections, including chlamydia.

ENVIRONMENT

LDDC (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the gross and net losses and gains in employment within the statutory area of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC estimates that between 1981 and 1986 10,700 jobs were attracted to docklands, and 7,413 jobs were lost, resulting in a net gain of 3,287 jobs.

A new survey of employment in docklands was carried out by the LDDC in 1987. Its findings will be published shortly. From what can be seen in docklands, a further growth of employment is likely to be confirmed.

Vacant Land (Thamesdown)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the unused sites owned by public bodies within the borough of Thamesdown, together with their owners and sizes in hectares, as detailed in the Land Register.

Mr. Trippier: Information about all the sites, grouped by owner, is listed in the table.

Portable Discount Schemes

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the reply of 15 February, Official Report, column 464, to the hon. Member for Gloucester, when he expects to have completed his study into portable discount schemes.

Mr. Waldegrave: Very soon.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now received applications from employees of the Crown Suppliers to purchase that organisation.

Mr. Chope: No, but I am aware that some members of the staff of the Crown Suppliers are assembling a management buy-out team following my announcement on 3 February of the Government's intention to offer the business for sale.

Rating Reform

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate for the community charge for district council areas in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Howard: Illustrative community charge figures based on 1987-88 local authority spending levels were placed in the Library on 29 June 1987. No revisions have been made to these estimates.

Victoria Park Underpass

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has issued a certificate in relation to the Victoria Park Underpass Side Roads Order, the Victoria Park to Crossflatts Section First Supplementary Compulsory Purchase Order and the Second Supplementary Compulsory Purchase Order, under section 19 of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Certificates under section 19 of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 in connection with the first and second compulsory purchase orders were issued on 6 November 1987. Any question relating to the compulsory purchase orders should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Flytipping

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to make the registered owner of a truck stopped when flytipping liable for prosecution.

Mr. Moynihan: We are considering the responses to the consultation document on waste disposal law amendments issued in September 1986. Those proposals included measures — a duty of care on waste producers and registration of waste carriers — which would help to combat flytipping. We have no plans at present to extend these proposals on the lines suggested, but we shall consider this possibility.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department commissioned the text of a leaflet explaining homeless people's rights, as part of its series advising the public on aspects of housing; when this was circulated to interested agencies for comments; and when he expects the text of the leaflet will be finalised, published and distributed.

Mrs. Roe: April 1986, April 1987 and later in 1988 respectively.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the results are yet available of his Department's 1986 survey of local authority practice and procedure in the operation of the homelessness legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The analysis has been completed and the report is being finalised.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, 20 January, columns 749-52, how many of these additional units local authorities estimate will become available for occupation (a) before 1 April, and (b) after 1 April (i) for England as a whole, and (ii) for each local authority scheme; which will provide additional accommodation for homeless households; and which has been approved for extra housing investment resources during 1987-88.

Mrs. Roe: The additional allocations relate to capital expenditure in the current financial year. No systematic information is available on the number of additional dwellings or hostel places that will be ready for occupation by the end of that year.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, 20 January, columns 749-52, how many of these additional units local authorities expect to let to homeless households (i) under licence, as temporary accommodation and (ii) under secure tenancies, as permanent accommodation.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is not available. It is for local authorities to decide the terms on which they offer accommodation to homeless households.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, 20 January, columns 749-52, how many of the additional 2,800 units will be (a) ordinary housing accommodation provided by local authorities by refurbishing their empty dwellings, (b) hostel accommodation, provided by local authorities by buying and converting empty private dwellings, (c) hostel accommodation, provided by housing associations by buying and converting empty private dwellings and (d) other kinds of accommodation.

Mrs. Roe: 1,745, 616, 12 and 387 respectively.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the firms of architects, builders and surveyors that the Property Services Agency has removed from its approved list for (a) fraud or (b) poor performance, giving the name of each firm, details of each case of fraud including the amounts of money involved and the number of employees or the instances of poor performance, and the work which the firm previously undertook.

Mr. Chope: Any firm convicted of an offence involving fraud against the agency is removed from PSA's approved lists. Any such conviction is a matter of public record. The remaining information requested is commercially confidential.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will enumerate cases where fraud has been alleged against firms of architects, builders and surveyors under contract to the Property Services Agency where the police were not asked to investigate; and if he will summarise the principal reasons for such decisions, over the past five years.

Mr. Chope: Any significant allegation of fraud which stands up to initial scrutiny will be referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions or to the police. No central record is maintained of allegations which initial investigation suggests are either without foundation or incapable of substantiation.

Houses (Land Slippage)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many homes have been affected by land slippage as a result of the exceptionally wet January weather.

Mrs. Roe: Having made inquiries of South Wight borough council the Department is aware of 11 homes affected by a land slip at Luccombe. No other authorities have reported homes affected by land slips.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extract from the data used in constructing figures 9 to 11 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge in England (1) the number of households expected to receive community charge bills, (2) the total number of (a) primary and (b) secondary tax units in these households, (3) the total value of the gross bills for (a) primary and (b) secondary tax units in these households, (4) the number of households where one or more members is expected to receive a rebate, (5) the toal value of the net bills for the households receiving such rebates, (6) the total number of (a) primary tax units receiving rebates and (b) secondary tax units receiving rebates in these households, (7) the total value of the rebates for these (a) primary and (b) secondary tax units, and (8) the total value of the net bills for those (a) primary and (b) secondary tax units, the figures to be provided (a)) for all households in England and (b) separately for (i) one adult (non-retired), (ii) one adult (retired), (iii) pensioner couples, (iv) other two adult households, with or without children, (v) three adults, with or without children and (vi) four or more adults, with or without children.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 22 February 1988]: It is not possible to provide the information in the precise form requested. The tables set out the estimates in the form which is available. Community charge bills and rebates will apply to individuals and not to households. Details of the community charge rebate system have not yet been decided. For the purposes of the exemplifications published on 13 January the arrangements due to come into force on 1 April have been carried forward. The figures are consistent with those exemplifications, but should be treated as indicative only. The estimated value of rebates does not include the benefit of the uprating of income support rates in respect of the 20 per cent. minimum contribution to rates in 1988-89. The net cost of community charges to tax unit types is not, therefore, the difference between gross community charges and the value of rebates.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Accidents)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, Official Report, 23 February, columns 150-52, what were the principal reasons for the accidents involving cars on the stretch of the M1 referred to.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The principal reasons appear to have been (i) excessive speed, (ii) vehicles travelling too close to each other, (iii) driver fatigue and (iv) bad driving in poor weather conditions such as fog, ice or snow.

M1-M6 Junction (Lighting)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to light the junction of the M1 and the M6.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A recent assessment has indicated that the extension of lighting on the M1 from junction 17 at Watford Gap to, and including, the M1-M6 interchange at Catthorpe (junction 19) is justified. The timing of its installation has still to be determined.

M1 (Traffic)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much he anticipates traffic to grow on the M1 from its junction with the M6 to junction 1 on the M1 over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: South of the M25/M1 intersection, traffic on the M1 is anticipated to grow by between 2 per cent. and 5 per cent. over the next five years. North of the M25, up to the M6 junction, the growth of traffic on the M1 is anticipated to be offset by the relief brought about by the completion of the M40 extension, with projected growth between nought and 6 per cent. over the same period.

Deputy Secretaries

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the number and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has four deputy secretaries. Their main responsibilities and numbers of staff will be as follows from 14 March, after a reorganisation:

i. Road Safety and Licensing and Principal Finance Officer. 10,267 staff: including four grade 3s, one grade 4 and 14 grade 5s.

ii. Highways and Traffic. 1,770 staff: including four grade 3s, seven grade 4s and 28 grade 5s.

iii Aviation, Shipping and International Transport. 1,256 staff including five grade 3s, four grade 4s and 19 grade 5s.

iv Public Transport and Research. 747 staff including three grade 3s, two grade 4s and 13 grade 5s.

The numbers of staff shown are based on staff in post at 1 February 1988. Other grades of staff would not normally report direct to a deputy secretary.

Singapore Airlines

Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of Singapore Airlines receiving subsidies from the Singapore Government to promote Singapore Airlines' activities in competition with British carriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has carried out a study into the possible incorporation of conflict alert equipment into the British air traffic control system, as installed at Eurocontrol Maastricht.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a matter for the national air traffic service and the Civil Aviation Authority. I will draw my hon. Friend's question to the attention of the authority's chairman.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when flow control will be introduced into British air space; and for how long it will be a feature of the United Kingdom's air traffic control system.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Air traffic flow management in the United Kingdom is a matter for the national air traffic service and the Civil Aviation Authority. I will draw my hon. Friend's question to the attention of the authority's chairman.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which European countries will introduce flow control procedures into their air traffic control systems in the current year;

(2) what plans are being made for co-ordinating management by European countries of air traffic flow management flow control, when it is introduced in the summer.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority that 12 air traffic flow management units co-ordinate on behalf of the International Civil Aviation Organisation air traffic flows at peak periods over the following European countries:

Austria
Belgium
Bulgaria
Czechoslovakia
Denmark
Finland
France
Federal Republic of Germany
German Democratic Republic
Greece
Hungary
Italy
Luxembourg
Netherlands
Norway
Poland
Portugal
Romania
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
United Kingdom
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
Yugoslavia

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what annual capital investment in air traffic control equipment is planned by the Civil Aviation Authority for the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The CAA's planned annual capital investment in air traffic control equipment and associated buildings for this financial year and for the next four years is as follows:

Capital investment outturn prices

Financal year	£ million
1987-88	24
1988-89	34
1989-90	38
1990-91	47
1991-92	52

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual capital investment in air traffic control equipment by the Civil Aviation Authority over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority's annual capital investment in air traffic control equipment and associated buildings over the last 10 years was as follows:

Financial year	Capital investment £ million
1977-78	13
1978-79	8
1979-80	7
1980-81	24
1981-82	27
1982-83	30
1983-84	26
1984-85	20
1985-86	21
1986-87	24

Aerodromes

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the discussions which have been held with the Airfields Environment Federation and the Aerodrome Owners Association concerning guidelines for aerodrome consultative committees.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New and improved guidelines for aerodrome consultative committees have been agreed with the Aerodrome Owners Association and the Airfields Environment Federation. A copy has been placed in the Library. The guidelines are not mandatory, but are a voluntary code which has been drawn up with the aim of encouraging useful consultations between aerodrome management and users, on the one hand, and local authorities (where they do not have the management of the aerodrome) and organisations representing local interests, on the other. The guidelines are intended to provide a framework to help those setting up consultative facilities. They may also be of use to existing consultative committees whether or not the aerodromes are designated for consultative purposes under section 35 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982.

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the rate of grant for rural bus services in 1988-89.

Mr. David Mitchell: Rural bus grant will be paid at the rate of 3·25p per eligible bus mile.

Driving Tests

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what he ascribes the pass rate of under 50 per cent. for the driving test recorded in the test organisation's report for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many candidates take the test too soon. If candidates took more tuition, gained more driving experience, and took heed of an honest assessment of their readiness for test from an approved driving instructor the test pass rate would rise and the queues for driving tests would shorten.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the driver testing organisation is giving value for money to its customers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recent review of the driver testing organisation and its own measures over the past year have both been directed to providing a more efficient service to customers. Since the beginning of the current financial year, it has been required to work within unit cost targets designed to improve performance. A major computerisation programme is in hand which will help contain costs and handle the high level of demand for tests. In 1986-87 the unit cost for the L-test rose by only 2·8 per cent. while the retail price index rose by 3·2 per cent. The unit cost of HGV/PSV test fell by 7 per cent. as a result of a rationalisation of the two formerly separate tests into one.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the annual report and accounts for the driver testing and training organisation for the last financial year are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A copy of the driver testing and training organisation's report and accounts for the financial year 1986-87 has today been placed in the Library of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to regulate the purchase and use of devices for electronic surveillance; and what plans he has to introduce further regulations governing this area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not believe that such controls would be an effective way to deal with these issues.

Government Data Network

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision as to whether the Government data network is suitable for use by the police national computer; and if he will inform right hon. and hon. Members when his decision is made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall be able to decide whether to use the Government data network for the police national computer when we are satisfied that the Government data network, if implemented, would meet the police national computer's requirements and that the terms and conditions for the supply of the service would be acceptable. We will inform the House at the proper time.

Summer Time

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the options being considered for the United Kingdom by his Department as a part of the proposals for the harmonisation of summer time in the European Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We hope shortly to announce proposals to enable us to assess support for any changes to summer time arrangements both in respect of harmonisation with other member states and in respect of those who seek extended daylight hours.

Ms. Inna Badanova

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that Ms. Inna Badanova of London NW6 will be readmitted to the United Kingdom following her visit to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Renton: I have replied today to the hon. Member's letter of 12 February giving full details of the steps which Ms. Badanova should take to ensure her readmission to this country.

Independent Television

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provisions he plans to make to safeguard the position of drama and live music under any reorganisation of Independent Television;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of Independent Television.

Mr. Renton: We have been giving careful thought to the recommendations of the Peacock committee on the future of broadcasting and shall announce our conclusions in due course. There will continue to be proper safeguards for the range and quality of programming.

Press Council (Adjudications)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the recent adjudication by the Press Council in favour of Professor Colin Blakemore against the Sunday Mirror and the lack of prominence given by that newspaper to the council's findings, he has any proposals to seek to establish a system whereby such adjudications are printed on the same page and in the same format as the original story complained of to the Press Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. These are matters for the Press Council and the newspaper in question.

Professor Colin Blakemore

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has given to representations from Professor Colin Blakemore, Wayneflete Professor of Physiology in Oxford, about harassment of scientists engaged in medical and ophthalmic research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of the campaign of harassment and intimidation against Professor Blakemore and his family. My right hon. Friend has made clear to Professor Blakemore that we believe all such activities to be disgraceful.

Immigration

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of applicant for settlement in the United Kingdom will be exempt or subject to reduced fees under clause 8 of the Immigration Bill.

Mr. Renton: No firm decision has yet been taken on how the powers in clause 8 of the Immigration Bill might be implemented. Regulations under clause 8 may prescribe different fees for different categories of applicant, including the possibility of exemptions from the fee. At first sight, we think that there may be a case for reductions in the case of refugees and those, such as spouses and fiancé(e)s, who are admitted on conditions specifically with a view to settlement. Final decisions will be taken when we come to draw up regulations under clause 8.

Local Government Act 1966

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications are pending for funding for section 11 posts under the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 March 1988]: At 31 January 1988, the latest date for which information is readily available, there were 162 applications for some 1,040 new posts under consideration. In addition, there were five outstanding applications, covering 1,025 posts for replacement of social services posts previously funded under an outdated system relating grant to the size of the local ethnic minority population and seven applications for continued funding of some 1,900 mainly teaching posts arising from reviews of existing section 11 provision.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it takes to respond to local authority applications for funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 March 1988]: Between 1 October 1986, when the current arrangements for the administration of the grant were introduced, and 31 January 1988, the latest date for which information is readily available, the average time taken to complete consideration of an application for grant has been between three and four months. At the latter date, of the 162 outstanding applications for new posts, 58 had been with the Home Office for less than three months; 50 for more than three but less than six months; 48 for more than six but less than 12 months; and six for more than 12 months. These periods include varying times spent waiting for responses from local authorities whose initial applications provided insufficient information for decision making.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it takes to deal with more detailed applications sent in response to an initial refusal of funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 March 1988]: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Fire Retardant Furnishings (Prisons)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his policy on the issue of fire retardant furnishings, in particular bedding and mattresses, to inmates in Scottish prisons;

(2) how many prisoners in Scottish prisons have been issued with fire retardant furnishings, in particular mattresses and bedding, and what proportion this represents of the Scottish prison population.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. Two establishments are furnished with highly fire resistant mattresses for all inmates, and 12 other establishments have such mattresses for prisoners regarded as at risk. Fire-retardant sheets, pillowslips and mattress covers are being phased in. Appropriate steps are taken to minimise the opportunity of fire raising. Suitable accommodation is provided and precautions taken for known fire raisers.

Travelling People

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites have been established for travelling people in Scotland in the last five years; and what are their locations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Seven permanent sites and one temporary site. These are located as follows:

Local authority District	Site
Permanent Sites
Argyll and Bute	Dunchologan, Lochgilphead
Clackmannan	Westhaugh, Alva
Edinburgh	Duddingston, Edinburgh
Falkirk	Redding, Falkirk
Glasgow	Carmyle, Glasgow
Hamilton	Swinhill, Larkhall
Inverness	Longman, Inverness
Temporary Site
Stirling	Craigforth, Stirling

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of Government expenditure on sites for travelling people in Scotland in each of the last five years; which local authorities were in receipt of Government funds for that purpose; and how much they each received.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the tables:

Expenditure on sites for travelling people 1982-83 to 1986-87

1982-83	Nil
1983-84	538,350
1984-85	487,583
1985-86	523,351
1986-87	108,299
TOTAL	1,657,583

Local authorities in receipt of grant 1982-83 to 1986-87

Aberdeen Maternity Hospital

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated costs to his Department of the establishment of 28 additional beds at Aberdeen maternity hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The 28-bed development at Aberdeen maternity hospital is a minor capital scheme which Grampian Health board is carrying out. I understand that the provisional estimate for the work is in the region of £267,000.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the costs to his Department's health budget of the 56-bed additional unit at Aberdeen maternity hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The estimated cost of the proposed 56-bed unit at Aberdeen maternity hospital is £1·6 million.

Maternity Consultant Units

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total costs to the health budget, including the employment of consultants and ancillary staff, of the maternity consultant units in Perth, Melrose and Forfar; and if he will list the total number of births per annum in each of these units, giving an average cost per birth per unit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1985 (the latest year for which figures are available) the total number of births in the consultant unit at Perth royal infirmary was 1,159 and in the GP unit at the Fyfe Jamieson maternity home, Forfar, was 133. Data for the consultant unit at Melrose are not available because the hospital has not yet been commissioned. I regret that the other information requested is not held centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Newsprint

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what complaints the Office of Fair Trading has received about alleged price fixing in the supply of newsprint; and what action is being taken.

Mr. Butcher: The Office of Fair Trading received a complaint from the Newspaper Publishers' Association about apparent collusion in the level and timing of price increases for newsprint. The office investigated this complaint and received assurances from United Kingdom manufacturers and importers that they were not involved in any such agreement. However, the office is keeping the matter under review.

Photographic Film

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of photographic film (882.22,25), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: I regret that this information is not available.

Radio and Television Cabinets

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total domestic output of radio and television cabinets (764.93), the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The available information for radio and television cabinets is as follows:

	United Kingdom manufacturers' sales £ million	Exports £ million	Imports £ million
1975	33·7	6·7	1·1
1976	36·3	5·8	0·9
1977	45·2	2·1	1·4
1978	46·2	2·2	2·2
1979	56·2	1·9	2·6
1980	48·4	1·2	2·9
1981	43·5	2·8	3·9
1982	35·7	2·9	3·8
1983	40·7	3·2	5·5
1984	40·7	3·7	6·6
1985	41·9	2·7	9·1
1986	41·3	1·9	12·9

United Kingdom manufacturers' sales up to and including 1980 are for firms employing 25 or more people for both wooden and plastic cabinets. From 1981 onwards the figures relate to firms employing 50 or more for plastic cabinets and 35 or more for wooden cabinets. Therefore, figures for export and import ratios are not given as they are likely to overstate the true position.

Sources:

Business Monitors PQ472 and PQ496 (up to and including 1980). PQ4671 and PQ4836 (from 1981 onwards)

Definitions:

United Kingdom manufacturers' sales cover wooden cabinets for radio, TV and gramophone (including combination cabinets); plastic cabinets and lids for radio, TV, gramophone, tape recorder cabinets and lids.

Exports and imports: The tariff codes used are:

	1975-77	1978-84	1985-86
Cabinets of wood	8515-6271 8515-6182	8515-4100	8515-7700
Cabinets of materials	8515-6271 8515-6588	8515-4900	8515-7900

Fixed Investment

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries spend a greater proportion of their gross domestic product on fixed investment than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Comparisons for most OECD countries are readily available only for 1985. In that year the following OECD countries spent a greater proportion of their GDP on gross fixed capital formation than the United Kingdom:

Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United States. The United Kingdom spent 17 per cent. gross domestic product on fixed investment, compared with an OECD average of 20 per cent., an EEC average of 19 per cent., and 19 per cent. in the United States of America.

Source: OECD National Accounts.

Consumer Safety

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce legislation further to extend consumer safety.

Mr. Butcher: The safety of consumers has been greatly improved by the implementation of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. From 1 October 1987, under the general safety requirement, it became a criminal offence to supply any consumer product that is not reasonably safe.

The Act also implements the European Community directive on product liability and means that from 1 March 1988 it will be much easier for people damaged by defective products to obtain redress through the courts.

In addition to the general safety requirement, the safety of a range of products is covered by specific regulations. New regulations are to be introduced covering the flammability of upholstered furniture and bedding; and it is the intention to introduce further regulations to implement a number of EC directives, including those covering the safety of toys and certain electrical products.

Eukaryotic Genetic Engineering

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which firms are involved in his Department's newly launched Link collaborative research programme on eukaryotic genetic engineering.

Mr. Butcher: Four companies are committed already to collaborative research under the newly launched Link programme, eukaryotic genetic engineering. Glaxo and British Biotechnology are collaborating with the University of Oxford in pharmaceutical application. Dalgetty and Whitbread are collaborating with the University of Leicester in food applications. Six further companies are in discussion of collaboration with institutes of the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

Business Advertisements

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a further order to amend the Business Advertisements (Disclosure) Order 1977 so as to require the words "trade sale" to be used in advertisements whenever a sale is conducted in the course of a trade or business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. the Business Advertisements (Disclosure) Order 1977 already makes it illegal to place advertisements unless it is made reasonably clear that the goods advertised are to be sold in the course of a business.

Motor Car Sales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any proposals to introduce an obligatory code of practice in connection with all motor car sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. I have no such proposals.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any proposals for the introduction of a scheme whereby motor traders would be required to provide to purchasers of used motor vehicles essential information concerning history and condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. A pre-sales inspection report for each used car offered for sale is already a requirement of the code of practice for the motor industry which is operated by member of the Motor Agents Association, the Scottish Motor Trade Association and the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders. I have no plans to make this a statutory requirement.

East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about his Department's facilities serving East Anglian businesses.

Mr. Atkins: All the Department's national services are of course available to business in East Anglia. The Department's south-east regional office is responsible for maintaining day-to-day contact with East Anglian business, and in particular for ensuring that the region's industry and commerce are able to take full advantage of the enterprise initiative.

To ensure close contact with its East Anglia customers, the Department will in the spring be opening a new area office at Cambridge. This office, supported by recently appointed local representatives in Norwich and Chelmsford, will play a leading role in promoting and ensuring the effective application within East Anglia of the policies set out in Cm. 278.

Consultants

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the cost to his Department of employing management or computer consultants for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 29 February 1988]: My Department's expenditure from 1983 on computer consultants in support of central management services are as follows:

	£000
1983-84	1,686
1984-85	3,309
1985-86	5,488
1986-87	5,520
[1]1987-88	5,280

[1] Estimated.

Expenditure on management consultants is not recorded separately from other consultancy spend.

ENERGY

Petroleum Production

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the Government's latest forecasts of levels of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Parkinson: The latest forecasts for United Kingdom petroleum production in the years 1988 to 1992 are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1988	105 - 125
1989	100 - 120
1990	90 - 120
1991	80 - 110
1992	70 - 105

As in previous years, the forecasts are presented in the form of a range of outcomes for each year. These ranges take into account the many uncertainties involved. The figures cover forecast production of stabilised crude oil, natural gas liquids (NGLs) and condensates. NGL and condensate production accounts for some 6 million to 9 million tonnes of the annual totals.

WALES

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the replies his Department received from each health authority in Wales requesting information on their needs following the perinatal mortality initiative report.

Mr. Grist: There was no requirement on the Department as a consequence of the perinatal mortality initiative report to collect information on maternity service needs. However, health authorities have been invited to submit bids for central funding for essential equipment for special care baby units and have been consulted on proposals for the creation of a regional neo-natal intensive care service. If the hon. Gentleman has a specific query, I would be happy to try to answer.

Regional Government

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, since 1979, his Department has instigated any studies into regional government, and regional departments of central Government, in other European Community member states, with a view to formulating proposals for improvements in the structure and administration of the work of his Department; whether he has any plans to instigate any such studies in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No such studies have been instigated by my Department and none are proposed.

Leptospirosis

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on measures being undertaken by his Department to control the incidence of leptospirosis in cattle in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) offers a leptospirosis control programme as part of its cattle health scheme, the aim of which is to provide a pool of cattle herds of recognised health status for domestic and export trade. Farmers may seek either elite herd status, where all cattle are serologically negative for leptospirosis, or controlled herd status, in which infected cattle can become clear of infection by a planned programme of antibiotic treatment and vaccination.

Any farmer suspecting or concerned about leptospirosis in cattle should consult his local veterinary surgeon.

Farms (Plant and Machinery)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, for the last year for which full figures are available, what was the level of investment in plant and machinery in farms in Wales; and what are the corresponding figures both at outturn and real prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Based on the aggregate income calculation for Welsh agriculture, investment in plant and machinery in 1986 amounted to £31 million. For the period since 1979, the corresponding figures in current money terms and at constant 1980 prices were as follows:

Year	Current prices £ million	Constant 1980 prices £ million
1979	29·0	32·4
1980	23·0	23·0
1981	17·0	16·4
1982	29·0	26·6
1983	30·0	26·3
1984	27·0	23·1
1985	30·0	24·2
1986	31·0	24·7

Radiation (Compensation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made towards resolving cases of farmers in Wales affected by the Chernobyl disaster, who have still not been granted compensation; and when he hopes to come to a decision on these cases.

Mr. Peter Walker: These cases are being given careful and detailed consideration and I hope to reach a decision soon.

Milk

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will seek to ensure for Welsh milk producers an increase in the amount of milk they may produce without paying the super levy on excess output similar to those increases secured recently for producers in Belgium, France and West Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: In order to accommodate changes in the pattern of marketing, EC legislation allows member states to seek approval from the Commission under management committee procedure for the transfer of specified quantities of quota between their direct sale and wholesale allocations. This is what was recently approved for France, Germany and Belgium and similar approvals have been given to other member states, including the United Kingdom, in the past. These transfers do not increase the total amount of quota allocated to any member state. I do not believe that such a transfer would be justified in the United Kingdom under present circumstances.

Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each district health authority (a) the outturn figures for 1986-87, and (b) the estimated outturn for 1987-88.

Mr. Grist: The income and expenditure outturn figures for district health authorities in Wales for 1986-87 are as follows:

District Health Authority	Revenue Expenditure (£ Thousands)	Capital Expenditure (£ Thousands)	Total Expenditure (£ Thousands)
Clwyd	82,818	5,966	88,784
East Dyfed	52,641	2,561	55,202
Gwent	100,119	6,970	107,089
Gwynedd	51,389	1,248	52,637
Mid Glamorgan	119,412	5,198	124,610
Pembrokeshire	17,550	2,386	19,936
Powys	23,152	1,186	24,337
South Glamorgan	134,843	6,441	141,284
West Glamorgan	83,091	10,835	93,926
WALES	665,013	42,791	707,804

Note:
Figures may not add due to rounding.

Income and expenditure data are not collected on a formal or a routine basis in-year since Departmental monitoring of health authorities' expenditure relates to their statutory duty to contain cash spending within notified cash limits. The latest estimates of cash outturn for 1987-88 are as follows:

District Health Authority	Revenue (£ Thousands)	Capital (£ Thousands)	Total (£ Thousands)
Clwyd	90,754	5,702	96,456

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa (Aid)

84. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial aid the United Kingdom now gives to the front-line states in southern Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the United Kingdom provided gross bilateral aid totalling over £80 million to the front-line states (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe).

THE ARTS

Arts Council

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of Arts Council employees in (a) 1978 and (b) the current year.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council had 382 employees in 1978. The current figure of 531 includes 175 staff of the South Bank board (excluding the art department), considerably fewer than the staff previously employed by the Greater London council to perform the same functions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sherry

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra excise duty would be gained in a fiscal year if British sherry were taxed on the same basis as sherry.

Mr. Lilley: British and Spanish sherries are taxed on the same basis, according to alcoholic strength. British sherry may incur less duty either because of a lower alcohol content or through blending after payment of duty.

Cash Limits

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there are any changes in the cash limits set for 1987-88 on his Department's Votes.

Mr. Lilley: The Vote for 1987-88 for Customs and Excise (class XIX, vote 2), of £441,125,000 is to be reduced by £243,000 to £440,882,000. This is due to a corresponding overspend on the Department's Vote for 1986-87. It is standard practice for such an overspend to be deducted from the following year's cash limit. The small overspend arose mainly as a result of difficulties with a new computerised accounting system.

Developing Countries (Financial Flows)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the net financial flows from developing countries to developed countries recorded by the World Bank have flowed to the United Kingdom in each of the last four years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 February 1988]. The information is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of any letter written to the London Docklands development corporation by Messrs Robson Rhodes concerning the annual accounts of the corporation, together with any respective responses which have been made.

Mr. Trippier: No. The Department is shortly to discuss with Messrs Robson Rhodes and the LDDC issues arising from the corporation's 1985-86 external audit. I shall then consider what further statement should be made to the House.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the 1986-87 performance review of the London Docklands development corporation which was considered by its board in May 1987.

Mr. Trippier: No. The document was produced for internal management purposes only. Details of LDDC's performance are published in the corporation's annual reports and accounts, and in its corporate plan.

Cement and Concrete

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report tables setting out United Kingdom imports and exports of (a) cement and (b) precast concrete products over the past five years.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows.

Construction Firms

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has any information on the numbers employed by construction firms which are subsidiaries of foreign companies.

Mr. Trippier: While the Department is aware that some construction companies are subsidiaries of foreign companies, it is not our practice to collect such information in a formal way.

London Docklands (Compulsory Purchase)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the postponement of his decision on the London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order 1985; and when he now expects to announce his decision.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order is an unusually large order covering 745 acres of urban land and embracing 337 separate plots. A large number of inter-related issues have required resolution. My right hon. Friend expects to announce the decision within the next few days.

GLC (Country Homes)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current position in respect of the disposal of former Greater London council seaside and country homes, and in particular the position in respect of the ownership of the former Greater London council estate at The Parks, Minehead, Somerset.

Mr. Ridley: The London Residuary Body expects to complete arrangements for the disposal of the whole of the seaside and country homes portfolio, including The Parks, Minehead, Somerset, to North British Housing Association by the end of March. Necessary consents required in connection with the disposal were issued by my Department on 29 February.

Council House Sales

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table giving information on sales of dwellings by each local authority in England, referred to in the answer given to the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) on 11 December 1987, Official Report, column 275.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library the latest version of table 2 giving information reported by each local authority in England on the progress of council house sales up to the end of September 1987.

Southern Water Authority

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received second responses from the Southern water authority and the six water companies concerned to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on water supply in the Southern water authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received the responses. I can confirm that Southern water and the six water companies, namely, Eastbourne, Folkestone, Mid Kent, Mid-Sussex, Portsmouth and West Kent have made real progress in taking forward the recommendations made by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The MMC report stated that Southern were on the whole effectively managed and compared satisfactorily with other public sector bodies. The second response from Southern is thorough and detailed. It has also been positive and constructive and has illustrated well its continuing commitment to improving management and efficiency. The response is most encouraging following Southern's record of achieving recent performance aims.

Good progress has been made on the setting of regional standards of service, including water supply, sewerage and water quality, culminating in the issue of a standards of service booklet, while survey work on establishing shortfalls continues. The costs involved in rectifying these should be fully assessed by the summer of 1988.

Southern water's overall record on cost reduction is good, and demanding future performance aims have been set. It has also taken forward the MMC'c recommendations on the management of capital projects, and has reviewed and amended its capital projects procedures.

The six water companies have generally continued to make progress, particularly with corporate planning, with the exchange of information on levels of service and the setting of medium term quantified targets for meeting service standards, and for cost control.

Although the companies have shown good progress in their work on corporate planning, it is important that they ensure that current levels of service are identified and clear objectives set for the future.

I have placed a copy of the second responses in the Library. I shall also draw the attention of other water authorities to the second response from Southern water and invite them to consider the extent to which these responses might be appropriate to their own operations.

The final response from Southern water and the six companies will be required in April 1989. It will be a final progress report on the recommendations as a whole recording what has been done and setting out the improvements achieved in accordance with the commission's recommendations.

Water Companies (Privatisation)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has put proposals to the water industry for modifying the areas of appointed water utility companies after privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: Earlier this year the Department sent a discussion document on water utility company functions and areas to the Water Authorities Association and the Water Companies Association. That document is now under consideration between the Department and the industry, and does not represent policy settled in all its details. I am, however, placing a copy of the document in the Library of the House.

Maintenance Work

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the level of outstanding maintenance work from 1979 to the latest date for which data are available.

Mr. Chope: Estimates of the cost of outstanding high priority maintenance work on Government Department's civil accommodation have been made only since 1984. For work within the responsibility of the Property Services Agency, the figures are:

	£ million
1985	96
1986	103
1987	103

All estimates are at September 1987 prices. The 1987 assessment of £103 million reflects the transfer of some delegated works responsibilities from PSA to Departments under the property repayment services system.

Substantial additional provision for civil maintenance was announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in last year's Autumn Statement, and by the Secretary of State for the Environment in the Official Report, at columns 664-66, on 3 November 1987. The provision for maintenance has been increased to £105 million in 1988-89 and £120 million in the following two years.

Maintenance programmes on the Defence estate are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Lead-free petrol

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bodies with which his Department has discussed the conversion of vehicles to operate on lead-free petrol.

Mr. Moynihan: All aspects of the introduction of unleaded petrol, including the conversion of vehicles to operate on unleaded petrol, are regularly discussed at meetings under my chairmanship with the following bodies:

Automobile Association
Association of Car Fleet Operators
Association of UK Oil Independents
British Tourist Authority
British Motorcycle Federation
British Vehicle Renting and Leasing Association
Campaign for Lead-Free Air (CLEAR)
Consumers' Association
European Year of the Environment (EYE)
Federation of Petroleum Suppliers
Highlands and Islands Development Board
Mid-Wales Development Board
Motor Agents Association/Petrol Retailers Association
Motor Cycle Association
Royal Automobile Club
Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders
UK Petroleum Industry Association

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department assesses the cost of each job created in enterprise zones; what that national figure is currently assessed to be; and what the assessed figure is in each existing enterprise zone.

Mr. Trippier: The costs to the Exchequer of the enterprise zones comprise payments to local authorities for rate revenue forgone in the zones; tax revenue forgone as a consequence of allowances claimed for expenditure on industrial and commercial buildings there; and public investment in infrastructure and construction that would not otherwise have been made had the zones not been designated.

The number of jobs in the zones at the time of designation is deducted from the number present at the time of the assessment to give the number of net additional jobs on the zones.

The Department commissioned consultants to evaluate the experiment. They estimated that, at the end of 1986, the public cost of each net additional job within the enterprise zones in Great Britain was £8,500. Separate assessments have not been made for individual enterprise zones.

The consultants report ("An evaluation of the Enterprise Zone Experiment" Her Majesty's Stationery Office 1987) also includes a more refined method of assessing the cost per job, which takes account of the effects of the zones on employment in the areas around them. Copies of this report were placed in the Library on 22 December 1987.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of administering the proposed community charge in inner London.

Mr. Howard: The estimates given in the financial memorandum to the Local Government Finance Bill, apportioned in a similar way to the costs of rate collection, would produce a range of between £30 million and £35 million.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to collect the community charge from tramps and vagrants.

Mr. Howard: With limited exceptions, every adult will be subject to the personal community charge in the area where he has his sole or main residence. In deciding the scale of resources to devote to registration for and collection of the community charge, local authorities will be entitled to have regard to what can reasonably be achieved.

Rural Areas (Assistance)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total amount of all central Government assistance to rural areas in England on a per capita basis for the last financial year.

Mr. Moynihan: Information is not available in the form requested.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 17 February, Official Report, column 966, what proposals for the funding of housing co-operatives were discussed when he met the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The matters discussed were the Housing Corporation's financial support for AXLE Co-operative Housing Services Limited, and the funding of housing associations which provide agency services for primary co-operatives.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Chope: The Department of the Environment, including the PSA, occupies accommodation in 93 buildings in the Greater London area, ranging from its main HQ building at 2 Marsham Street, down to small stores attached to the PSA's district works offices. Civil accommodation for all Government Departments is held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment and managed by PSA. Some properties are held freehold; the rents of leasehold buildings are determined on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential basis. The total annual rent paid by the PSA to landlords for civil accommodation held in London in 1986-87, the last complete year for which figures are available, was £133 million. Comparable figures for contributions in lieu of rates, and for PSA expenditure on the maintenance of buildings on the civil estate are £116 million and £38 million respectively.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him today. In the case of the Department of Energy, the Department occupies accommodation at Thames House South, Millbank SW1.

Water Supplies

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the price of water from each water authority from 1978-79 until the latest date available taking the 1978-79 price as a base of 100.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1988, c. 128]: A number of the figures which formed part of the answer were incorrect. The table gives the correct figures.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sessional Index

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek the reintroduction in the Library of a sessional running index using the strip index system of written and oral answers in departmental date order of reply.

Mr. Wakeham: No. An index by subjects and Members' names of written and oral answers is already provided on POLIS, the Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System. The reintroduction of the strip-index system referred to, which was discontinued on 1 June 1981 in accordance with the Resolution of the House of 26 January 1978, would have additional staffing implications, and would serve only to duplicate the information already available on the Library's computer-based system.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

2. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he plans to meet the secretary general of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss foreign policy issues confronting the Alliance.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend is today attending with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister the NATO summit meeting in Brussels, at which these issues are being discussed.

Persian Gulf

13. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate discussions at the United Nations with a view to establishing an international peace-keeping force in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: No. Discussions in New York are rightly concentrating on finding ways to implement Security Council resolution 598. This may well require the imposition of an arms embargo. Until there is a peace to keep, discussion of a peace-keeping force is entirely premature.

16. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: The situation in the Gulf remains tense. Although there is currently a lull in the Gulf itself, though not of course in the land war, this year so far there have already been a large number of successful attacks on shipping by both Iran and Iraq. We continue to urge both sides to end these attacks through the implementation of Security Council resolution 598.

Arms Control

14. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about British arms control policy with particular reference to achieving a verifiable worldwide ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to play an active role at the negotiations at the conference on disarmament in Geneva for a comprehensive, verifiable and global ban on all chemical weapons. Some progress was made last year. However, complex issues remain to be resolved in order to construct a resilient international security agreement.

Hong Kong

15. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong to discuss the future of the colony.

Mr. Eggar: At present my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit Hong Kong. We are in close touch with the Governor of Hong Kong over all aspects of the territory's future. My right hon. and learned Friend will be seeing him in three weeks' time during one of his regular visits to London.

32. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the people of Hong Kong on the proposed timetable for direct elections.

Mr. Eggar: On 10 February the Hong Kong Government published their White Paper announcing the decision to introduce 10 directly elected seats into the Legislative Council in 1991. We have since received no representations from the people of Hong Kong concerning this timetable.

68. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will bring forward proposals for human rights legislation in Hong Kong, together with proposals to make it justiciable in the courts of Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the Hong Kong Government to introduce legislation in Hong Kong. We are not aware that the Hong Kong Government at present have any intention to introduce such legislation.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the question of timing of direct elections in Hong Kong since the publication of the White Paper on 10 February.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Kampuchea

17. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: We are in touch with various Governments and individuals about our policy towards Cambodia. This policy is clear. We seek the withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces from Cambodia and a settlement which would allow the Cambodian people to determine their own future, free from outside interference, through free and fair elections.

20. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new steps the United Kingdom Government have taken to encourage the peace process in Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: Our policy remains as set out in my speech during the Adjournment debate on Cambodia on 21 January.

Austria

18. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications his Department has had with the Austrian Government about Anglo-Austrian relations.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department maintains necessary contacts with the Austrian Government appropriate to maintaining relations between our two states.

83. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a further statement on the current state of relations between the United Kingdom and Austria.

Mrs. Chalker: Relations between the United Kingdom and Austria are good and reflect the common interests of our Governments and peoples.

Falkland Islands

19. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from other Governments concerning the forthcoming training exercise in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: A number of Governments in the region have expressed concern about the exercise; we have made absolutely clear that it is a routine exercise, and an integral part of our policy to maintain minimal troop levels in the Falklands as a contribution to reducing tension in the South Atlantic region.

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Port Stanley, to discuss political developments in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to visit Port Stanley.

37. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the governor of the Falkland Islands; and what was discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend saw the governor of the Falkland Islands in London on 28 January 1988. They reviewed recent political and economic developments in the islands and the outlook for the future.

South Africa

21. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have recently made concerning the trial in South Africa of Moses Mayekiso and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We made representations on Mr. Mayekiso's behalf in July and December 1986, while he was detained without charge. Now that charges have been laid and the trial has begun, it would not be right for us to make further representations at present. We are following the proceedings closely.

27. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will consider withdrawing any existing sanctions made against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told my hon. Friend on 21 January 1987, at column 595, the restrictive measures we have adopted are designed to bring home to the South African Government the urgent need for fundamental, peaceful change. Regrettably they is no sign at present that they are prepared to take the steps needed to bring about such change.

31. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of South Africa regarding the death sentences on the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: After their appeals had been dismissed in December 1987, the German ambassador made an appeal for clemency on behalf of the European Community. We also supported a statement issued on behalf of the United Nations Security Council urging the South African Government to commute the death sentences on the six. We have since reiterated our serious concern direct to the South African Government.

57. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of the Republic of South Africa regarding the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: After their appeals had been dismissed in December 1987, the German ambassador made an appeal for clemency on behalf of the European Community. We also supported a statement issued on behalf of the United Nations Security Council urging the South African Government to commute the death sentences on the Six. The British ambassador has since reiterated our serious concern direct to the South African Government.

European Council

23. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the European Council meeting in Brussels on 11 to 13 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have received representations about the European Council in Brussels on 11-13 February other than questions raised by hon. Members in the House. The results of the Brussels Council confirmed by the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 February represent a very sound outcome for the United Kingdom.

CND (Representations)

24. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the Washington summit of December 1987.

Mr. Mellor: We have received no direct representations from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the Washington summit of December 1987.

Disarmament Negotiations (Geneva)

25. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Geneva in connection with arms negotiations being conducted there.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit Geneva in connection with arms control talks. We, along with our NATO partners, receive regular briefings from the United States on the progress in the US/Soviet nuclear arms negotiations. The United Kingdom delegation at the conference on disarmament is playing an active role in the negotiations to ban chemical weapons.

Ethiopia

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations with Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development visited Ethiopia from 7 to 10 January, when he announced the allocation of an additional 40,000 tonnes of food aid. With this allocation our contribution to the current famine relief effort, including our share of the European Community relief programme, now totals over £36 million.

My hon. Friend also used his visit to underline to Ethiopian Ministers the importance we attach to changes in their agricultural policies, and to our great concern about the continuing detention of political prisoners. We, together with our European partners, will continue to urge progress towards a peaceful solution of the internal conflicts in Ethiopia, which are causing great hardship and impeding the international relief effort.

Israel (PLO Assassinations)

28. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the assassinations in Cyprus of three members of the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Nicaragua

29. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the United Kingdom's relations with Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 4 November, at column 726. The United Kingdom has normal diplomatic relations with Nicaragua.

41. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to pay an official visit to Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit Nicaragua.

66. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any further plans to expand United Kingdom diplomatic representations in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: A third United Kingdom-based diplomatic service officer was posted to Managua in February, to act as pro consul. We have no plans to expand our mission further at this time.

UNCHR (Special Rapporteurs)

30. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries currently have a special rapporteur appointed by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Eggar: The 43rd session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights decided in March 1987 to renew the mandates, for a further year in each case, of its special rapporteurs on Afghanistan and Chile and its special representatives on El Salvador and Iran. The 44th session now in progress (1 February to 11 March) will decide whether or not to extend these mandates again.

33. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reappointment of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights' special rapporteurs on Chile and El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We shall be supporting the renewal of the mandate of the special rapporteur on Chile. In the case of El Salvador, we shall consider our policy carefully with our European Community partners once a draft resolution has appeared.

54. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government supported the appointment of a United Nations rapporteur on human rights in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We voted in favour of the establishment of the mandate of the United Nations special representative on El Salvador at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in 1981. We shall consider how to vote in this year's commission once we have discussed the resolution with our European Community partners.

Disarmament, Security and Confidence Building Conferences

34. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on recent progress at current disarmament, security and confidence building conferences.

Mr. Mellor: Progress in negotiations on a final document at the CSCE Vienna meeting remains slow. But we remain determined to secure a substantial and balanced outcome on all issues, including confidence and security building measures.

Reasonable progress is being made in the conventional stability discussions in Vienna. We hope that early agreement on a mandate can be reached and that substantive negotiations can begin later this year.

Negotiations on chemical weapons at the conference on disarmament at Geneva have made progress. But many complex issues remain. The bilateral talks between the United States and Soviet Union at the Geneva nuclear and space talks are continuing. United States and Russian negotiators are also meeting to discuss nuclear testing; steady progress has been made during the first phase of negotiations aimed at ratifying the threshold test ban and peaceful nuclear explosions treaties.

Jordan

35. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Jordanian relations.

Mr. Mellor: Relations between the United Kingdom and Jordan are excellent. We maintain a close dialogue with King Hussein and his Government on a wide range of issues of mutual interest.

Turks and Caicos Islands

36. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the elections in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Mr. Eggar: Elections are due to take place in the Turks and Caicos Islands tomorrow, 3 March.

USSR (Ministerial Visit)

38. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during his recent discussions in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, he raised the subject of telecommunications and interference with international radio broadcasts.

Mr. Mellor: No. Jamming of the BBC vernacular services to the Soviet Union has ceased. We hope that the Soviet Union will take steps to end all jamming and will continue to make our views known in appropriate fora. My right hon. and learned Friend took the opportunity of his visit to press the need for greater access by Western media to the Soviet public, for example through free circulation of newspapers.

78. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent trip to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend had full and wide-ranging talks with Mr. Gorbachev, Mr. Shevardnadze and others covering bilateral matters including trade, arms control, human rights and regional issues. He also met human rights activists and was able to put our views directly to the Soviet public in their press and on television. The visit was a further contribution to our active dialogue wth the Soviet leadership and to the improving atmosphere of East-West relations.

Mozambique

39. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of South Africa concerning the situation in Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: We repeatedly urge the South African Government to exercise restraint and respect the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of neighbouring countries. I made these points to the South African Deputy Foreign Minister during a stop-over on the way to Mozambique in November. We have since reiterated our concerns.

El Salvador

40. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to visit El Salvador, to discuss human rights.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit El Salvador. Her Majesty's embassy in San Salvador monitors the human rights situation closely.

42. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the position of British volunteers working at the Calle Real camp in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires in San Salvador has visited the British volunteers at Calle Real and reports that they are well.

61. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to pay an official visit to El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to visit El Salvador.

European Political Co-operation

43. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting he recently attended on European political co-operation.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has met his colleagues from the Twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters on 8 February. The Twelve issued a statement expressing concern about the situation in the Occupied Territories, reaffirming support for an international conference, and welcoming recent efforts to inject new impetus into the search for a negotiated settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. They had a separate meeting on this subject with His Majesty King Hussein of Jordan.

The Twelve also exchanged views on East-West relations, Central America and Southern Africa. They approved the seventh synthesis report on the application of the code of conduct by Community companies with subsidiaries in South Africa, which has been forwarded to the European Parliament. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Central America

44. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a settlement of the outstanding conflicts in Central America.

Mr. Eggar: We urge all the Central Americans to fulfil all their outstanding obligations under the Guatemala accord immediately, especially those relating to democratisation.

51. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to visit Nicaragua to discuss the political situation in Central America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to visit Nicaragua. Her Majesty's embassies in Central America monitor the political situation in the region closely. I discussed the situation in Central America with EC/Central America/Contadora representatives at the meeting in Hamburg 29 February-1 March (San Jose IV).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards Arias' peace proposals for Central America in the light of the recent initiatives taken by the Nicaraguan Government.

Mr. Eggar: We fully support the Guatemala agreement which aims to achieve a peaceful, negotiated solution to the problems of Central America. We urge the Nicaraguan Government to fulfil without delay the commitments made at the Central American Presidents' summit on 15 January, and to comply with the obligation in the Guatemala accord to introduce full democratic freedoms.

Third World Debt

45. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other Foreign Ministers regarding Third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I regularly meet our counterparts from other countries. Debt is often discussed, particularly with the Foreign Ministers of debtor nations and of major creditor nations.

Cambodia

46. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy with regard to the participation of the Khmer Rouge in any future Cambodian Government.

Mr. Eggar: We withdrew recognition from the Pol Pot regime in December 1979 and have no intention of contributing to its re-establishment. We believe that free and fair elections based on United Nations principles offer the best guarantee that the Khmer Rouge does not dominate any future Cambodian Government.

Hungary

47. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he plans to seek to meet the Prime Minister of Hungary to discuss Anglo-Hungarian relations.

Mr. Mellor: The Prime Minister of Hungary has been invited to visit Britain. We expect the visit to take place in the first half of this year. We look forward to a thorough discussion of bilateral relations, as well as of international topics.

NATO/Warsaw Pact

48. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conventional arms imbalance between North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Mellor: According to our estimates, Warsaw pact conventional forces in Europe outnumber those of the Alliance in all major areas of combat capability: they have over three times as many tanks and artillery pieces; and almost twice as many combat aircraft.

UNESCO

49. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has received regarding British membership of UNESCO.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

50. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he expects further signatories to the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do all we can to persuade non-signatories to adhere to the treaty.

Turkey

52. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any recent discussions with the Turkish Government regarding the withdrawal of its troops from Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: During his official visit to Britain last July my right hon. and learned Friend and I made clear to the then Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr. Halefoglu, our view that his Government should reduce the number of their troops in Cyprus. we continue to press this view on the Turkish Government at every opportunity.

53. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to discuss Turkey's accession to the European Economic Community with his counterparts in the Community.

Mrs. Chalker: Turkey's application to join the European Community has been referred to the EC Commission, which is preparing its opinion. The European Community Council of Ministers will consider Turkey's application once that opinion is available and it has had the opportunity to study it.

82. Mr. Stokes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support Turkey's application for membership of the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Chalker: Turkey's application to join the European Community has been referred to the European Commission, which is preparing its opinion. It would not be appropriate to express a view on the application until that opinion is available.

South-east Asia

55. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit the countries of south-east Asia.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to visit the region again in due course. Announcements will be made as and when appropriate.

Foreign Affairs Council

56. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made at the Foreign Affairs Council meeting on 22 and 23 February towards finalising the package of stabilisers foreseen in the European Community communiqué from Brussels.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 24 February, at column 209.

Cyprus

58. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he or his colleagues have to meet the new President of Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have any immediate plans to meet Mr. Vassiliou, who was elected on 21 February and assumed office on 28 February.

70. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest events in Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the election of Mr. Vassiliou on 21 February, we hope the United Nations Secretary-General's new permanent special representative will be able to make early progress towards the just and lasting settlement which we all wish to see.

Middle East

59. Mr. Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on further initiatives aimed at making progress for a middle east peace settlement.

75. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards an international conference on the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome recent efforts to give new impetus to the search for a negotiated settlement of the Arab/Israel conflict. We and our European partners strongly support an international conference as the suitable framework for negotiations between the parties directly concerned.

81. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assistance he has given to the proposal for a peace conference initiated by Mr. Shimon Peres and King Hussein.

Mr. Mellor: We are in close contact with both King Hussein and with Mr. Peres. We believe that an international conference can provide a suitable framework for negotiations between the parties directly concerned.

USSR (Human Rights)

60. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what success the Government have had in persuading the Soviet Union to alter its policy on human rights and emigration.

Mr. Mellor: We have established human rights as an important element in our bilateral dialogue with the Soviet authority and their agreement to regular official consultations on the subject will take this process further. We have been encouraged by increases in emigration figures and the release of some political prisoners during the past year but will continue to press for further progress, including the repeal of repressive legislation.

USSR (Conventional Forces)

62. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during his discussions with Soviet leaders in Moscow in February, any representations were made as to the need for a reduction in Soviet conventional forces in Eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In his talks with Soviet leaders, my right hon. and learned Friend underlined the urgent need for a reduction in Soviet conventional forces in Europe, leading to a stable and secure balance at a lower level of forces. He also stressed the need to eliminate massive Soviet conventional superiority in a speech published in the Soviet press.

Acid Rain (Norway)

63. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Norwegian Government regarding the problem of acid rain.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain close contact at all levels with the Norwegian Government on a range of environmental issues including acid rain.

Israel

64. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the activities of their armed forces in the occupied territories.

Mr. Mellor: We have made clear to the Israeli authorities—both in bilateral contacts and in demarches with our European partners — our view that Israel should refrain from repressive measures which violate international law and human rights standards.

United Kingdom-Soviet Trade

65. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he held on current levels of United Kingdom-Soviet trade during his recent visit to the USSR.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend had a very constructive meeting with Mr. Kamentsev, Deputy Prime Minister and Chairman of the State Foreign Economic Commission, and also touched on this question in his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev. Both sides reaffirmed their commitment to achieving the goal of a 40 per cent. increase in trade by 1990 and my right hon. and learned Friend was able to draw attention to a number of major contracts for which British companies are bidding.

NATO (Naval Arms Control)

67. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in NATO countries about naval arms control proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has regular discussions on all aspects of arms control with his NATO colleagues.

Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction Talks

69. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent progress at the mutual and balanced force reduction talks.

Mr. Mellor: I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 21 October last year, at column 766.

West Bank

72. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation on the West Bank.

Mr. Mellor: The situation remains tense. We advise those proposing to travel to the occupied territories to postpone their journey if possible. We deeply deplore the repressive measures taken by Israel and call on all parties to exercise maximum restraint, in order to reduce the dangerous level of tension.

EC (Foreign Policy)

73. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting our colleagues from the Twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters at an informal weekend meeting on 5-6 March.

Arab-Israeli Dispute

74. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support American efforts aimed at breaking the impasse in the Arab/Israeli dispute.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome United States efforts to give new impetus to the search for peace and keep in close touch with the United States Administration on this issue. The Prime Minister discussed this with Mr. Shultz yesterday.

Semyon Skalych

76. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Soviet Government the continued imprisonment of Semyon Skalych, a Ukranian sentenced to 15 years imprisonment for writing anti-Soviet poetry.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of Soviet prisoners of conscience such a Semyon Skalych. My right hon. and learned Friend drew attention to their plight most recently during talks with the Soviet Foreign Minister in Moscow on 15 February.

United Nations Commission on Human Rights

77. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he visited the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Eggar: I addressed the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on 18 February. Copies of my speech have been placed in the Library. This was my second annual visit to the commission.

Fiji

79. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the status of the United Kingdom's diplomatic representation in Fiji.

Mr. Eggar: With effect from yesterday, we have been represented in the Republic of Fiji by Her Majesty's ambassador. Until that date, his title was high commissioner, the customary title for heads of mission in Commonwealth countries. The change of title does not affect diplomatic status.

Angola

80. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his recent discussions in Moscow covered possible moves to secure a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed Southern Africa briefly with Mr. Shevardnardze in Moscow.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent contact he has had with the Government of Iran with regard to the Iran and Iraq conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have intermittent contact at official level with representatives of the Iranian Government in London and at the United Nations in New York. The Iran/Iraq conflict is naturally one of the issues discussed.

Baltic Peoples

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions have been given to the United Kingdom representative to the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on its response to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe's resolution 872 (1987) on the situation of the Baltic peoples; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We were pleased to note that the resolution generally accorded with our policy. We have not recognised de jure the incorporation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania into the Soviet Union, because of the way in which it was carried out.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United States Government's proposal on United States carrier access to Manchester airport was received by the British embassy in Washington; and when it was sent by the embassy to the Department of Transport in London.

Mr. Eggar: The United States Government's proposal was received by the British embassy at 10 am local time (15:00 GMT) on Friday 19 February and transmitted to the Department of Transport at 11.40 am local time (16:40 GMT) the same day.

TRANSPORT

Isle of Wight (Medical Evacuation)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the tender for search and rescue helicopters for the sea area Wight will include provision for supplying medical evacuation from the Isle of Wight at the request of the district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Arrangements for medical evacuation are the responsibility of the district health authority, which can let contracts for the supply of air ambulances or other means of fast transport. The Department's contract helicopter is being provided to meet the needs of maritime and aviation search and rescue arising in a wide area in the central English Channel. It will be possible for it to be made available, at the discretion of Her Majesty's Coastguard, to meet very urgent evacuation needs.

Bus Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide statistics on the number of shire counties providing increased support for bus services since deregulation and the total cost thereof.

Mr. David Mitchell: Twenty shire counties have budgeted to spend on bus revenue support a total of about £5 million more (in cash terms) in 1987-88 than they did in 1985-86.

The other counties have budgeted to spend in total £12·6 million less.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that regions north of London are able to benefit fully from the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: The opening of the Channel tunnel will make it possible for British Rail to provide through passenger and freight services between regional destinations and the continent. Section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act requires BR to publish a plan by the end of 1989 setting out its proposals for international rail services through the tunnel. It will be consulting widely with interested parties in the regions in the preparation of this plan.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on any proposals by British Rail for the provision of through services to the north and north-west using the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: None as yet. British Rail will be setting out its proposals for Channel tunnel through services to the regions in the plan it is required to publish by the end of 1989 under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act. BR will be consulting widely with interested parties in the regions over the preparation of this plan.

EMPLOYMENT

"Training for Employment"

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning his recent White Paper "Training for Employment", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses have so far been received to the White Paper on "Training for Employment"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The White Paper sets out the Government's plans for securing continuing reductions in unemployment and for sustaining jobs growth. It calls upon employers, individuals and trade unions to play their part, in particular to equip longer-term unemployed people for the jobs which the economy is generating.

We believe that the soundness of the approach set out in the White Paper is widely recognised. The Secretary of State has as yet received no specific representations about the Government's plans following the White Paper.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what would be the gross and net annual costs of doubling the premiums over benefit on the proposed new training for employment programme.

Mr. Cope: The Government have accepted the recommendations of the Manpower Services Commission about the level of training allowances which will apply from the time the new programme comes into operation in September 1988. If in all cases the lead over benefit were to be double that recommended by the commission, the additional gross costs in a full year would be about £180 million.

The training allowance as recommended by the Manpower Services Commission will not be subject to income tax or national insurance contributions. The net cost of increasing it would depend on the tax and national insurance arrangements.

Skill Shortages (Construction Industry)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the construction industry.

Mr. Cope: The strength of our economy means that some employers are finding it more difficult to meet some of their skill needs through recruitment. But employers can influence the supply of skills they need by providing the proper incentives for individuals to acquire the right skills and experience and by making the necessary investment in training.

The Government have given a lead by more than doubling their investment in vocational education and training since 1979, especially through two-year YTS for school leavers and now, the new £1·4 billion training programme to provide unemployed adults with the skills which today's jobs demand. Last year the Construction Industry Training Board provided an action plan to increase CITB managed YTS places by 2,000, other YTS places by 1,000 and to provide an extra 1,000 places for adult trainees. The Manpower Services Commission also has programmes to encourage employers to recognise and meet their own training needs and make the necessary provision. Under the engineering science and technology initiative programme more resources have also been made available to increase relevant higher education opportunities in those fields.

Small Businesses

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about his Department's commitment to the future development of small business and the enterprise culture.

Mr. Cope: This Department has specific responsibility for the Government's policies towards small firms. It is our aim to ensure that the strong growth of enterprise and the small firms sector continues, with the assistance of the small firms service, the enterprise allowance scheme and other support from this Department.

VAT Registrations

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of new value added tax registrations in 1987 and the consequences for his policy on small firms.

Mr. Cope: During 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the number of businesses registered for VAT in the United Kingdom increased by 29,000. The number of registrations was 193,000 and of deregistrations 164,000. Overall, since 1979 the number of registered businesses has increased on average by 500 a week. This is a remarkable record and a clear demonstration of the resurgence of the small firms sector in the United Kingdom.

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest adjusted and unadjusted figures and percentages for unemployment in Waveney; and if he will give the equivalent figures for a year ago on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. On the 14 January 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Waveney local authority area was 5,164. The corresponding figure for January 1987 was 6,507.

Seasonally adjusted unemployment figures are not available below regional level. Also unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Ventilation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what policy initiations he proposes to take in the area of health and safety at work, in the light of the report by Air Conditioning and Ventilation Analysis, a copy of which has been to sent him, about the incidence of poorly ventilated workplaces and contaminated air conditioning systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have not received a copy of the report referred to, but should be happy to do so and to consider the advice of the Health and Safety Executive in due course.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Isle of Wight (Electorate)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the 1988 electorate for the Isle of Wight constituency; and what is the 1988 quota for England.

Mrs. Currie: Figures relating to electoral registers which came into effect on 16 February 1988 will not be available centrally until April.

Colonoscopy Examination

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many colonoscopy examinations are carried out within the National Health Service each year; what proportion of these examinations reveal no disease; and what is the average cost to the National Health Service of these examinations.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Leicestershire District Health Authority

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the names and occupations of the members of the Leicestershire district health authority; and how many live in Leicestershire;

(2) if he will list the names and occupations of members of Trent regional health authority, showing how many live in Leicestershire.

Mrs. Currie: Information about members of the Leicestershire district health authority is not held centrally. They are appointed by Trent regional health authority and the appropriate local authorities. The hon. Member may therefore wish to seek this information from the chairman of Trent regional health authority.

The information requested about members of the regional health authority, two of whom live in Leicestershire, is as follows, with the exception of details about occupation which we do not systematically update:

Trent Regional Health Authority

Members
Mrs. J. Dady
Dr. R. A. A. R. Lawrence
Dr. P. F. J. Sewell
Dr. J. A. Birch
Mr. D. Brown
Professor R. E. Coupland
Professor R. Kilpatrick
Professor D. S. Monro
Mr. J. F. Pattison
Mrs. N. M. Collett
Councillor P. Gaul
Councillor A O'Brien
Mr. M. Varcoe
Mrs. J. Radford
Mr. M. F. Spungin
Mr. J. Thierry

At present there are three vacancies.

NHS Land Sales

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the proceeds from land sales by the National Health Service for each year from 1978-79.

Mrs. Currie: Proceeds from land sales by health authorities in England from 1978-79 have been as follows:

Year	Sale receipts £ million (to nearest £0·1 million)
1978-79	7·5
1979-80	10·0
1980-81	15·4
1981-82	19·4
1982-83	18·2
1983-84	31·5
1984-85	48·9
1985-86	82·9
1986-87	146·0
1987-88	[1]246·0

[1] Estimate.

Durham City Constituency (Electoral Roll)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage turnover in the electoral roll for the Durham city constituency between 1983 and the last year for which figures were available.

Mrs. Currie: Details of the numbers leaving or joining the register of electors in any year are not known centrally, except for the number of attainers[1]. The percentage change in the number of parliamentary electors and the total number of attainers joining the register for the city of Durham between 1983 and 1987, the latest available year, were as follows:

1983 register	1987 register	Percentage change 1983-87	Total number of attainers[1] 1983-87
67,770	67,363	−0·6	5,804

[1] A person who attains age 18 during the currency of the register.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what sum of money he plans to make available in 1988-89 to educate young people about the consequences of alcohol abuse.

Mrs. Currie: The Health Education Authority plans to commit approximately £400,000 of its central funds to alcohol education in 1988-89. This includes a grant to the Teachers Advisory Council on alcohol and drug education and expenditure on a number of activities particularly designed for young people.

Alcohol Concern, the national voluntary agency which has been awarded grant-aid of £500,000 for 1988-89, plans to undertake a number of alcohol education activities including initiatives for young people in collaboration with national youth organisations.

Pensionable Retirement

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any proposals to establish complete equality in age of pensionable retirement for men and women; and what is his latest estimate of the cost of such a proposal.

Mr. Scott: We are still considering all the options for change in pension age, including the question of equalisation. The cost of equal pension ages for men and women would depend on the age at which equalisation took place. Equalisation at 60 would cost over £3,000 million at 1985 benefit rates; at 63 about £800 million; and at 65 there would be a saving of about £500 million. All figures are net of effects on tax and other benefits, but exclude costs to employers who would be obliged under EC directive 86/378 to equalise pension ages in occupational schemes also.

Pensions

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the measures taken since 1979 to more closely approximate the state pension treatment of men and women.

Mr. Scott: Men and women who have paid full contributions throughout their working lives have had equal treatment since 1948. From 6 April 1979, the married women's half-test was abolished for women reaching age 60 on or after that date; the half-test was an additional contribution condition requiring married women to have paid full national insurance contributions in at least half the years between the date of their marriage and their retirement in order to receive a pension. The effect of the half-test for women reaching pension age before 6 April 1979 was abolished in the Social Security Act 1983 with effect from 22 December 1984. The Social Security Act 1985 also equalised the rate of pension payable to men, single women and married women entitled to a non-contributory category D pension.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications he has received in each of the years 1983 to 1988 for the treatment of a claim for supplementary benefit as a claim for (a) attendance allowance and (b) invalid care allowance in the Leeds metropolitan district council area; and how many such applications were successful in each of those years.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the requested information is not available. The information which is available is set out in the table.

Number of applications for supplementary benefit claims or other documents to be treated as claims for attendance allowance or invalid care allowance under the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1979 in Great Britain 1983-88.

Period	Applications made		Applications successful
	Attendance allowance	Invalid care allowance	Attendance allowance	Invalid care allowance
June 1983-December 1984[1]	590	59	190	52
1985	411	98	110	85
1986	164	80	29	76
1987	167	125	31	54
1988[2]	15	0	1	0

[1] Records were not kept before June 1983. This figure cannot be apportioned between the 1983 and 1984 calendar years.
[2] Up to 25 February.

Pocket Money

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in what situations his Department's regulations require children's pocket money to be taken into account when assessing a claimant's entitlement to benefit.

Mr. Scott: Any payment which an absent parent makes to a child whom he is liable to maintain is normally treated as income and taken into account in full in the assessment of supplementary benefit; such payments will similarly be taken into account under the rules for income support. However, the first £100 of any gift for an occasion, like a birthday, is ignored for supplementary benefit purposes. Under income support any payments made by way of gifts will be treated as capital except that any amount which exceeds in aggregate £250 in 52 weeks will be treated as income and taken into account in full.

Pocket money paid regularly to a child by a person who is not liable to maintain him or her is treated as a voluntary payment. Under supplementary benefit the first £4 a week is disregarded. From 11 April the disregard will increase to £5 a week under income support. Occasional payments of pocket money are normally treated as capital in supplementary benefit. In income support, the first £250 in any period of 52 weeks will be regarded as capital and any excess treated as income averaged over the number of weeks remaining in that year.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of his Department's staff are eligible for family income supplement.

Mr. Scott: Fewer than 300 staff in the Department are currently receiving family income supplement.

Widowed Fathers (Allowance)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce a widowed father's allowance in line with that of the widowed mother's allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to introduce a widowed father's allowance. Benefit is paid to widowed mothers because they have frequently been financially dependent on the deceased husband and would find difficulty in maintaining themselves and their children on widowhood. The same difficulties are not normally present for widowed fathers. The cost of introducing such an allowance would be about £35 million if based on the deceased wife's contributions; most of this would go to men already in full-time work. However, from 1989 a guaranteed minimum pension will be payable to widowed fathers whose wives were in contracted-out occupational pension schemes.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of losers as a result of changed housing benefit regulations to come into effect in April.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 18 December 1987 at columns 916-18.

Dental Estimates Board

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of the Dental Estimates Board in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The total cost of the Dental Estimates Board for England and Wales, in cash terms, in each of the last five years, together with the total gross fees authorised for payment to dentists by family practitioner committees, is given in the table; the total cost of the board as a percentage of the gross fees authorised is also shown.

Year	Cost of board £ million	Gross fees authorised £ million	Cost/gross fees per cent.
1982-83	10·788	549·741	1·962
1983-84	11·013	594·406	1·853
1984-85	11·751	649·785	1·808
1985-86	[1]14·686	671·600	2·189
1986-87	[2]14·530	753·096	1·929

Notes:
[1] Includes £2·519 million for replacement of the board's computer and early stages of computer redevelopment.
[2] Includes £1·999 million for computer redevelopment.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the unit cost of the Dental Estimates Board annual report for 1986-87, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The 1986-87 annual report of the Dental Estimates Board for England and Wales was, for the first time, in two parts.

The first part contains the board's report to the Secretaries of State and key statistics about the board's work and the general dental service. The unit cost was 99·6p. The cost of publication was met from efficiency savings at the board.

The detailed "Digest of Statistics for 1986-87", the second part of the board's report, is published as a separate document at a cost of £15 per copy.

Chiropodists

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to review the position of unqualified practising chiropodists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In the absence of general agreement between the professional associations concerned we have no plans for reviewing present statutory provisions governing the practice of chiropody.

Contraceptives

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement outlining the failure rates of condoms revealed by the different world studies referred to in the October 1987 edition of the "Prescribers Journal", published by his Department;

(2) what assessment he has made as to whether the background information on the failure rates of condoms used to establish a range of 2 to 15 per 100 women years in the "Prescribers Journal" of October 1987 can be used to establish an average failure rate for such contraceptive devices in the developed world;

(3) whether he will list, by order of frequency of failure, the failure rates of different contraceptive techniques referred to in the "Prescribers Journal" of October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The following table, ranking different contraceptive techniques by range of user failure rate, appeared in the "Prescriber's Journal" (Volume 27, Number 5, October 1987):

Table 1
User-failure rates for different methods of contraception/100 woman-years

[1] Excludes atypical studies giving particularly poor results, and all extended-use studies.

Notes
1. Ranking of efficacy, but overlap of ranges.
2. Influence of age: better results are obtained, for any given degree of compliance, in older women.

The user failure rate for condoms quoted in the table is based on a number of studies over the years in this country and abroad. It is thought to be a reasonable estimate of the position in the United Kingdom, bearing in mind that incorrect use is a significant factor. Because of this, and other variables such as age, experience or motivation of user, it would be misleading to present figures in terms of an average failure rate.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will review his policy on the promotion of the use of condoms as part of his safe sex campaign, in the light of the statement in The Lancet of 7 February, a copy of which has been sent to him, that in contraceptive use condoms have a failure rate of 13 to 15 per cent.;

(2) whether he will commission research into the statistical relationship between the failure rate of condoms in preventing the general exchange of body fluids and their failure rate when used as a contraceptive device; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to commission such research. A significant cause of failure in condoms is thought to be incorrect use. This was quoted as contributing to the failure rate range mentioned in the letter published in The Lancet on 7 February 1987. While it is important to ensure that condoms are of high quality and that there are clear instructions for use, the Government have stressed in their AIDS public education campaign that condoms only reduce the risk of disease transmission; they do not remove it.

Rabies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the United Kingdom have been immunised against rabies for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not available in the form requested. The number of doses of rabies vaccine supplied through the Department for distribution in England and Wales was as follows:

Year	Number
1980	2,280
1981	9,000
1982	8,000
1983	5,000
1984	5,000
1985	6,500
1986	6,000
1987	8,000

These supplies will have included initial and booster doses for those groups considered to be at special risk, for example, veterinary and technical staff of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and employees of animal quarantine premises, as well as to travellers returning to this country who might have been in contact with rabid animals.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of rabies or suspected rabies were recorded in the United Kingdom for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table.

Mr. J. H. Foster

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the chief adjudication officer has yet completed consideraton of the social security commissioner's decision of 20 February 1987 in respect of Mr. Joseph Hugh Foster of Birmingham.

Mr. Portillo: The chief adjudication officer has considered the commissioner's decision and concluded that no amendment to existing guidance is necessary.

Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district authority and special health authority (a) the outturn for 1986-87 and (b) the estimated outturn for 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: For outturn expenditure information by district for 1986-87 I refer the hon Member to appendix D of the Department's annual booklet "Health Authorities' Annual Accounts — National Summary (England)" — copies of which are held in the Library. Equivalent information for 1987-88 will not be available until the autumn.

The Department has not until recently routinely collected informaton on an income and expenditure basis in-year. The first routine monitoring of health authorities' spending on an income and expenditure basis will cover the period from 1 April to 30 June 1988 although this information is to be collected by region rather than by individual district health authorities.

Rating Reform

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is his intention that community charge payers entitled to a rebate will receive full reimbursement of the amount of the community charge in all local authority areas through income support or by some other form of relief; and what arrangements will be made in respect of claimants in households with variable incomes.

Mr. Scott: Rebates will be available in each local authority up to a maximum of 80 per cent. of community charge liability. Claimants whose incomes are equal to or below their income support levels will be entitled to the maximum rebate, and the entitlement of claimants with incomes above these levels will be calculated by the application of a taper. Income support rates will include an amount to help meet the 20 per cent. minimum community charge contribution, reflecting average community charge levels in Great Britain as a whole. Rebate entitlement will be assessed on the basis of the liablity, needs and resources of each individual or couple and will be reassessed when a claimant's circumstances change; it will not be assessed on the basis of the liabilities, needs and resources of households.

Ambulance Service (Privatisation)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify and provide details of what discussions and considerations are currently being undertaken within his Department with regard to its privatisation of the ambulance service or elements of it.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 February 1988]: We published a scrutiny report on the non-emergency sector of the ambulance service in April 1984 when we said that it was open to district health authorities to buy in part of the ambulance service from the private sector if that is more cost effective and provided the quality of service was maintained. Many NHS ambulance authorities already use private contractors, the hospital care service and voluntary aid societies to transport appropriate NHS patients. This has been the case for many years and helps to ensure that skilled ambulance crews, and specialist vehicles are used for those who need the special care and attention which they can provide.

The Government have no plans centrally for altering the future management or operational arrangements for NHS emergency or non-emergency ambulance services.

Eli Lilly

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the medicinal products made by Eli Lilly and its subsidiaries which currently have product licences from his Department; and if he will indicate which can be purchased without prescription.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The medicinal products requested are recorded in the following list, which does not indicate whether the products are currently available since marketing decisions are for the licence holder. Humulin and Nu-Seals aspirin are licensed for pharmacy sale without a prescription. All the other products listed are available only on prescription. It should be noted that a number of the products have varying strengths and dosage forms which each have separate product licences.

Invasive Carcinoma

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women are suffering from invasive carcinoma in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of new cases of malignant cancer in women recorded in England and Wales and in Scotland, in each of the last three years for which information is available, are given in the table.

Broadleaved Trees

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he is offering for set-aside schemes to involve the planting of broadleaf trees.

Mr. Gummer: The Community set-aside scheme agreed by the European Council on 15 February includes provision for land taken out of arable crop production to be used for woodland. As suggested in the consultation document issued earlier, this woodland option might in the United Kingdom be linked to the new farm woodland scheme which, if approved by Parliament, would offer special encouragement for broadleaved trees. I and my colleagues will be considering the point further in the light of the views that have been expressed and the detailed legislative texts on set-aside still to be agreed in Brussels.

Goats

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to respond to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's draft welfare code for goats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have asked interested organisations for their comments on the proposed code and will take these into account in preparing a final version. This should be laid before the House later this year.

New Zealand Butter

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made on European Commission Council of Agriculture Ministers discussions on post-1989 arrangements for New Zealand butter quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Commission has not yet made a proposal on the arrangements for the import of New Zealand butter from 1 January 1989.

Dairy Premises (Examinations)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will consider changing the system charges for examining dairy premises under the Milk and Dairies Hygiene Regulations from a fixed charge to one based on litres produced; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to ascertain whether an alternative to the present regime might offer a more cost-effective service for examining dairy premises under the Milk and Dairies Hygiene Regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has considered offering for competitive tender the examination of dairy premises under the Milk and Dairies Hygiene Regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 26 January, at column 175, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have arranged for a formal efficiency scrutiny to be carried out with the view to identifying possible economies in the way this work is done. The examining officer has wide terms of reference and he is therefore free to address the options suggested by the hon. Member: he is consulting interested organisations, including the Farmers Union of Wales. His report is due in May and his recommendations will then be carefully considered.

Milk

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will seek to secure for milk producers increases in the amount of milk they can produce without paying the super-levy on excess output similar to those increases recently agreed for producers in Belgium, France and West Germany; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the decision of the recent European Community summit in Brussels to ease rules governing milk quotas for producers in France, Germany and Belgium in order that they may produce extra milk without paying the super-levy on excess output.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In order to accommodate changes in the pattern of marketing EC legislation allows member states to seek approval from the Commission under management committee procedure for the transfer of specified quantities of quota between their direct sale and wholesale allocations. This is what was recently approved for France, Germany and Belgium and similar approvals have been given to other member states, including the United Kingdom, in the past. These transfers do not increase the total amount of quota allocated to any member state. I do not believe that such a transfer would be justified in the United Kingdom under present circumstances.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number of farmers in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) the United Kingdom whose earnings from agriculture in 1987 were (i) less than £4,000, (ii) between £4,000 and £5,000, (iii) between £5,000 and £6,000, (iv) between £6,000 and £7,000, (v) between £7,000 and £8,000, (vi) between £8,000 and £9,000, (vii) between £9,000 and £10,000, (viii) between £10,000 and £15,000 and (ix) over £15,000.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 1 March 1988]: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested, nor for 1987. The farm business survey does, however, allow estimates to be made of the proportional breakdown of farm businesses according to broad income band and information relating to the 1986-87 accounting year, ending on average in February 1987, is set out in the table.

Source: Farm Business Surveys

Notes:

(a) Figures are derived from data collected in farm business surveys by universities and agricultural colleges in Great Britain and by the Department of Agriculture in Northern Ireland. They relate to full-time farm businesses.

(b) Net farm income represents the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and on tenant-type capital in livestock, crops, machinery, and so on, but excluding land and buildings. It is calculated before the deduction of interest on any farming loans. All farms are treated as rented in the derivation of net farm income and an imputed rental value for owner-occupied land is charged as an expense in the accounts.

Environmental Research

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he is currently carrying out into environmental topics.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 1 March 1988]: Information on work in these areas is contained in the "Register of Government-Funded Agriculture/Environment R and D in the United Kingdom" produced by my Department, copies of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

New Forest (Keepers)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek a meeting with the Forestry Commission to discuss the rent strike by keepers of the New Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The rent strike is a management problem which falls to be dealt with internally by the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the average rent payable by and wage paid to keepers of the New Forest at the latest available date.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The average rent payable is £24·75 per week. The average gross weekly earnings of keepers are £177·31.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the level of rent presently being sought by the Forestry Commission from the keepers of the New Forest.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The commission is seeking an average "fair rent" of £24·75 per week from the keepers.

DEFENCE

Sovereign Bases (Cyprus)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots are employed at each of the two sovereign bases in the islands of Cyprus; and what lengths of the Dhekelia base boundary are common with (a) Turkish northern Cyprus and (b) Greek southern Cyprus.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some 857 Greek Cypriots are currently employed at the eastern sovereign base area (Dhekelia) and some 1,934 at the western sovereign base area (Akrotiri). 322 Turkish Cypriots are employed at Dhekelia.

The Dhekelia base boundary borders the UN buffer zone for about 3 miles, the Republic of Cyprus south of the buffer zone for about 23 miles, and the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus for about 27 miles.

3 Brigade

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost involved in rearranging the command structures within Northern Ireland and creating an operational area for 3 Brigade.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The extra costs associated with the formation of 3 Brigade are estimated to be about £17 million in 1988-89 and about £2 million to £3 million per annum thereafter.

Barron Report

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the conclusions and recommendations of the Barron report on defence land needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The so-called "Barron Report" was a technical assessment carried out within the headquarters of the United Kingdom land forces of the Army's present and future training needs, taking into account the increase in the TA and reserve forces and the considerable increase in weapon danger areas. Much of the detailed information in the study is classified and it cannot therefore be published. Since there appears to be a number of popular misapprehensions about the nature of this document, I am, however, prepared to give an outline of its general conclusions.

On the basis of the number of company weeks required to train each organisation and unit of the field army, the study concluded that there was currently a shortfall of between 580 and 900 company weeks of dry training each year, depending on the extent to which live firing areas were able to be used for some dry training. In order to meet this shortfall in full, the report estimated that approximately 50,000 additional acres of dry training land might be required overall, although much would depend on the topography of any additional land and the uses to which it could be put.

The report is not a statement of MOD policy and was not concerned with the ways in which additional land might be acquired, but, in the light of the clear evidence it provides of a significant shortfall in Army land for dry training, MOD will continue with its policy of seeking to acquire suitable land which may become available, particularly where this will allow us to extend an existing training area. Normal planning procedures will be followed in every case.

Foxhunter

Sir Antony Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the concept situation relative to negotiations with Marconi Defence Systems with respect to the Foxhunter radar system.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have now finalised our negotiations with Marconi Defence Systems on a programme of work to bring the radar up to the required standard. We have negotiated taut technical criteria, linked these to strict arrangements for relating payment to achievement, and agreed a firm price to cover the work. Formal contract signature will now proceed.

Departmental Houses

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's houses in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland have been declared surplus in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: I regret that the information requested is not available broken down by country. The total number of properities declared surplus in each year is as follows:

	Number
(a) Married Quarters [1,2]
15 January 1979 to 14 January 1980	1,618
15 January 1980 to 14 January 1981	2,161

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to respond to the report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on fair employment in Northern Ireland (Cm. 237).

Mr. Tom King: I have today written to the chairman of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights giving the Government's response to the commission's report on fair employment and outlining our plans for new legislation in this field.

The Government are committed to ensuring that all employers in Northern Ireland positively practise equality of opportunity in employment. It is in the interests of all the people of Northern Ireland that there should be, and be seen to be, fair treatment for all.

I have today published an outline of the Government's proposals for legislation which have been drawn up after wide consultation with interested parties including employers' organisations and trade unions. Copies of the brochure, and of my letter to the chairman of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, have been placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office. I welcome this opportunity to acknowledge the contribution which the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights report has made.

The main features of our proposals are as follows. All employers in Northern Ireland will be required to practice equality of opportunity. All public sector employers, and all private sector employers with more than 10 employees, will be required to monitor the religious composition of their work force. Failure to do so will be a criminal offence. For a transitional period, the threshold in the private sector will be 25 employees. Employers who fail to meet their obligations will not normally be eligible for Government grants and contracts.

Employers will be enabled to undertake affirmative action programmes designed to give under-represented groups better access to employment and training opportunities. The Fair Employment Agency will be strengthened and restructured with its educational, promotional and investigative functions concentrated in a new Fair Employment Commission which will inherit the agency's assets, staff and experience. The commission will audit the monitoring returns compiled by employers registered with the commission, and it will investigate employment practice and patterns.

Individual complaints of alleged religious discrimination will be dealt with by a separate tribunal using the same sort of procedures as are already successfully used for employment matters in the existing industrial tribunal structure. In pattern and practice cases, the commission will be able to apply to the tribunal for an order of compliance if its directions are not obeyed.

We intend to publish a White Paper in the late spring, and new legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Civil Service (Article)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on why Mr. Robert Cooper, chairman of the Fair Employment Agency for Northern Ireland, has attempted to block publication of an article in the Journal of Social Policy, written by one of the agency's former consultants, that details how the original report of the agency's investigation of the Northern Irish Civil Service came to be altered by the Civil Service itself.

Mr. Stanley: This is a matter for the Fair Employment Agency, which is an autonomous body operating within the terms of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976 and independent of the Government.

Civil Service (Investigation)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the investigation of the Northern Irish Civil Service carried out by the Fair Employment Agency, as to why civil servants assisted in the investigations as specialists and why the original recommendations and conclusions of the report were altered; and if he will place copies of the reports of the original consultants in the Library.

Mr. Stanley: Matters connected with the preparation of reports arising from investigations under section 12 of the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1976 are the responsibility of the agency, subject to the provisions of that Act. Under Schedule 5 to the Act, the agency must afford those being investigated an opportunity to comment on the matters being investigated and to furnish oral or other evidence respecting them. The Civil Service, as it was fully entitled to do, responded to the opportunity which was thus afforded it.

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for what precise purpose the International Fund for Ireland investment company was established, with particular reference to the provision of venture capital for higher risk projects not likely to attract conventional sources of capital; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many projects in Northern Ireland have been allocated financial assistance from the International Fund for Ireland investment company and have (a) received direct grants and (b) received venture capital;

(3) what proportion of venture capital assigned to the International Fund for Ireland investment company has been set aside to assist new start-up projects; and how much to date has been allocated to new business projects;

(4) what evidence he has that projects appraised, approved, and supported by the Industrial Development Board are likely to attract support from the International Fund for Ireland investment company; and whether the International Fund for Ireland investment company has an in-house capability to assess projects.

Mr. Stanley: Under the terms of article 9 of the agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland, concerning the International Fund for Ireland, the board of the fund was enjoined to establish two investment companies, one in each part of Ireland, to identify the risk capital needs of existing or new industrial and commercial enterprises and to provide, on sound commercial criteria, equity capital or loans. The board of the fund has accordingly incorporated two subsidiary investment companies — IFI (Northern) Investments Ltd. and IFI (Southern) Investment Ltd. Although the board of the fund was appointed by the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland, it is independent of them. Accordingly, questions relating to the administration of the fund, including investment policy, are matters for the board of the fund and should be addressed to the chairman.

Housing Executive

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many architects are presently employed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and how many new housing starts are planned by the executive for 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by the chief executive that the total number of architectural staff employed at 31 December 1987 was 160. This figure is made up of 133 architects (including architectural technicians) 16 architect-planners and 16 landscape architects.

The information on new starts requested is not available for calendar years. However, the Housing Executive plans to let contracts for 1,500 new dwellings in the financial year 1988-89 and on the basis of the provisional allocations for housing in the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288), to sustain this level of new starts in each of the two following financial years.

National Parks

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to introduce national parks legislation for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to introduce national parks legislation in Northern Ireland as there is already provision in article 12 of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 for the designation of national parks.

Conservation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on conservation and utility management plans for (a) Strangford lough area in south Down and (b) Mournes area.

Mr. Needham: It is intended to declare the whole of the shores and parts of the islands in Strangford lough as areas of special scientific interest (ASSIs). The first ASSI has just been declared and declaration of the remainder will follow. The Department is in discussion with the Department of Agriculture with a view to bringing forward a proposal to designate a marine nature reserve in Strangford lough. The production of a comprehensive plan is seen as an integral part of the process of designation and subsequent management. The preparation of such a plan requires a research programme extending over at least a year to gather essential basic information.

The Department is currently engaged in consultations with all other Government Departments whose functions may affect the landscape and wildlife of the Mournes. This process will produce proposals which will be discussed with district councils and will lead to a co-ordinated statement of policies for the Mournes area of outstanding natural beauty. The overall objectives will be to conserve the natural beauty of the area, to promote its enjoyment by the public and to safeguard the interests of its residents.

Museums

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish a policy statement for museums in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Irish Museums Association in Ireland about the role of museums in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to provide funding for museums in Northern Ireland other than the Ulster museum.

Dr. Mawhinney: In addition to the Ulster museum, the Government provides funding for the Ulster folk and transport museum and the Ulster American folk park. To date it has not been possible to make available resources to other museums.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the budgetary allocation to museums in Northern Ireland in each of the financial years from 1982-83 to 1986-87 inclusive.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	Recurrent £	Capital £	Purchase grant £
Ulster Museum
1982-83	1,745,000	74,000	—
1983-84	1,800,000	181,000	—

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to identify victims of myalgic encephalomyelitis in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The diagnosis of this condition is a matter for the medical profession.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance has been made available to myalgic encephalomyelitis support groups in Northern Ireland to date; and if he plans to fund a professional regional worker in the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. Needham: An application from an myalgic encephalomyelitis support group for funding of a development officer is at present being considered along with other competing applications for grants by voluntary organisations. No previous requests for help by such groups have been made to the Department or the health and social services boards.

Young Children (Education)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of four-year-olds in Northern Ireland avails itself of (a) nursery education, (b) primary school education and (c) pre-school playgroup provision;

(2) what proportion of three-year-olds in Northern Ireland avails itself of (a) nursery education, (b) primary school education and (c) pre-school playgroup provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 24 February 1988, at column 190.

Young Children

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of (i) the three-year-old population and (ii) the four-year-old population in Northern Ireland are within families with (a) a single parent, (b) both parents unemployed and (c) the parents in receipt of family income supplement;

(2) what proportion of the population of Northern Ireland is under five years old: and what plans there are to introduce an under-fives initiative to Northern Ireland of the type operating in other regions;

(3) what financial or other, assistance is given to pre-school playgroups by (a) each health and social services board and (b) each education and library board;

(4) what is the current population of (a) four-year-olds and (b) three-year-olds in Northern Ireland;

(5) how many mother and toddler groups operate in Northern Ireland: and what financial, or other, assistance is offered to them, by the Department of Education and by the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 24 February 1988, at columns 189-90.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 675, if he will institute a review of the command structure of Royal Ulster Constabulary headquarters mobile support units with a view to assessing the adequacy of the accountability systems operating within them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: These matters fall within the operational responsibility of the Chief Constable, but, as my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement on 17 February, he has accepted in principle all the recommendations of the McLachlan report, including those designed to ensure the highest standard in the selection of training of members of the special branch; the prevention of overspecialisation; the encouragement of cross-posting both within the RUC and with other police forces; and the further integration of the branch with the other parts of the force.

In addition, as my right hon. Friend said, Mr. McLachlan stresses that the regional assistant chief constables are now aware of the operations of the special branch within their respective areas, and re-emphasises the importance of their continuing to monitor them.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether those patients who have been given a date for admission to hospital are included in the general waiting list; how many patients are currently on the general waiting list in all hospitals in Northern Ireland; and how many patients have been given a date for admission.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 March 1988]: General waiting lists include those patients who have been given a date for admission to hospital. At 30 September 1987, there were 25,625 awaiting admission to all hospitals in Northern Ireland.

Information on the number of these patients who have been given a date for admission could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 3 March 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Derbyshire (ex-Chief Constable)

Mr. Benn: To ask the Attorney-General when he received a report from the Director of Public Prosecutions following the investigations conducted into the affairs of the former chief constable of Derbyshire, Mr. Parish; and what recommendations were made to the Director of Public Prosecutions by the West Mercia police and the Derbyshire constabulary.

The Attorney-General: I have received no report from the Director of Public Prosecutions concerning Mr. Parish. The contents of reports submitted by the police to the Director are confidential.

Labour Party (Red Cross Emblem)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the Director of Public Prosecutions to conclude consideration of the use by the Labour party of the Red Cross emblem on a party political leaflet; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Police inquiries into this matter are continuing. The Director will reach his decision after those inquiries have been completed and a full report has been submitted to him.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what new sanctions for bad behaviour have been introduced into schools since the abolition of corporal punishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: None. Corporal punishment was but one of several sanctions available to head teachers and governing bodies, who are responsible for disciplinary policy and practice within their individual schools. Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on good behaviour and discipline, published last year, gives schools guidance of best practice.

RRS Frederick Russell

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he intends to take to compensate for the withdrawal of the RRS Frederick Russell from service.

Mr. Jackson: It is for the Natural Environment Research Council to decide its scientific priorities within the total funds at its disposal. I understand from the NERC that the loss of the RRS Frederick Russell will in part be compensated for by the use of the replacement vessel for the RRS John Biscoe when it is not engaged on Antarctic duties and in part by the use of other countries' research vessels through bilateral arrangements. The replacement for the RRS John Biscoe is expected to enter service in 1990.

Education Reform Bill

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision will be made for circumstances where, under the terms of the Education Reform Bill, local authorities become liable to pay compensation or legal costs where governors of schools with financial delegation have in good faith contravened statutory or contractual requirements, including the provisions of the Race Relations, Sex Discrimination and Employment Protection Acts, and collective agreements with trades unions.

Mr. Dunn: In so far as such costs relate to dismissal of staff, the Bill provides that the local education authority shall meet them outside the school's delegated budget unless it has good reason for deducting them from that budget. For other cases it would be a matter to be settled as part of the operation of schemes of financial delegation whether such costs were to be met outside the school's delegated budget or could be deducted from that budget.

Consultancy (Higher Education)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many tenders were sought and received for his Department's consultancy with Tyzack and Partners on higher education corporation governing bodies.

Mr. Jackson: The Department invited three firms to submit proposals for consultancy on the membership of higher education corporations. Proposals were received from two of these.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost to public funds of the employment of Tyzack and Partners as consultants to advise his Department on the composition of higher education corporation governing bodies.

Mr. Jackson: The contract is for the sum of £50,000, exclusive of VAT.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for safeguarding the independence of universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have no wish to see the proper freedoms of universities and polytechnics eroded. Universities' and polytechnics' substantial reliance on public funds means that the interests of the taxpayer have to be taken into account alongside desirable institutional autonomy. The right balance is being explored in debate during the Education Reform Bill's parliamentary passage.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional staff will be recruited by the London residuary body in the event of the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Most of the executive work of the London residuary body in respect of the Inner London education authority will take place at a stage when the body's work arising from the abolition of the Greater London council has largely ceased. The question whether additional staff will need to be recruited will be considered at the appropriate stage.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Merchant Navy Reserve (Bounty)

Mr. Barry Field : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the new bounty proposed for the Merchant Navy Reserve is to be treated in the same way as the bounty paid to the Territorial Army and be free of tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax position of the proposed bounty for members of the Merchant Navy Reserve cannot be settled until the precise obligations of reservists, which give rise to the payment, have been established. I understand these are currently under detailed consideration.

Income Tax

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further research he intends to commission into the correlation between cutting the higher rates of income tax and the work effort and efficiency of those affected.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has no plans to commission any research on this subject.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income tax will be paid in the present financial year (a) by a married man with two children earning £100,000 a year, (b) by a single man with no dependants earning £100,000 a year, (c) by a married man with two children earning £25,000 a year, (d) by a single man with no dependants earning £25,000 a year, (e) by a married man with two children earning £7,500 a year and (f) by a single man with no dependants earning £7,500 a year, in each case assuming no other income and no allowances other than personal allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is in the table:

Income tax liability, 1987-88

Annual earnings £	Single man £	Married man £
7,500	1,370·25	1,000·35
25,000	6,811·75	6,195·25
100,000	50,203·00	49,381·00

The calculations assume that the man's earnings are his only source of income and that he has no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance. The number of children in a family does not affect the tax liability.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for levels of gross domestic product per capita in each of the United Kingdom regions.

Mr. Major: Provisional figures for gross domestic product per capita by standard region are available on page 86 of Economic Trends, November 1987, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The figures are as shown:

Gross domestic product per head (£), factor cost: current prices:

	1986[2]
North	5,142
Yorkshire and Humberside	5,215
East Midlands	5,378
East Anglia	5,643
South East	6,575
South West	5,380
West Midlands	5,069
North West	5,232
Wales	4,795
Scotland	5,234
Northern Ireland	3,889
United Kingdom[1]	5,597

[1] Excluding the Continental Shelf region.
[2] Provisional.

Manufacturing Investment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest projections for the growth of manufacturing investment in each of the regions of England, Wales and Scotland and the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Major: Official projections for individual regions do not exist. The Department of Trade and Industry's latest investment intentions survey, published in December 1987, projected a rise of 11 per cent. in United Kingdom manufacturing investment in 1988.

Interest Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the real level of interest rates in the United Kingdom, West Germany and Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: There is no unique measure of "real" interest rates. But the OECD's monthly publication "Main Economic Indicators" gives various interest rates and price indices for OECD countries.

Local Authorities

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total central Government revenue is given to local authorities.

Mr. Major: 20·5 per cent. The February 1988 edition of CSO's financial statistics shows that in 1986-87 (the latest full year available) current and capital grants from central Government amounted to £22,831 million out of a total Consolidated Fund revenue of £111,211 million.

Tax Matters (Convention)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take on the joint Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and Council of Europe convention on mutual administration assistance in tax matters, which was opened for signature on 25 January.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have already undertaken to consult widely among interested parties before reaching a decision on whether the United Kingdom should sign this convention and, if so, with what reservations. I have therefore asked the Inland Revenue to seek the views of the representative bodies which have expressed an interest in this matter, including the C B I and representative bodies of the accountancy and legal professions. We will be glad to consider any views which any other interested party may wish to express. Comments should be sent by the end of September. An Inland Revenue press release issued today gives further details.

Privatisation Sales (Advertising)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the cost to the Government of advertising in each of the privatisation sales since British Telecom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost to the Government of corporate and flotation advertising and advertising agency fees, exclusive of VAT, for each privatisation and residual share sale from British Telecom onwards is as follows:

	£ million
British Telecom	9·7
Britoil	3·0
Cable and Wireless	2·2
British Aerospace	1·7
British Gas	21·4
British Airways	2·8
Rolls-Royce	1·6
BAA	4·9
British Petroleum	18·3

This reply replaces that given to the hon. Member for Dunfermline East on 18 January, which did not treat each sale on a consistent basis and also contained inaccuracies.

Charities

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the procedures for registering charities in Scotland by the Inland Revenue, in the light of the 16th report of the Public Accounts Committee on the registration of charities in England and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 1 March 1988]: There is no system of public registration of charities in Scotland. The Inland Revenue deals with claims to the tax exemptions available to bodies established for charitable purposes, on the same basis as it does elsewhere in the United Kingdom. Questions on general matters affecting charities in Scotland are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Taxpayers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what regional information is available on numbers and percentages of taxpayers on 50 per cent., 75 per cent., 100 per cent., 150 per cent., 200 per cent., 500 per cent., 700 per cent., 1000 per cent. and 2000 per cent. of average earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The table, based on the survey of personal incomes for 1985-86, shows the number of single people and married couples liable to tax on their total income and where the main source of income is pay. The ranges of annual pay shown in the table (of the husband in the case of married couples), are based on average full-time male weekly earnings in 1985-86 of about £198. Neither part-time nor part-year employees can be distinguished; thus those having average weekly earnings whilst in employment but working for less than half the year will be included in the less than 50 per cent. range. Pay will in some cases include taxable unemployment benefits or statutory sick pay. I regret that reliable information for the highest ranges of earnings requested is not available.

Rating Valuations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the terms of reference given to the interdepartmental group of the Board of Inland Revenue and the Scottish Session which is examining differences between English and Scottish assessors' valuation practice for rating purposes; when this group was set up; how many members it has; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 February 1988]: A steering committee on harmonising rating valuation practice in England and Wales and Scotland was set up in 1986. It comprises the executive of the Scottish Assessors' Association and an official from Inland Revenue valuation office. In addition, there are four working groups on individual aspects of harmonisation. There are no formal terms of reference and the exercise will not lead to a formal report or document for publication. However, it is hoped that the groups' observations will lead to proposals to reduce differences in valuation practice during and after 1990.

Taxable Income

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the manner of his answer of 18 January, Official Report, columns 473-74, he will estimate the effect of a one-earner, two-child family, of introducing a reduced rate band of 20 per cent. on (a) the first £1,000, (b) the first £1,500, (c) the first £1,750, and (d) the first £2,000 of taxable income; and if he will estimate the full year costs, at 1988-89 incomes, of each measure.

Mr. Norman Lamont (holding answer 19 February 1988]: The table shows the gain from each of the reduced rate bands for a married man whose wife does not work and the full year costs at 1988-89 income levels of each measure. The calculation of the gain assumes that the taxpayer has sufficient income to receive the full benefit from each reduced rate band. The cost of each reduced rate band has been calculated by comparison with the 1987-88 income tax regime indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula. It has been assumed that separate reduced rate bands are available to both husband and wife where the wife has earnings.

Third World

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the totals of profits and dividends from outward investment repatriated to the United Kingdom from the Third world and to the Third world from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 February 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 4 November 1987 at column 752.

THE ARTS

Book Lending

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to charge for basic book-lending at libraries.

Mr. Luce: No. As I have said in my recently published Green Paper, the Government's objectives are to preserve and support the provision at public expense of the free basic book-lending and reference services of public libraries. Within this context, I also want to encourage library authorities to expand their sources of revenue so as to provide their customers with better and more client-oriented and cost-effective services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Lunar House

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of applications by category dealt with at Lunar house in each year since 1979 and the number of staff dealing with them.

Mr. Renton: The number of citizenship applications dealt with since 1979 and after entry decisions dealt with since 1984 (comparable figures are not available before) are as follows:

The number of staff dealing with this work in the immigration and nationality department at Lunar house in January for each of the years 1985-88 was given in a reply to a question from the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 9 February, at column 137.

Ian Richard Thain

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the grounds for his Department's decision to accept Ian Richard Thain, convicted in Northern Ireland, into a prison in Britain.

Mr. Hurd: Private Thain's application for permanent transfer to an establishment in England and Wales was regarded favourably in the light of the normal criteria governing transfers between the two jurisdictions.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the arrangements made for Ian Richard Thain's imprisonment in Britain provided for a continuing role or responsibility by the Northern Ireland Office, given the grounds and place of his conviction.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he made the decision to release Ian Richard Thain on parole;

(2) what review body or parole board considered Ian Richard Thain's case; what was the date the matter was first referred to this body; what information this body had before it in its considerations; what was the date the decision to recommend parole was taken; and to whom this recommendation was passed;

(3) what information was available to him as to whether Ian Thain was returning to Army service when the decision was made on his parole.

Mr. Hurd: Private Thain's case was considered by the local review committee at Liverpool prison on 3 September 1986 and subsequently by the parole board on 13 October 1986. In common with the cases of all life-sentence prisoners, the information before the parole board would have included full details of the nature and circumstances of the offences, the prisoner's previous record and response in prison, and the views of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice on the requirements of retribution and deterrence for the offence. The board would also have taken into account the degree of risk to the public if the prisoner were to be released. Having taken all these factors into account the parole board recommended Private Thain's release on licence, and I accepted the board's recommendation.

Both the parole board and I were aware that Private Thain's services had been retained by the Army and also that an undertaking had been given that, if released, there was no question of his again serving in Northern Ireland.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many individuals have been (a) prosecuted, (b) convicted and (c) imprisoned under those Greenham Common byelaws which Reading Crown court ruled on 25 February were invalidly made.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records of court proceedings held centrally.

Fire Stations (Closures)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each fire station in England and Wales that has been closed since May 1979; and if he will give details of the appliance deployment and whole time, day manning, or retained, fire fighter staffing, as appropriate, at each immediately prior to closure.

Mr. John Patten: The information sought is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. If, however, the hon. Member has any particular case in mind he may wish to write to me.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each local authority fire brigade in England and Wales; and if he will provide details of the net loss of uniformed operational fire fighting posts which have been implemented in each, with ministerial consent, under the Fire Services Act 1947, for each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. John Patten: The information sought, but on a calendar year basis, can be derived from the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales for the relevant years, copies of which are in the Library. The Secretary of State's approval is required before a fire authority may reduce the number of whole-time members of the brigade other than those whose duties do not normally include fire fighting, and of part-time members of the brigade.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each local authority fire brigade in England and Wales; and if he will provide details of any net loss of fire appliances which have been implemented in each, with ministerial consent, under the Fire Services Act 1947, for each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. John Patten: The local authority fire brigades in England and Wales are listed in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales, copies of which are in the Library. The other information sought is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on remand from the Metropolitan police area were held in (a) Grimsby police station, (b) Lincoln police station, (c) Hull police station, (d) Scunthorpe police station, (e) Bradford police station and (f) Halifax police station on 1 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Tuesday 1 March, 38 prisoners from the Metropolitan police area were held in Grimsby police station; seven in Lincoln police station; 34 in Hull police station and 16 in Halifax police station. No such prisoners were held in Scunthorpe or Bradford police stations on that date.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) young, (b) long-term and (c) remand prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison Leeds on the latest available figures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is given in the following table.

Population of Leeds prison on 31 January 1988: by type of prisoner

Type of prisoner	Young offenders[3]	Adult prisoners	Total
Untried	251	422	673
Convicted unsentenced	33	51	84
Non-criminal	1	8	9
Sentenced:
Short and medium term[1]	37	396	433
Long term[2]	5	172	177
Total	327	1,049	1,376

[1] Including fine defaulters.
[2] Young offenders over three years, adult prisoners over four years.
[3] Persons under 21.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were in Her Majesty's prison Leeds in (a) 4 June 1985 and (b) 12 February 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 4 June 1985, 1,306 prisoners were held in HM prison Leeds. On 12 February 1988 the figure was 1,410.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects construction work to start and to be completed on the extension of Her Majesty's prison Leeds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Work on the redevelopment of HM prison Leeds is being undertaken in four phases, the first of which has now begun. It is expected that the final phase will be completed by August 1996.

London Information Business School

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what interchange of computer information took place prior to the raid upon the London Information Business School in connection with immigration matters; which other Government Departments were involved; whether this interchangeability is ad hoc or is to be permanent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None.

Immigration Officers (Tottenham)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of the proposed visit of immigration officers to the constituency of the hon. Member for Tottenham on 14 March.

Mr. Renton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to a visit by officials from the Home Office to Haringey on 15 March about which I wrote to him on 18 February. The costs incurred by the officials who travel to and from Haringey will be very small.

Police Officers (Killings)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many killings of police officers in England and Wales, resulting in murder convictions, have taken place in each year since 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The information is given in the following table.

Offences currently[1] recorded as homicide where the victim was a police officer by the result of court proceedings or other outcome England and Wales: Number of persons

Year initially recorded	Number of offences (victims)	Decided by the court to be			Other outcome

[2] Provisional.

Prison Officers (Killings)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many killings of prison officers in England and Wales, resulting in murder convictions, have taken place in each year since 1957.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1957, in England and Wales, one prison officer has been killed (in 1965) and the result was conviction for murder.

PRIME MINISTER

Canada

Q85. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Canada.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend will be attending the economic summit in Toronto in June.

Cawston

Q119. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Cawston, near Rugby.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Identity Cards

Q160. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set up a Cabinet Committee to consider the introduction of a system of identity cards.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

I have nothing further to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 26 January, at column 133, on the establishment of a Cabinet Committee. The introduction of identity cards along the lines of those issued in some European countries has been considered from time to time, but we are not persuaded that a sufficiently strong case could be made out for their issue here.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 March.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is in Brussels for a NATO summit meeting.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Masons

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council if any Officer of the House, in the last five years , has booked or sought to book facilities within the House for purposes related to the Masonic order.

Mr. Wakeham: No such purposes have been declared by an Officer of the House. In accordance with the rules of the House, such facilities should only be booked for private meetings in connection with a parliamentary subject.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) if he will take steps to seek to make disclosure of membership of the Masonic order a requirement of the Register of Members' Interests;

(2) if he will take steps to seek to make disclosure of membership of the Masonic order a requirement of the Register of Parliamentary Journalists.

Mr. Wakeham: No. Any consideration of changes in the scope of the Register of Members' Interests or the Register of Parliamentary Journalists would, in the first instance, be a matter for the Select Committee on Members' Interests.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Headstart Programme

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many inner-city residents in the Government's task force areas will benefit from enterprise training under the headstart programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Industrial Society, which runs the headstart in the inner-cities programme, plans to provide enterprise advice and training to at least 6,000 inner-city residents during the present one-year contract. The programme is funded jointly by my Department and the MSC, but our input is more than matched by the commitment of the society's member firms, whose managers put tremendous effort into the programme's seminars and conferences.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Direct comparisons between 1988 and 1979 are not possible because of machinery of Government changes. The figures for 1 January 1988 for DTI, with illustrative figures for employment by its predecessor Departments in 1979, are follows:

	1 April 1979	Percentage of DTI total	1 January 1988	Percentage of DTI total
Scotland	910	5·3	690	5·5
Wales	2,320	13·5	1,660	13·3

Industrial Output

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which countries have had a smaller increase than the United Kingdom in industrial output between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Maude: Of the major industrial countries, France had a smaller increase in industrial output than the United Kingdom between 1979 and 1986. However, since 1981 industrial production in the United Kingdom has increased more rapidly than in France, Germany, Italy or the United States of America. (Comparable figures are not yet available for 1987.)

European Regional Development Fund

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek an extension of the European regional development fund non-quota textile area regulation initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Council regulation (EEC) No. 724/75, on which the 1980 and 1984 textile area "non-quota" regulations are based, has been repealed. The current textile area regulation expires on 31 March 1989 and no further financial allocations can be made under it.

These special "non-quota" measures were always intended to operate for a limited period and to depend on the substantial European regional development fund funding which was temporarily made available.

However, small and medium-sized firms throughout Great Britain may now apply for the new consultancy grants recently announced as part of my Department's enterprise initiative.

Space Research (Report)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to respond to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology's report on space research.

Mr. Atkins: A debate on the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology's report on United Kingdom space policy is planned in another place for 30 March. The Government's reply will take account of the views expressed in the debate.

Management (Report)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the recommendation of the efficiency committee report "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps," which are within the area of responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I intend to apply the recommendations in this report as rapidly and extensively as possible. The Department provides a wide range of services to industry and commerce, many from offices outside London, and the recommendations in the report should help in our drive to improve both the quality of these services and the value for money obtained by the taxpayer. Our first candidate will be the Companies Registration Office, whose headquarters are in Cardiff, and which employs just over 1,000 staff there and in offices in London and Edinburgh.

Chemical Industries Association

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the director general of the Chemical Industries Association; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the director general of the Chemical Industries Association in his capacity as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, but there are frequent meetings between the association and Ministers in this Department. A wide range of issues of mutual interest is discussed.

Recording Industry

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the overseas earnings of the British recording industry in the latest available year.

Mr. Maude: The overseas earnings of the United Kingdom recording industry, comprising royalties from overseas on recordings made in the United Kingdom, services provided to overseas residents by the United Kingdom recording industry, profits and dividends from overseas branches and subsidiaries of United Kingdom recording companies, cannot be separately identified in the information provided to the Department for the balance of payments. In 1987 exports of pre-recorded gramophone records, tapes and other similar media were valued at £264 million.

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers; Towards a Large Internal Market", in-so-far as his Department is concerned.

Mr. Alan Clark: Proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper "Completing the Internal Market, 1985," cover a wide spectrum of economic activity. Areas of interest to my Department include the elimination of physical and technical barriers to the free movement of goods; the liberalisation of trade in service; and the removal of various restrictions on freedom of establishment for the professions.

Removal of trade barriers will improve access to a market of 320 million people, encourage the growth of trade with other Member States, further improve economic efficiency and reduce costs to business.

Legal Profession

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the flexibility of the legal profession.

Mr. Maude: Continuing work is being undertaken by my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor to improve the efficiency with which legal services are provided. The Government also await with interest any proposals which may emerge from current consultations within the profession itself.

Textile Consignment (Occupied Territories)

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has received from the European Commission following the alterations by Israeli authorities of the occupied territories' certification of origin of consignment of textiles for a United Kingdom customer; and what action he proposes taking.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Commission need to consult the Israeli authorities; I am pressing it to get an early response.

Carbon Carbon Technology (Export)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will institute an inquiry into the circumstances in which carbon carbon technology was exported to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by Consarc of Bellshill in contravention of the regulations governing the export of sensitive materials to Communist bloc countries; what co-operation Her Majesty's Government intend to give to the United States Congressional inquiry into this matter: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 29 February, at column 416. I see no need to institute an inquiry.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the Government have for 934 MHz citizens' band radio.

Mr. Butcher: I am pleased to make such a statement. As the House knows, the Government, in common with other Administrations in Europe, are to consider the introduction of a short range radio (SRR) system in the band 933-935 MHz. One of the existing users of this band is the 934 MHz CB allocation. Approximately 3,000 users have these sets out of a total of over 115,000 CB licensees.

Once SRR becomes widely used, it is inevitable that the CB service will suffer an increasing level of interference and it is important that potential users of the band are aware of this, and that the many potential users of any new SRR service are adequately protected.

I have decided therefore that the Performance Specification MPT 1321 to which 934 MHz CB transceivers are manufacturer certified should be withdrawn from 30 December 1988. This will provide warning to traders and potential users alike that no new sets should be made or imported from this date.

It is of course only fair that existing users of the CB band get a good life from their sets. I can assure users that their existing equipment may continue to be used for its foreseeable useful life.

Merger Control

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when full details of the proposed legislative changes in merger control, announced in the recent White Paper "DTI—The department for Enterprise", will be published.

Mr. Maude: The details of the proposed legislative changes in merger control are being published today as part of a DTI paper on the policy and procedures of merger control. Copies of this paper are being placed in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

The paper sets out the present policy towards mergers; that the main consideration for determining whether a merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will continue to be its potential effect on competition. However, the law will continue to give the Secretary of State discretion to refer mergers on other public interest grounds. The paper discusses some of the concerns expressed about this policy and restates the underlying rationale for the Government's view. We believe that intervention by public authorities in lawful commercial transactions should be kept to a minimum, since broadly speaking the free commercial decisions of private decision-makers in competitive markets result in the most desirable outcomes for the economy as a whole. The paper goes on to look at this rationale in more detail and to set out how the potential effect on competition is assessed.

While the broad thrust of merger policy remains unchanged, the Government have always considered there is room for improvement in merger procedures. A particular consideration is the length of time taken by the procedures; but the Government also want to ensure that the system is as flexible and efficient as possible.

The paper sets out three major legislative changes directed towards improving the procedures; a new formal, but voluntary, procedure for pre-notifying mergers; a new provision for legally binding undertakings to be given in some cases without an MMC reference; and a new statutory charge to cover the costs of the merger control process.

Prenotification.

Those who choose to prenotify a proposed merger will need to submit answers to a standard questionnaire about the transaction and businesses involved. In simple cases, this information will allow a proposed merger to be automatically cleared within four weeks provided it has been publicly announced. In more complex cases, the OFT will need more detailed information and in those cases the parties will be informed that the right to automatic clearance has lapsed. I would expect companies to see considerable advantages in using this prenotification system. If a merger is not prenotified, it will generally take longer than four weeks to decide whether or not a reference to the MMC should be made. Moreover, mergers which are not prenotified will remain liable to reference to the MMC for a period of up to five years. Firms therefore have much to gain in certainty and speed under the new procedure.

Statutory Undertakings

Some mergers pose a threat to competition which is obvious even from a cursory examination, but which may nevertheless be capable of being removed by some modification of the merger arrangements. The parties to such mergers are often willing to promise such modifications. At present, however, there is no means by which such undertakings can be given statutory force except by invoking a full Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation. Therefore, we propose to introduce new provisions for statutory undertakings to be given to the Secretary of State by the parties, as a possible alternative to a full Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation. These undertakings may cover such possibilities as divestment of some of the assets of the merging enterprises or the post-merger behaviour of the new group. This new provision will give the Director General of Fair Trading an enhanced role in negotiating modifications to a merger proposal and will provide a quicker and more flexible mechanism for dealing with competition problems in certain cases. The paper goes into the proposal in more detail.

Charging

All these improvements in speed and quality will involve resource costs at the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The Government propose to introduce a statutory charge to cover the costs of the merger control process. Details remain to be settled: one possibility is a charge payable by the acquiring company and leviable on mergers where a controlling interest is acquired and where the assets test is satisfied. The charging structure will be kept as simple as possible.

Apart from these three major changes, the paper suggests a number of other changes in procedure aimed at speeding up and improving the present process such as closer integration between the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It is the Government's aim that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigations should in most cases last no more than three months.

Newspapers

Cm. 278 in January announced that legislation will be introduced to enable the Secretary of State to specify the period within which the Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigations into newspaper mergers should be completed. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has said that it will complete future inquiries into the general run of newspaper mergers within two months.

The Department of Trade and Industry has also examined its own procedures for handling cases and will issue a guidance note giving details of the procedures and specifying the information required by the Department in considering all applications for consent to a newspaper transfer. Early contact between the Department and parties to transfers will be encouraged and the streamlining of procedures within the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and the Department will make it more difficult for companies to argue that an Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry is ruled out by financial urgency.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the level of gross national product devoted to official aid in 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: I expect to be able to inform Parliament of the figure for 1987 by early June.

South African Development Co-ordination Conference

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list British contributions to South African Development Co-ordination Conference for each year since its formation.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference was formed, the United Kingdom has committed the following amounts: £10 million in 1980-81; £2 million in 1982-83; £13 million in 1985-86; £10 million in 1986-87; £10 million in 1987-88.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the level of British bilateral aid to each of the member states of South African Development Corporation Conference from 1979 to 1986 inclusive, in 1986 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures are as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the outcome of the European Parliament special committee of inquiry meeting into the mismanagement of nuclear waste in Europe in Brussels on 22 and 23 February.

Mr. Mellor: The meeting was of a preliminary nature and reached no conclusions. We understand that the Committee intends to hold its next meeting in Strasbourg on 10 March, to be followed by a series of formal hearings. They will also be requesting written evidence.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations between Her Majesty's Government and Panama.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with Panama. Together with our EC partners we have expressed deep concern about recent developments in Panama and have appealed to the present rulers of Panama to open the way for internal peace and democracy.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is being given to British citizens in Panama in the light of recent events in that country.

Mr. Eggar: The situation in Panama remains calm. We have no reason to believe British citizens are at risk, but inquirers are being advised to contact Her Majesty's embassy on arrival for the latest information.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency plans exist to protect British maritime interests in Panama in the event of the closure of the canal.

Mr. Eggar: We keep the situation under constant review and are in touch with British shipping interests.

ENERGY

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received concerning the future of the nuclear industry following privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received representations from electricity consumers, unions, other nationalised industries and other interested parties about a wide range of issues related to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry, including the implications for the future of nuclear power.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there will be any requirement on the new privatised power company including nuclear plant to renegotiate commercial contracts signed on 24 April 1986, by the Central Electricity Generating Board with British Nuclear Fuels plc for spent nuclear fuel reprocessing at the Sellafield thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what capital value will be put on the Central Electricity Generating Board technical research centres at (a) Barnwood, (b) Marchwood and (c) Berkeley under privatisation;

(2) what capital value will be put on the Electricity Council research centre on electricity efficiency at Capenhurst under privatisation;

(3) what valuation will be put on (a) Central Electricity Generating Board's Magnox plants and (b) Central Electricity Generating Board's AGR plants under privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government aim to achieve full value for the taxpayer for all parts of the industry, consistent with the Government's objectives for the privatisation. We will be seeking expert advice on the industry's value, but ultimately it will be determined by the market.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what requirements will be laid upon the new large power company including the nuclear power stations to retain a holding in United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. under privatisation plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details have yet to be considered, but present expectations are that the Central Electricity Generating Board's shareholding in United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. will pass to the successor operator of Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear power stations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications for the present Central Electricity Generating Board commitment to research and development investment in the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority fast reactor programme of proposed privatisation plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board agreed to provide some 30 per cent. of the funding of the fast reactor programme with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority from 1987-88. After privatisation, it will be a matter for the industry to decide how much it should spend on the fast reactor.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration has been given in his preparation of plans to privatise the electricity supply industry to the suitability of the present underwriting insurance arrangements in the case of a major accident at a nuclear power plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Arrangements under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 will continue after privatisation.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what valuation will be put on the spent nuclear fuel in storage ponds at Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear reactor sites under privatisation;

(2) what valuation will be put on low and intermediate-level nuclear waste at Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear plant sites under privatisation;

(3) what valuation will be put on (a) unreprocessed spent nuclear fuel, (b) uranium arisings, (c) plutonium arisings and (d) nuclear waste arisings from Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear fuel reprocessed at Sellafield under privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is too early to say what the valuation of these materials will be at the time of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

CEGB

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet Lord Marshall frequently, and we discuss a range of matters.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the first flue gas desulphurisation plant to come into operation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB envisages that the first stage of FGD plant planned for the Drax power station will be operational by 1993.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available to the European Parliament Committee on Energy Research and Technology the facility attachments agreed with EURATOM for the safeguarding of the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Sellafield magnox reprocessing line material balance areas, with all site maps, photographs or information on access routes to the site excused from the documentation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) on 12 June 1986 at columns 268-69.

Coal Imports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the impact of his policy as outlined in the White Paper published on 25 February upon coal imports as they may affect (a) deep and (b) opencast mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The privatised electricity supply industry will be free to purchase its coal from any source. The best protection for United Kingdom coal industry sales to the electricity supply industry is that it should produce reliable supplies of coal at prices which are competitive on the world market. Since we came into office we have backed British Coal with over £9 billion of taxpayers money.

Onshore Licensing

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make an announcement about the results of the second onshore licensing round.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have today announced the conditional award of 60 new-style exploration licences for blocks in England, Scotland and Wales. The licences allow companies to search and drill for petroleum, subject to the procedures of the planning system and the technical approval of my Department. Where the licences extend into coastal waters stringent conditions will be set to ensure that local interests will be fully taken into account before operations are undertaken.

Details of the awards have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Hot Dry Rock Project

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the outcome of the review conducted in 1987 of the geothermal hot dry rock project being conducted by the Camborne school of mines.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have today announced a new phase of the hot dry rock programme to run from October 1988 and costing up to £8.15 million. The new programme will include:

experimental work on the existing reservoir at Rosemanowes quarry to help test the feasibility of techniques that would be required to create a commercial system in a new reservoir approximately 6 m deep;

an initial design study for a 6km deep system in collaboration with interested industrial companies; supporting technical and economic studies.

Reports of the review are being published and I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

TRANSPORT

Ferry Safety

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to improve the safety of roll-on/roll-off ferries since the Herald of Free Enterprise disaster of 6 March 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Since the tragedy at Zeebrugge, I have been giving top priority to improving the safety of the travelling public on roll-on/roll-off ferries. I have therefore been bringing in a wide range of measures, based largely on the recommendations of the Sheen report, which are aimed at achieving this objective. The action I and my Department have taken since 6 March 1987 is as follows.

First, primary legislation. The Merchant Shipping Bill, which has completed its Committee stage in the House of Commons today, contains several important safety provisions. A ship can be classified as unfit to go to sea for a wider range of reasons. Penalties for an offence will include up to two years imprisonment or an unlimited fine, or both. Charterers and managers will be made responsible for their ships. There will be a totally new requirement that shipowners and managers must take all reasonable steps to secure the safe operation of their ships. The Bill stipulates that masters and other seafarers must exercise all due diligence so that they can carry out their duties without endangering the ship and its passengers; and it explicitly lays down that the duties of a master must include responsibility for the good management and safe operation of the ship.

I also decided to use the Bill to set up an independent marine accidents investigation branch, modelled on the existing air accident investigation branch. It will be headed by a Chief Inspector of Marine Accidents, who will report directly to me. I intend to set up the new branch as soon as possible after Royal Assent.

Second, I have made, or am preparing to make, a number of regulations. From 1 January all United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off passenger ships have had to be equipped with indicator lights and closed-circuit television on the bridge to show the condition of the loading doors, and vehicle spaces must be continuously monitored. From 31 July, these ships will also have to be fitted with self-contained supplementary emergency lighting. From 1 March, these measures have also been extended to foreign ships when they are in United Kingdom ports.

From 29 February, all major United Kingdom passenger ships have had to operate boarding card systems to check and control the numbers of passengers. From 1 April, subject to parliamentary approval, these measures will be applied to foreign ships sailing from United Kingdom ports.

From 9 March, new provisions covering the berthing of ferries and the closing of loading doors will apply to United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off passenger ships. Main loading doors and other weathertight or watertight doors above the water level will have to be closed either at the berth or as soon after leaving as is physically possible. Each operation will have to be reported and logged. Subject to parliamentary approval, these measures will be extended to foreign ships sailing from United Kingdom ports by 1 April.

On 31 July 1987, my Department issued a consultative document porposing that roll-on/roll-off passenger ships should be required to calculate and record draughts and stability before sailing, and that larger ships should be equipped with draught gauges and loading computers. This was followed up on 11 February by the issue, for consultation, of draft statutory instruments which would take effect from 1 November this year.

On 2 September last, my Department issued a consultative document proposing regular checks of the stability of United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off passenger ships, and for the compilation of more comprehensive stability data. Draft statutory instruments, which will take effect from 1 November this year, will be issued shortly.

On 23 December last, my Department circulated, for consultation, draft statutory instruments which would require every lorry to be weighed individually before being loaded on to a roll-on/roll-off passenger ferry, from 1 December this year.

On 22 January, my Department issued a consultative document proposing that special emergency equipment should always be carried, and that equipment should be available and fittings installed to make it easier to move around in a badly-listing ship. These measures will be taken forward together with earlier proposals for the fitting of emergency windows to make escape easier.

On 12 November, a consultative document was issued which proposed that all ships should carry comprehensive operating manuals, and that operators should name an individual in their shore management to be responsible for safety and for ensuring that the manuals are complied with. This document also proposed that log books should be more comprehensive, and that potentially hazardous occurrences should be reported. Draft statutory instruments and a merchant shipping notice, bringing these proposals into effect, will be issued shortly.

I have also asked for draft instruments to be prepared which will cover the loading of roll-on/roll-off passenger ferries and lay down requirements on the securing of lorries and their loads.

Third, we have introduced various measures which have not required legislation. Marine surveyors are stepping up their spot checks of passenger ships, including icognito checks. We have also decided that in future, counsel to the formal investigations into marine accidents will be appointed and instructed by the Attorney-General. In the past, my predecessors have appointed counsel both to the formal investigation and to represent my Department.

Fourth, we have taken steps on the international front. On 9 November the United Kingdom secured the adoption of a resolution at the International Maritime Organisation to give urgent consideration to the safety of roll-on roll-off ferries. The IMO is now considering specific proposals we have made for international measures equivalent to those adopted in this country.

Last October I wrote to the Shipping Ministers of 10 other European countries, proposing co-operation on ferry safety. Officials are discussing co-operative enforcement of our own measures, as well as parallel measures by the other Governments which will affect their own ports and ships.

Fifth, we have done a great deal of work on ship design. On 31 July last my Department called for full data on all roll-on roll-off ferries built before 1980 to be sent in by this April, so that assessments could be made of how these ships stand up to current tests of survivability in collisions. We will analyse this information fully, and intend to reach conclusions by the end of September.

On 30 October my noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for shipping set up a steering committee, under the Surveyor General, to administer a research programme into the stability and related safety aspects of roll-on roll-off passenger vessels.

We have awarded a research contract to examine the stability of existing roll-on roll-off ships, following collision damage, against new standards which are now before the International Maritime Organisation for adoption in April.

We will shortly be inviting tenders for research into the likelihood that a ship on a cross-channel route would be in shallow water if it capsized, and into the means of escape from a ferry on its beam ends.

We will also shortly be inviting tenders for a comprehensive programme of research to examine ways of reducing the risk of large volumes of water reaching the vehicle deck of a roll-on roll-off ferry, and to prevent such an event leading to a catastrophe. It is my intention that this work will be completed by the end of this year. Model tests will start at the same time, but will take somewhat longer.

We have invited further tenders for the application of risk analysis techniques to the safe design and operation of roll-on roll-off ferries, and we will be placing a contract shortly. I intend that this work should be completed by February 1989.

Sixth, there has been some further miscellaneous work. On 1 December my Department issued an advisory note proposing research into lifejackets that are simpler and esier to put on. We will issue a contract shortly.

On the same day, my Department issued another advisory note on the clear labelling of decks, exits, lifejacket stows and muster stations, as well as on emergency procedure information for passengers. We will be issuing merchant shipping notices shortly.

Last month, my Department issued a consultative document on the Sheen report's recommendation that the criteria for carrying lifeboats on ships that are never far from land should be reviewed.

We have also prepared a paper for the International Maritime Organisation, which includes proposals for improving communications between ships and helicopters used for search and rescue.

This long catalogue of follow-up action which we have already taken testifies both to the thoroughness of the Sheen report and to our commitment to implementing it. Since the report was published, we have been systematically working through its proposals and taking whatever action appears to be necessary. I am glad to say there has been widespread recognition of what we have already done.

There have been steady improvements in ship safety, including ship stability, over the past decades; and the Sheen report made various further recommendations for work in this area. Last year I announced that I was making a further £1 million available for a research programme. This work is now being put out to contract, and I am determined that any results which would allow real improvements in passenger safety will be obtained as quickly as possible.

Finally, we have to remember the facts. Roll-on/roll-off ferries in the United Kingdom have an outstandingly good safety record. Until the loss of the European Gateway in 1982, there had been no major loss of life on a British roll-on/roll-off ferry since the Princess Victoria in 1953. They carry upwards of 20 million passengers a year, and their record compares well with other modes of passengr transport.

But that is no excuse for complacency. I am determined to try to do even better.

Near Misses

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority about procedures for the reporting and investigation of air misses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have discussed the present arrangements for reporting and investigating air misses with the chairman of the CAA, and I have asked him to review them. We both agree that the purpose of the procedures must be first to enhance flight safety by encouraging reporting so that lessons can be learnt from each incident; and, secondly, so far as is consistent with that, to strengthen public confidence in the air traffic control system through maximum openness and impartiality in the reporting and investigation of air misses. The chairman has now written to me with proposals that I warmly welcome as going a long way to meet our joint objectives. The text of the chairman's letter is as follows:

We have discussed the recent reports of airmisses and the procedure for reporting and investigating them. You asked me urgently to review these arrangements. I am now in a position to make a preliminary report.

We are in agreement that the procedures for handling information about airmisses and for investigating them should meet two objectives:—

(i) Primarily, they should be designed to enhance flight safety by providing lessons from which all involved in aviation can benefit. This means that they should encourage the reporting of incidents by pilots and air traffic controllers, make for the speedy, accurate and impartial investigation of airmisses and draw on all relevant expertise in identifying causes and remedies.

(ii) Secondly, they should give the public confidence in the air traffic control system by making available, wherever reasonably possible, prompt and accurate information about airmisses and their causes and provide for investigations that are not only expert and impartial but are seen to be so.

As you know, the present procedure is that all reported airmisses, military and civil, are brought to the attention of the Joint Airmiss Working Group (JAWG) by the Joint Airmiss Section (JAS) of the NATS. JAS provides the Chairman and Secretariat of the JAWG, but otherwise the Working Group consists entirely of independent members from outside NATS, including representatives from the armed services, civil airlines and pilots and other airspace users. JAWG, having had all airmisses investigated, analyses them and three times a year circulates the results of its analyses in confidence to the aviation community in a volume known as the "Blue Book". We agree that these arrangements for providing information about airmisses, for investigating them and for reporting the outcome are entirely satisfactory for operational purposes.

The CAA publishes statistics for airmisses three times a year based on the results of the JAWG's investigations. These show that there has been no deterioration in safety in the air over the United Kingdom. Indeed the figures for risk-bearing airmisses involving commercial aircraft in recent years show a downward trend.

In my view, this present system meets the primary objective well. I am most grateful to the NATS Staff in JAS and to the whole membership of the JAWG for the important work they have carried out so painstakingly and effectively over the years.

However, the system was not designed with the secondary objective in mind. I have therefore considered particularly how the procedures might be modified so as to meet the second objective without impairing achievement of the first.

My proposals are set out below.

Initial CAA Reaction to an Airmiss

It has been our practice, in line with the well-established principle of confidentiality, neither to confirm nor to deny the occurrence of an airmiss. Nevertheless, airmisses do become public knowledge and, as recent incidents clearly show, the ensuing publicity without any official information, can present a misleading impression. I have therefore decided that as soon as we know an airmiss has occurred involving an aircraft on a commercial air transport flight, we will from now on announce it with whatever reliable information is immediately available.

Joint Airmiss Working Group

One of the criticisms of the present arrangements for investigating airmisses has been that JAWG is within NATS and may thus appear to be insufficiently independent of the organisation providing most of the UK's air traffic control services. I am entirely satisfied that JAWG (with its outside membership) has always in practice functioned quite indepndently of NATS in carrying out its investigations. It should in any case be borne in mind that an airmiss may result from a failure in the aircraft as well as on the ground.

However, in order to establish the JAWG's independent status still more clearly, I propose to have the Chairman of JAWG submit its reports in future directly to me and the Chief of the Air Staff as the Joint Chairmen of the Air Traffic Control Board. Moreover, I intend to consider with JAWG some enlargement of its membership, with a view for example to including on it one or two members currently active in air traffic control operations.

Publication of JAWG Airmiss Investigations

At present the results of airmiss investigations are circulated widely within the aviation community but are not made public. This policy is designed to maintain the confidence of pilots and airspace users so as to encourage the full and frank reporting which is essential to ensure that airmisses are fully analysed and essential flight safety lessons drawn from them. It has served the cause of flight safety well over many years. Recently, however, it has been undermined by the frequency with which incomplete information has been unofficially disclosed.

I accept that there is a legitimate public interest in the outcome of investigations of airmisses involving commercial air transport aircraft in UK airspace. I have decided therefore that the outcome of these investigations should be published. It is important that this is done in a way that not only satisfies public interest but also avoids jeopardising confidence in the objectivity and impartiality of the investigation system. I intend therefore to seek the advice of aircraft operators and pilots on the manner of publication as well as taking into account other comments that I receive. I shall reach a decision without undue delay.

Reporting of Incidents by Air Traffic Controllers

Recently, it has been alleged that the reporting procedures for controllers are inferior to those for pilots and that controllers' reports, being submitted via their line managers, are sometimes delayed or suppressed. I do not accept these allegations. Nevertheless, we are now in the process of devising improved reporting procedures which will be better designed for recording potentially serious incidents between aircraft and will provide for controllers to send reports direct to the Authority's Safety Data Analysis Unit. We will be consulting controllers' representatives on these procedures before introducing them. Our objective is to ensure that any incidents observed by controllers but not by pilots will be reported.

Conclusion

I believe that the procedural changes described above will go a very long way to meet both the objectives I set out at the beginning of this letter. Not only should they maintain the already-proven effectiveness of the system in analysing the causes of airmisses and distributing information about them within the aviation community; they should also enhance its openness and the visibility of its independence and in doing so help reassure the public about the safety of our airspace.

Cheap Bus Fares

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider seeking to amend legislation to allow the provision of cheap bus fares for retired males between the ages of 60 and 65 years, along the lines of provision presently available for other pensioners.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have no plans to change the present arrangements which effectively link eligibility for concessionary travel for the elderly to state pension age. It is open to all transport operators to give additional concessions; British Rail operates a scheme on a commercial basis which provides cheap fares for the elderly of both sexes from the age of 60.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to promote and publicise development opportunities along the route of the M11 link road between Hackney and central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road will run from the A102(M) at Hackney to a point just west of the M11 at Redbridge roundabout. Possible development along this route is a matter for the relevant local authorities.

"The Nuclear Trains"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library the recent research report entitled, "The Nuclear Trains" by Large and Associates for the London nuclear information unit.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report has now been examined by the Department. The issues raised have been considered before, particularly at the Sizewell inquiry, where Sir Frank Layfield considered that the adequacy of the IAEA tests for ensuring flask integrity in an accident had not been effectively challenged.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the dates and methods by which he published the current financial and other objectives on determinations applicable to London Regional Transport under the terms of section 16 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984; and what period of time elapsed between publishing those objectives and the closing of public comment on the first draft of the first strategic plan of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: The only objectives hitherto set under section 16 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 are those set in the then Secretary of State's letter to the chairman of London Regional Transport of 20 July 1984. The text of that letter was reproduced in Hansard, on 20 July 1984 at columns 373-74, and in a departmental press notice of the same date. London Regional Transport conducted a public consultation on its first statement of strategy the following spring. The closing date for comments was 10 May 1985.

Motorway Works (Speed Limits)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce a mandatory 50 mph speed limit in areas of motorways which are subject to roadworks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering, with the police, the question of speed limits at motorway roadworks, as part of our current wider review of motorway safety. We hope to announce the conclusions of that review before long.

Heavy Lorries

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy towards lorry regulation, in the light of the National Audit Office report entitled "Regulation of Heavy Lorries", particularly in relation to the number of bridges which are not considered strong enough to cope with the level of freight they are carrying.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As the NAO report noted, the Department's policy is to maximise the net benefits of road transport by lorry while taking full account of the effect of heavy lorries on people and the environment. The Committee of Public Accounts published its own report on the regulation of heavy lorries on 2 March and the Government will respond to that shortly.

On bridge strengthening, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) on 24 November 1987 at column 110.

Compressed Gases (Transport)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what account has been taken of the degree of hazard posed during road transportation of compressed gases in specifying the safety requirements placed upon the transport of compressed gases;

(2) if he will review the specification for the design and construction of vehicles used for the transport of compressed gases requiring that the structures are strong enough to withstand a collision with other vehicles;

(3) if he will take steps to require the owners of dangerous materials being transported in or around Britain to hold third party insurance capable of covering claims that could arise from any accident;

(4) what requirement is placed upon the owners of cargoes to consult or obtain approval from the police authority in the transportation of compressed gases; and if there is any requirement to obtain or secure approval from each police area through which compressed gases are being transported.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Compressed gases carried in bulk in a road tanker or tank container are subject to the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981. These regulations, which take account of the hazards involved, require tankers and containers to be properly designed, of adequate strength, of good construction and suitable for the purpose. A tanker or tank container cannot be used for the carriage of a dangerous substance unless it has been initially examined and tested by a competent person and is periodically re-examined and tested thereafter.

Consignors of dangerous substances are required to ensure that vehicle operators are provided with accurate information about the hazards of such substances. Vehicle operators are required to hold third-party insurance, including cover for the additional risks from any dangerous substances carried.

There is no requirement on owners to consult or obtain approval from police authorities.

There are no plans to change these statutory requirements.

WALES

Community Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of proposed changes in the community programme on voluntary organisations in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Manpower Services Commission officials will shortly be discussing with individual community programme scheme managers their plans in relation to the new adult training programme. I hope that as many projects as possible will continue into the new programme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will establish a community fund in Wales to continue financial support for those schemes presently funded through the community programme, which will not be eligible for support under Her Majesty's Government's proposals for a reformed community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As the Manpower Services Commission said in its response on the new adult training programme, it hopes to explore with appropriate Government Departments the possibility of making financial provision for some community programme projects which are of particular benefit to the community but which will not have the training content needed for inclusion in the new programme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of places currently offered under the community programme in Wales are provided by voluntary sector sponsors.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proportion of filled community programme places in Wales provided by the voluntary sector was 44 per cent. at 29 January 1988.

Sports Centres (Rates)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what exemptions from the payment of rates local authorities offer to (a) privately run and (b) community run sports centres in Wales; and what information he has as to the extent to which local authorities encourage applications for such exemptions.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not held centrally.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to consult the voluntary sector in Wales concerning his Department's policy towards community care; and what specific plans he has for consultations in the future.

Mr. Grist: The Department is in regular contact with voluntary organisatons on a range of issues, including community care. We would normally expect to consult such organisations on significant developments of policy and we are always eager to have their views.

Debt

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being undertaken by his Department to assist people to deal with the problems associated with indebtedness in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has responsibility for consumer credit matters and consumer protection generally. However funding from my Department is provided under the urban programme to a number of organisations, including for example some citizens' advice bureaux, which offer advisory services which include assistance on money-related problems.

Community Facilities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific financial assistance is available from his Department, from other agencies working through his Department, from agencies of his Department and from other Government agencies in Wales, to community halls, centres and community sports facilities in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Assistance may be available from the Department under the urban programme and the voluntary youth service village hall and community centre project. The Sports Council for Wales can provide assistance and the Manpower Services Commission can help through its community project scheme. Local authorities may also provide assistance under their various powers.

In addition, other agencies in Wales may also provide specific financial assistance if the criteria of their individual grant regimes are met; in particular the Development Board for Rural Wales can provide assistance under the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976, the Wales tourist board can assist projects which will improve tourist amenities and facilities under the Development of Tourism Act 1969 and assistance may be available in the South Cardiff urban development area from the Cardiff Bay development corporation. Also, European regional development fund grant aid is available for leisure and sports facilities if they are linked to the promotion of tourism.

Pensioners (Housing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households in each district authority area in Wales include at least one pensioner; and what proportion of those households (a) share a lavatory with another household, (b) share a bath with another household, (c) have no bath and (d) have no inside lavatory.

Mr. Ian Grist: Estimates from the Welsh intercensal survey 1986 are given in the table:

	Total pensioner households	Shared WC per cent.	Shared Bath-Shower per cent.	No Bath-Shower per cent.	No inside WC per cent.

Pensioners (Housing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of pensioners in each district authority area in Wales live in (a) sheltered housing and (b) residential care.

Mr. Grist: The estimated proportion of pensioner households living in sheltered housing at 1 April 1986 in each district authority in Wales is given in the table:

Percentage of pensioner households in sheltered accommodation

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, as part of his Department's submissions for regional development funding from the EEC, he is seeking funds for the proposed Cardiff bay barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The European Commission has awarded ERDF aid to my Department towards the cost of the initial feasibility studies for the Cardiff bay barrage. The Government have yet to reach a view on the barrage proposal and further applications for ERDF support will be considered in the context of that decision.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the relevant figures in tables 17.25 and 17.27 of Cm. 288-II adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and prices deflator; and what were the equivalent figures in 1978-79.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The table sets out the information requested.

Total net expenditure on hospital and community health services
£ million

Year	Actual	[1]Adjusted
1978-79	299·8	710·8
1983-84	596·2	764·6
1984-85	639·6	775·9
1985-86	690·9	785·0
1986-87	726·9	784·3
1987-88	[2]803·0	803·0

[1] 1987-88 prices using the hospital and community health services pay and prices indices. Figures relating to the hospital and community health services pay and prices terms have been constructed by reference to indices maintained by the Department of Health and Social Security from English data: no separate pay and prices indices for Wales are available. The figures for 1987-88 are provisional.

[2] The estimated outturn for 1987-88 excludes the additional £3·8 million announced on 16 December 1987.

Note: The totals include expenditure on the services for the disabled and the administrative costs of the artificial limb and appliance service which will from 1 April 1988 be transferred to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to privatise the Scottish Bus Group as a single entity or in its individual company units; on what date he expects to publish his legislation in respect of this; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No decisions have yet been taken on the form of the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group or on the timing of the necessary legislation. Financial advisers are being appointed to advise on whether the group should be privatised as it stands or in a number of companies.

Labour Statistics (Motherwell)

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest unemployment figures in the agriculture and food sectors of the economy in the Motherwell, North constituency.

Mr. Lang: Information on unemployment by industry grouping is not available. However the total number unemployed in the Motherwell, North constituency in January 1988 was 5,817. This represents a fall of 1,135 or 16 per cent. since January 1987.

Private Forestry

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about his policy towards the promotion of private forestry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received many representations in recent months, particularly with regard to planting in Caithness and Sutherland.

Strathclyde Regional Council

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the reply by his Department to the letter dated 4 February from the Strathclyde regional council requesting a meeting with Ministers to discuss the level of capital allocations to the region; and if he will now arrange for such a meeting to take place.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department responded to the council's letter on 1 March. I am arranging to publish the reply in the Official Report. It is not the normal practice for Ministers to meet individual authorities to discuss their capital allocations, but on this occasion, my hon. Friend the Minister of State hopes to meet the council later in the year.

Following is the letter:

Dear Mr. McFarlane,

STRATHCLYDE REGIONAL COUNCIL: FINANCIAL PLAN 1988-89 TO 1991-92

I refer to your letters dated 4 and 10 February addressed to Joan Fraser in which you restate the Council's request for a Ministerial meeting to discuss the Council's non-housing capital allocations.

Your Council's representations were partly founded on the premise that its capital allocations do not equate directly with the level of population of the region. In previous correspondence with your Council at both official and Ministerial level, we have emphasised that population factors are not the main determinant of the level of capital allocations: and we have set out the main elements which are taken into account. I do not think that there is anything I can usefully add to the exchanges between the Scottish Office and your Council on this aspect. More generally Strathclyde is certainly not alone in receiving capital allocations which fall short of its aspirations. The resources available for distribution in the form of capital allocations are finite and for 1988-89, the pressure on the Scottish Block is especially severe as a consequence for the local authority current expenditure settlement for that year. An extra £71 million had to be found from within the Block to finance that settlement and local authority capital expenditure provision could not be exempted from meeting its share of these additional costs.

Your Council will, I hope, by now have received Mr. Cameron's letter of 22 February notifying final capital allocations for 1988-89 and provisional figures for the following 2 years. Mr. Lang carefully considered your Council's renewed request for a meeting but he concluded that the representations were not such that he would merit departing from his and his predecessor's normal policy of not meeting individual Councils about their capital allocations. I can assure your Council, however, that the representations you made were fully taken into account before final decisions were made by him and the Secretary of State.

Notwithstanding this policy, I am however pleased to inform you that when he is visiting the area later this year, (at a time yet to be determined), Mr. Lang has agreed to pay a visit to your Council when he will be prepared to hear at first hand, your Council's representations on such issues. The Council will then have a full opportunity to put before him your views on the capital expenditure programmes.

Yours sincerely

J. Stephen

Capital Programmes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which capital programmes of his Department resulted in an underspend in the year 1986-87; and what was the underspend in each case.

Mr. Rifkind: The underspend on central Government capital programmes within my responsibility for the year to March 1987 was as follows:

Programme	Net underspend £000
Agriculture	3,885
Industry	4,983
Tourism	149
Roads and Transport	7,030
Housing	2,431
Other Environmental Services	80
Law, Order and Protective Services	209
Health	7,296
Social Work	216

Fife Health Board (Ministerial Meeting)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health with the Fife health board chairman; and what agreements were reached.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I met the chairman of Fife health board on Monday 1 February 1988 to discuss health matters in Fife. The question of reaching agreements did not arise.

Correspondence (Costs)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the costs to public funds of the letter from the Minister with responsibility for home affairs and the environment at the Scottish Office, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton), delivered to the home of the hon. Member for East Kilbride at 1 am on Saturday 27 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no identifiable cost to public funds. The letter was considered urgent and a driver who had been engaged in other duties on the evening of 26 February delivered it without any significant deviation from his route.

Tobacco Products (Oral Use)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to offer any compensation to the United States Tobacco Company and its work force for the consequences of the announcement made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Health, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 26 February, Official Report, column 362, concerning a prohibition on tobacco products for oral use.

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South has invited representations from interested bodies and until these have been received and considered no final decision on the prohibition on tobacco products for oral use will be taken. The question of possible consequences of any prohibition does not therefore arise at this stage.

Civil Scientific Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the funds allocated for civil scientific research in Scotland, in 1986 money, for each year since 1977.

Mr. Lang: The annual review of Government — funded R and D, published by the Cabinet Office since 1983, gives details of the R and D spending of Scottish Departments. Copies of the annual reviews are available in the Library. Information in the form requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

M8 (Baillieston and Newhouse)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects work to commence on the extension to the M8 between Baillieston and Newhouse; what is the projected expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed extension of the M8 between Baillieston and Newhouse is currently planned to be carried out in two phases. I expect the necessary preparatory work for both phases, the first between Baillieston and Shawhead and the second between Shawhead and Newhouse, to be completed in time to allow construction starts in late summer 1991 and early summer 1994 respectively. The actual timing of starts will depend upon priorities within, and the finance available for, the trunk road programme at those dates. The current estimate of cost for the whole works between Baillieston and Newhouse is £29 million.

Operations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the mean number, plus or minus two standard deviations, of operations performed in Scottish hospitals for each day, Monday to Friday inclusive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the time available the information cannot be provided in the form requested. In 1985 a total of 443,365 operations were performed.

Scottish Special Housing Association (Loan)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his reply on 25 February to the hon. Member for East, Kilbride, Official Report, column 286, if he will give an estimate of the effect on the average rent charged to Scottish Special Housing Association tenants arising from the loss of £742,000 on the short-term loan from the national loans fund.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There was no effect on the average rent levels.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will write off the loss of £742,000 in the short-term loan on £16 million advanced to the Scottish Special Housing Association from the national loans fund on 30 June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The SSHA repaid on 31 December 1987, the £16 million loan advanced from the national loans fund at the association's request on 30 June 1987 together with interest of £742,000. The question of write-off does not therefore arise.

Pupils (Qualifications)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils left Scottish schools with no formal qualifications in each of the last five years; and what percentage of the total that figure represents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: the table gives information on school leavers who did not hold a Scottish Certificate of Education (SCE) qualification. Some of these school leavers would have held other qualifications such as the Certificate of Secondary Education (CSE), the Scotvec National Certificate or other vocational qualifications, but the numbers involved in this category are not available.

Scottish school leavers with no SCE qualification

	Number	Percentage of all leavers
1981-82	24,800	28
1982-83	23,800	26
1983-84	23,500	26
1984-85	21,600	25
1985-86[1]	19,800	24

[1] Provisional.

Glaucoma

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of glaucoma have been diagnosed in the Greater Glasgow health board area in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Hospital and Community Health Services Capital

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed distribution of the hospital and community health services capital for 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has allocated £110·05 million to health boards to meet their gross capital expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1988-89. This includes £21 million specifically for the improvement and upgrading of the NHS estate.

The allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Health boards	Capital allocation (£ million)
Argyll and Clyde	7·450
Ayrshire and Arran	10·900
Borders	3·550

In addition, a further £4·55 million will be made available for projects not specifically allocated to individual health boards. Also £13·4 million has been allocated to the Common Services Agency and £0·9 million has been allocated for the state hospital. In total, this amounts to £128·90 million.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Church Land

9. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from tenants of the Church Commissioners on his proposals for diversification from agriculture.

34. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from tenants of the Church Commissioners on his proposals for diversification from agriculture.

103. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from tenants of the Church Commissioners on his proposals for diversification from agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: I have received no representations from the Church Commissioners nor has my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland from the Church of Scotland.

15. Mr. Wall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of land used for agricultural purposes in the United Kingdom which is owned by the Church Commissioners.

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of land used for agricultural purposes in the United Kingdom which is owned by the Church Commissioners.

31. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of land used for agricultural purposes in the United Kingdom which is owned by the Church Commissioners.

55. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of land used for agricultural purposes in the United Kingdom which is owned by the Church Commissioners.

Mr. Gummer: According to the latest available Church Commissioners' annual report the Church Commissioners' agricultural estimates at 31 December 1986 were some 165,938 acres which was equivalent to 67,154 hectares.

17. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of agricultural produce which is produced in England and Wales on land which is owned by churches.

77. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of produce which is produced in England and Wales on land which is owned by the Churches.

84. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of agricultural produce which is produced in England and Wales on land which is owned by Churches.

85. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of agricultural produce which is produced in England and Wales on land which is owned by Churches.

Mr. Gummer: I regret that this information is not available.

26. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the secretary general of the General Synod on his policy on the use of agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams).

27. Mr. Clay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the Church of England to discuss the implications for rural areas of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy.

70. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the Church of England to discuss the implications for the standard of living of rural people of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) and for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

29. Mr. Parry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the General Synod of the Church of England to discuss the social and economic prospects for agricultural tenants.

32. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the General Synod of the Church of England to discuss the social and economic prospects for agricultural tenants.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested by the General Synod, but I frequently meet representatives of landlords and tenants to discuss matters of mutual interest.

35. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of the General Synod of the Church of England to discuss the social and economic prospects for agricultural tenants.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested by the General Synod, nor from the Synod of the Church in Wales. However, I frequently meet landlords and tenants to discuss matters of mutual interest.

40. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Church Commissioners to discuss the impact of Government policy on the use of their agricultural land.

41. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Church Commissioners to discuss the impact of Government policy on the use of their agricultural land.

90. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Church Commissioners to discuss the impact of Government policy on the use of their agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested by the Church Commissioners.

50. Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from clergymen in rural areas about the effects of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy on the rural areas.

92. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from clergymen in rural areas about the effects of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy on the rural areas.

94. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation he has received from clergymen in rural areas about the effect of Her Majesty's Government's agricultural policy on the rural areas.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 25 February at column 313.

81. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the secretary general of the General Synod on his policy on use of agricultural land.

101. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation he has received from the secretary general of the General Synod of the Church of England on his policy on the use of agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams).

86. Mr. Benn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Church Commissioners to discuss the impact of Government policy on the use of their agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: No such meeting has been requested by the Church Commissioners, nor have there been any requests from the URC or Continuing Congregationalists.

Pig Industry

16. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about problems facing pig producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) and for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst).

107. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to deal with the problems in the pig sector; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the pig industry to discuss the state of the industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Members to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) earlier today.

Green Pound

19. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the devaluation of the green pound.

39. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the level of the green pound, and its effect on British producers.

45. Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received about the case for adjusting the value of the green pound.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received about the level of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones).

71. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he proposes to take to alleviate the adverse financial effects of current green pound rates on the agricultural industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: Decisions on the green pound rates are best taken during the price fixing. The Government are fully aware of the real concern of United Kingdom producers about current rates and are considering the best approach to adopt in negotiations taking this and the other economic factors into account.

22. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about recent changes in the level of the green pound.

Mr. MacGregor: Green pound changes are best made at the time of the price fixing. At the last price fixing in June 1987, devaluations were agreed of 7 percentage points for beef and 5·5 percentage points for most other products. This gave us a better outcome than any of our major EC competitors.

Horse Sales

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the likely level of compliance with his proposed voluntary code of practice to implement the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommendations relating to conditions at horse sales and markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to estimate the likely level of compliance with a code of practice which is still being drafted.

Surplus Food and Wine

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total volume and value in pound sterling of surplus food and drink in the EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of EC intervention stocks of agricultural commodities is deposited in the Library of the House and updated monthly. The estimated book value of the EC stocks set out in the most recently deposited note is £5·7 billion.

37. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on recent developments in the control of surpluses of agricultural commodities in the European Community.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 15 February about the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Council at which major decisions were taken involving substantial CAP reforms.

52. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present annual cost of storing surplus food stocks in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The cost of storage of intervention stocks in 1986-87 was £129 million. The cost of financing intervention stocks in 1985, the latest year for which information is available, was £86 million.

58. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what special sales of surplus stocks of food and wine have been approved by the management committee of the EEC over the past 12 months; and what was the price, in pence per pound weight, of each such sale.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At any one time CAP arrangements provide for a number of sales schemes. These tend to follow established patterns, but the following sales from EC intervention stocks to non-EC countries, agreed over the past 12 months, have distinguishing features:

Commodity	Date	Quantity (tonnes)	Country of destination	Sale price p/lb equivalent
Wheat	November-December 1987	1,012,000	USSR	[1]2·1
Butter	February 1987	35,000	USSR	[2]6·5
Butter	February 1987	65,000	USSR	[2]6·5
Butter	March 1987	181,500	USSR	[2]6·0
Butter	April 1987	18,500	USSR	[2]6·0
Butter	November 1987	200,000	USSR	[2]6·0
Beef	August-November 1987	8,000	Peru	[3]23.0-23.3

[1] The price is calculated from the dollar equivalent of the price actually paid by the purchaser (including MCAs), converted into sterling at the spot rate at the time of the sale. None of the wheat was exported from the United Kingdom.
[2] The price is the actual sale price out of intervention (exclusive of MCAs) and converted into sterling at the green rate. None of the butter was exported from the United Kingdom.
[3] The price is the sale price (including MCAs) that would have obtained if the beef had been exported from the United Kingdom, which it was not.

I regret that the prices quoted for beef sales in reply to my hon. Friend's previous question on this subject on 4 December 1987, at columns 775-78, were incorrect. Instead of 28·2 to 36·4 p/lb equivalent, the prices should have been recorded as 23·0 to 31·2 p/lb equivalent.

Alternative Land Use

23. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with other European Economic Community Ministers regarding the proposed set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

33. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the operation of the European Community set-aside scheme in the United Kingdom.

59. Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects a set-aside scheme for arable land to be introduced in Great Britain.

88. Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will introduce a cereals set-aside scheme for Great Britain.

91. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will implement a scheme to enable farmers to set-aside cereals land in Great Britain.

93. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when a cereals set-aside scheme will be implemented in Great Britain.

100. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent progress has been made in developing a set-aside scheme for arable land.

Mr. MacGregor: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported to the House on 15 February, the general principles of a new set-aside scheme were agreed at the European Council on 11 to 13 February. This scheme goes wider than the extensification measure agreed in June 1987, and will supersede it. Discussions are proceeding in Brussels on the legal texts required to implement the agreement, and the Agriculture Council will be considering the matter next week. The Government will be making decisions about the implementation of the scheme in the United Kingdom, including the date on which the scheme will start, when the exact terms of the Community legislation are clear and we have completed consideration of the views expressed earlier in response to the consultation document issued in December.

17. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends meeting representatives of conservation groups to discuss the operation of the European Community set-aside scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: Ministers and officials of my Department are in regular contact with conservation bodies on this subject. A wide range of such bodies sent us views on the consultation document issued in December.

64. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning his proposals to encourage tree-planting on surplus agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: We announced revised proposals for the farm woodland scheme in November following a consultation exercise last year. Since then I have discussed the revised scheme with representatives of the main interested organisations. Most of the changes we made have been welcomed on all sides.

Research and Development

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of employment for staff employed in research and development in fisheries.

43. Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of employment for staff employed in research and development in agriculture.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of employment for staff employed in research and development on food.

Mr. Gummer: We are currently reviewing all our R and D programmes against the background of the Government's more general reappraisal of science and technology priorities and our policy that industry should fund more of the work of benefit to it. Future staffing levels will, as now, be designed to meet our objectives in the most efficient and cost effective way.

30. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning his review of agricultural research and development.

Mr. MacGregor: The review is an internal exercise which does not involve formal consultation outside Government. But we are receiving views from a number of bodies in the course of the study.

47. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to make an announcement about the future of research and development in agriculture, fisheries and food.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) on 4 February at column 734.

Forestry

28. Mr. Turner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with local authorities on the future of forestry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State has had discussions recently with local authority representatives about 'the proposed farm woodland scheme.

Upland Farming

36. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of upland farming in Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I remain committed to ensuring a secure future for upland farming. The recent decisions of the European Council will provide farmers throughout the United Kingdom with a more stable framework within which they can now plan for the future.

Free Food Scheme

38. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress made in organising the European Economic Community free food scheme in the United Kingdom.

49. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position in the United Kingdom for the European Economic Community's free food scheme.

68. Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards British participation in the EEC's scheme to provide free food for the needy from EEC intervention stocks.

83. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the operation of the European Commission free food scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: The period for receipt of application from organisations wishing to distribute under the arrangements ended on 29 February. The Government are examining these applications to establish what amounts the Commission should be asked to authorise for distribution in the United Kingdom. I shall make a further announcement in due course.

74. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with organisations eligible to operate the European Community free food scheme.

Mr. Gummer: Officials of my Department last met charitable organisations on 12 February, and we are in contact also with the local authority representative bodies.

Sheepmeat

42. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he anticipates the European Community review of the European sheepmeat regime will be completed.

44. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on current progress on reform of the sheepmeat regime.

51. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having in the European Community about the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: The recent focus of discussions in the Council on the review has been upon stabilisers for sheepmeat and other CAP regimes. Now that these have been agreed, I expect that further work will resume on the basis of the Commission's proposals of October 1987. The issues at stake are undoubtedly difficult and complex, and so it is not possible at this stage to say what conclusions will be reached.

Fishing Industry

46. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for reducing the costs and other burdens borne by the fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: These matters are subject to frequent review and I would be happy to respond to any specific point which the hon. Member may have in mind. At a time of increasing prosperity in the industry with low fuel costs and value of landings at record levels, it is appropriate for fishermen to continue to make a contribution towards the cost of the services provided for it.

Spirit Drinks

48. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position of negotiations in respect of the draft European regulations concerning the nomenclature of spirit drinks in the European Community and the use of the term cider brandy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Negotiations on the draft EC Council regulation defining the major spirit drinks are continuing. Provision for spirit drinks which traditionally use the term "brandy" but which are not made from a distillate of wine, such as "cider brandy", is likely to be dealt with later, during consideration of the detailed, implementing rules.

Common Agricultural Policy

53. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with his European colleagues about the future of the common agriculture policy.

Mr. MacGregor: Forthcoming meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers will be concerned with the implementation of the agricultural elements of decisions reached at the recent European Council, and with the proposals the Commission will be making for the 1988-89 price fixing.

Agriculture Industry

54. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the present state of the agriculture industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

Sea Defences

56. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from coastal local authorities regarding grant-aid for sea defence and coastal protection schemes in the current year and for 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A number of coastal local authorities have expressed concern as to whether sufficient capital allocation can be made available to them to enable them to undertake the coast protection schemes they consider necessary. I have advised them that the overall sum available will be allocated amongst the authorities concerned in a way that takes full account of the priority of the work.

Agricultural Support Costs

57. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cost of agricultural support in the United Kingdom; and what will the cost be in 1988-89 expressed in 1988 prices.

62. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of supporting agriculture in the United Kingdom in 1978-79; what is the most recent cost; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cost of agricultural support in the United Kingdom; and what was the cost in 1978-79.

102. Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current annual cost of agricultural support in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: Public expenditure on agricultural grants and subsidies for the years requested is as follows:

	£ million
1978-79 (outturn)	537
1988-89 (estimate)	[1] 1,783

[1] Source: 1988 Public Expenditure White Paper (figure for 1978-79 from Annual Review of Agriculture).

The Government also support the industry in a number of other ways such as research and development, advisory veterinary and administrative services.

104. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of supporting British agriculture each year since 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 9 February 1988 at column 156.

Food Prices

60. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the average annual rate of increase in food prices since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The average annual rate of increase in the food component of the retail prices index was 5·8 per cent. during the period May 1979 to January 1988 and recent figures indicate that the rate has now fallen to 2·9 per cent. These figures reflect the success of the Government's food policies and can be compared with the rate of increase in food prices of 16·7 per cent. per annum between October 1974 and May 1979, the period in office of the last Labour Administration.

98. Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the increase in food prices in 1977 and 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The average annual increase in food prices in 1977, when the last Labour Administration was in office, was 19 per cent. By contrast, the increase in 1987 was 3·1 per cent. This indicates the success of the Government's food policies.

99. Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the annual rate of increase in food prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The annual rate of increase in food prices since 1979 is given in the table.

Increase in food component of the retail prices index per cent.

1979	12·0
1980	12·1
1981	8·4
1982	7·9
1983	3·2
1984	5·6
1985	3·1
1986	3·3
1987	3·1
[1]1988	2·9

Animal Welfare

61. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations have been made to him about farm animal welfare.

96. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has recently received about farm animal welfare.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is in regular contact with all the main organisations interested in farm animal welfare, and they have made representations on a wide variety of topics.

63. Miss Fookes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the promotion of animal welfare.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not aware of any recent representations on this. However, the Farm Animal Welfare Council is just setting up a group to look into the subject, and I expect that it will report in due course.

73. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that full information is made available about improvements in farm animal welfare.

106. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he takes to ensure that the public is fully informed about improvements in animal welfare.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The welfare codes, which embody the latest scientific advice and the best current husbandry practice, are sent to all known livestock keepers and my staff visit farms to make information available about improvements in welfare. My Department also makes regular announcements to the media about the steps it is taking to improve animal welfare.

Agricultural Advisory Services

65. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future work of the agricultural advisory services.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The advisory and R and D work undertaken by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) is described under programmes 46 to 48 of the annual publication "Ministerial Information in MAFF (MINIM) which also gives details of ADAS contributions to other MAFF programmes. A copy of the most recent publication covering the period 1986-87 to 1988-89 is in the Library of the House.

Dairy Industry

66. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to have discussions with the National Farmers Union about the dairy industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I plan to meet representatives of the National Farmers Union on 13 April 1988 to discuss the future operation of the milk quota system.

New Zealand Butter

67. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next review the quota of New Zealand butter imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Council of Ministers is due to take a decision by 1 August 1988 on quotas for the import of New Zealand butter from 1 January 1989. That decision will be based on a proposal and report from the Commission.

Intervention Stocks (Costs)

69. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total cumulative cost to date of EEC intervention storage in (a) Stratford and (b) east London as a whole.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that records are not kept in a form which enables this information to be readily extracted.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

72. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the uptake of grant in the environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer: We estimate that grant payments to farmers for the first year of operation in the first five English ESAs will amount to some £3 million.

75. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects of the introduction of environtally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer: We are in the process of establishing a monitoring programme to assess the effects of environmentally sensitive areas. This will collect and analyse data on landscape, wildlife, historic features, farming practices and socio-economic developments. Our objective will be to assess the scheme's effects on those inter-related items. I hope to publish a first report, as required by section 18(8) of the Agriculture Act 1986, during the course of 1988.

82. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact the environmentally sensitive areas scheme has had on conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Farmers who applied to join the ESA scheme in the first year have been following the scheme conditions for 10 months. The impact of ESAs on conservation will be a gradual process, and to take account of that we will be monitoring its effects over the next five years. In the first year we have established a baseline of information on the land use, landscape, ecology and historic features of each area against which we will be able to monitor future trends.

Animal Feedingstuffs (Cereals)

76. Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive proposals from the Brussels Commission concerning an allowance to incorporate cereals in animal feedingstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The European Council has requested the Commission to examine what measures could be introduced for the utilisation of cereals in compound feedingstuffs and to submit appropriate proposals in the context of the 1988-89 price fixing. I continue to have reservations about the cost-effectiveness of schemes intended to increase the usage of cereals in animal feedingstuffs.

Tree Planting (Essex)

79. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about tree planting in Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the replanting of woodlands in south-east England, including those in Essex, damaged in last October's storm.

Food Exports

80. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for British exports of food.

89. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of British food exports.

105. Mr. McLoughlin To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the progress of British food exports over the last 12 months.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the level of British food exports over the past year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987, United Kingdom food exports reached a record level of £3,063 million. This is 14·8 per cent. higher than in 1986. Over the same period food imports increased by only 2·1 per cent. This indicates the success of Government policies in supporting the British food industry.

Small Farmers Association

95. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Small Farmers Association; and what subjects he discussed.

Mr. Gummer: Sir Richard Body has taken a number of opportunities to put his views to me on issues of agricultural policy. I am always ready to meet him.

Agriculture Ministers (Talks)

97. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his latest discussions with the Agriculture Ministers of the EEC.

Mr. MacGregor: The Agriculture Council last met on 8 February, and I reported the outcome to the House on 9 February in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker). Agreement on a number of key issues of agricultural policy was reached at the European Council on 11 to 13 February, which was the subject of the statement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the House on 15 February.

Family Farms

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific measures he hopes to take to protect the future of family farms, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All farmers need a stable framework of policy against which to plan their business decisions. This was lacking while CAP spending was not subject to proper budgetary control and while exhaustion of CAP funds threatened the collapse of the system. The decisions reached, notably on CAP reform, at the recent European Council have averted that threat and provided the clear framework farmers need.

Forestry Training

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what forestry training is received by Agricultural Development and Advisory service advisers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service employs 180 chartered surveyors who have a sound basic training in forestry and the related questions of conservation and amenity in woodlands. This training will continue to be kept up to date in co-operation with the Forestry Commission. Twenty-four of these officers have already also received further specialist training under Agricultural Development and Advisory Service policy of continuing professional development.

Departmental Purchasing

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of its purchasing procedures; and what priority he attaches to improving access for smaller firms.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As part of the purchasing initiative to seek value for money improvements in Government spending, my Department has carried out a review of its purchasing procedures for internal control purposes and has issued revised guidelines intended to assist all purchasing staff in achieving this aim. These guidelines cover advice on purchasing from small firms, and it is now this Ministry's policy to include at least one small firm wherever practical within each product group reviewed.

In addition, as part of this Ministry's developing purchasing strategy, closer relationships with suppliers are being developed through regular purchasing seminars, and detailed guidance has been drawn up for issue to potential suppliers, including small firms, on how to gain access to the Ministry's major contracts. All main purchasing points have also been issued with a guidance booklet entitled "Payment on Time" intended particularly to assist small suppliers.

Cereal Production

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many organisations responded to his consultation document "An Extensification Scheme"; which organisations supported the principle of reducing cereal production by set aside; which organisations supported the principle of reducing production by promoting less intensive farming methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: More than 260 responses have been received, expressing a wide range of views on these matters. The conclusions I and my colleagues draw from these will condition our decisions on the United Kingdom scheme, on which I will be making a statement in due course.

Cereals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total cereal crop for 1987 and give for each cereal and for each grade an estimate of production, consumption and amount sold into intervention.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department's present estimates of United Kingdom production of cereal in 1987 and domestic consumption of home-grown cereals in the 1987-88 marketing year are set out in the following table:

	'000 tonnes[1]	'000 tonnes[2]	'000 tonnes[3]
Wheat	11,874	10,144	1,730
Barley	9,130	6,170	2,960
Oats	441	441	—
Other cereals	59	59	—
	21,504	16,814	4,690

[1] Estimated production.
[2] Estimated domestic consumption of home-grown cereals.
[3] Tonnages surplus to domestic demand in 1987-88.

A breakdown of grades of cereals is not available. The volume of sales of wheat and barley into intervention this season will depend largely on the industry's success in finding export markets for the surplus tonnages. Only 1,429 tonnes of barley had been delivered into intervention in the period to 29 February, and total offers of cereal this season are expected to be less than 1 million tonnes.

ENVIRONMENT

Sporting Events (Attendances)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on total annual attendance figures in the following sports (a) football, (b) cricket, (c) athletics, (d) swimming, (e) speedway, (f) ice-hockey and (g) motor-racing.

Mr. Moynihan: Information held by the relevent governing bodies shows the following attendance at sporting events:

(i) Football: League matches and the four major Cup competitions in 1986-87—21·4 million.
(ii) Cricket: First class matches in 1986—0·82 million.
(iii) Athletics: The 18 televised events—0·11 million.
(iv) Ice Hockey: Premier and 1st divisions, Autumn cup and Wembley Championships—0·59 million.

Attendance figures for swimming, speedway and motor racing events are not collected centrally.

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers; towards a large internal market", in so far as his Department is concerned.

Mr. Ridley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today. My Department has a particular interest in proposals covering free trade in construction products, as removal of barriers created by national standards will open up Community markets to United Kingdom exporters. PSA will welcome equality of opportunity for contractors competing for public works and supplies contracts.

Housing Associations (Tenants)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants of housing associations (a) in England and Wales and (b) in Greater London, have bought their homes in each of the past five years; how many have bought under the transferable discount scheme; and what proportion in each case these figures are of the total number of tenancies with housing associations.

Mrs. Roe: The available information for England and for London for the years 1982-83 to 1986-87 is as follows. For Welsh figures, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Sales of housing association dwellings to sitting tenants
Number (percentage of dwelling stock)

Financial year	England	Greater London
1982-83	13,890 (3·2)	3,270 (2·6)
1983-84	7,870 (1·7)	1,670 (1·3)
1984-85	4,080 (0·9)	820 (0·6)
1985-86	3,700 (0·8)	900 (0·7)
1986-87	3,100 (0·6)	670 (0·5)

In addition to those sales, the following numbers of housing association tenants in England bought dwellings through the transferable discount scheme of home ownership for tenants of charitable housing associations:

	Number	Per cent. of dwelling stock
1984-85	160	less than 0·1
1985-86	2,570	0·5
1986-87	1,240	0·3

Figures for London are not readily available.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) of 8 December, Official Report, column 97, he is now able to give the final cost of the refurbishment and building work at Richmond terrace, Whitehall; if he will identify separately (a) the cost of carpets and (b) the cost of gold leaf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On the total cost of construction and fitting out of Richmond House, I have nothing to add to my answer of 8 December. The final cost will depend on settlement of the final account including claims still being negotiated.

The cost of carpets for the entire building was £202,760 including VAT. There was no expenditure on gold leaf.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost to the Exchequer of rents, rates and maintenance of all Government buildings and agencies within London; what has been the percentage increase over the past 10 years; and what has been the increase in the annual rate of inflation over the same period.

Mr. Christopher Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to his question concerning accommodation in London for the Department of the Environment, on Wednesday 2 March. The percentage increases in expenditure by the Property Services Agency on rents and maintenance over the 10 years period to March 1987 for buildings occupied by Government Departments in London are 110 and 42 per cent. respectively. The percentage increase for contributions in lieu of rates is not available. Equivalent figures for Government-funded agencies are not held centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Over the same period inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator, was 116 per cent.—representing an average annual increase of 9 per cent.

Radiation Monitoring

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to include local authority schemes for monitoring radiation, including Radmoss in Somerset and Radmil in Lancashire, in his national response plan for any future radiation emergency.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities will be able to contribute data to the national radiation monitoring system provided they have been collected and supplied according to agreed procedures. Further details of the arrangements are given in the Government's statement of "National Response Plan" proposals published earlier this year. Copies of the publication have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Rimnet monitoring equipment will be used to provide the public with information about a domestic nuclear accident.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes.

Rural Deprivation

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on rural deprivation, in the light of the report submitted to him by Mr. Brian McLaughlin on the subject of deprivation in rural areas.

Mr. Moynihan: The rural enterprise package, published in March last year, set out the Government's policy on the rural economy. The Development Commission is the principal agency for carrying forward that policy in England, and we are encouraging it to develop and implement a range of initiatives for improving economic and social conditions in the countryside.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to submit a memorandum to the European Parliament committee of inquiry on current United Kingdom practices for managing and packaging nuclear materials and wastes sent from the United Kingdom to Mol in Belgium and Hanau in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 1 March 1988]: No transfer of nuclear wastes from the United Kingdom to Mol or Hanau has been authorised by the Department and no request for a memorandum has been received from the European Parliament Committee referred to. Questions involving the managing and packaging of nuclear materials are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

DEFENCE

Belize

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what request he has received from the Government of Belize for additional military assistance to make good the sudden loss of support through the United States military aid programme; and what reply he has given.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Any such requests would remain confidential between the Government of Belize and Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to the more extensive use of facilities in Belize for the training of British forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Regular consideration is given to ways in which training for British forces can be carried out more effectively within the limits of the facilities and resources available both in the United Kingdom and overseas. There are no plans at present to extend the use of facilities in Belize for the training of British forces.

AWRE (Contracts and Agreements)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, with how many universities or other institutions of higher education the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment has research contracts or agreements currently placed.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 24 February 1988, at column 197.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 540, whether the definition there used of an enhanced radiation-capable shell includes those which can function as an enhanced radiation shell with the addition of a separate module.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the detailed technical questions concerning United States nuclear artillery shells. However, I can assure the hon. Member that the deployment to Europe of enhanced radiation nuclear artillery shells plays no part in NATO's plans.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the W-79 nuclear warhead, or any variation of it, is enhanced radiation-capable.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Some W79 nuclear artillery shells produced by the United States before the fiscal year 1985 are of the enhanced radiation (ER) type. However, as the United States Department of Defence's "Annual Report to the Congress, Fiscal Year 1984", page 234, makes clear, all United States ER weapons are being stockpiled solely on United States territory. NATO has no plans to deploy such weapons to Europe.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the W-82 nuclear warhead, or any variation of it, is enhanced radiation-capable.

Mr. Stewart: As the United States Department of Defence's "Annual Report to Congress, Fiscal Year 1987", page 227, makes clear, the United States is not planning to produce any W82 nuclear artillery shells of the enhanced radiation type.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many W-79 nuclear warheads there are in Europe; and how many he expects to be in Europe by 1995;

(2) how many W-82 nuclear warheads there are in Europe; and how many he expects to be in Europe in 1995.

Mr. Stewart: The number of nuclear artillery shells deployed in Europe by NATO now, or in the future, is classified.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the extent to which the new generation of nuclear weapons are likely to be used.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) and the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 23 February, at column 161.

Parachute Regiment (Incident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of Defence whether he proposes to undertake an inquiry with a view to disciplinary action in respect of the incident on 17 February in which members of the Parachute Regiment in a Land Rover, registration No. 94 AV 45, damaged a caravan and interfered with another vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There were two separate incidents on 17 February. The first involved two soldiers of the Parachute Regiment, who were guarding an operational "out of bounds" area on Salisbury Plain. The two soldiers were in a Land Rover vehicle, registration No. 94 AV 45. They stopped a civilian driving a car through the prohibited area, and began to question him. The driver quite rightly told them that only MOD police had the right to question a civilian in such circumstances. He subsequently reported the matter to 3 PARA HQ, but made no formal complaint, nor did he wish for any further action to be taken. The soldiers concerned were reminded of the extent of their powers.

The second incident, during the night of 17 February involved civilian occupants of a caravan on Salisbury Plain reporting to the MOD police that soldiers had picked up the caravan, moved it 10 yds, and cut a CB radio cable. The MOD police promptly investigated the incident, but the occupants of the caravan were unable to identify those concerned, and the investigation produced no evidence that soldiers had been involved. No further action was thus possible.

As both incidents were followed up at the time, I do not consider any further inquiry to be necessary.

Trident Base (Clyde)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what road developments in connection with the Trident base on the Clyde have been undertaken; and at what total cost.

Mr. Freeman: An external network of new roads to relieve local communities of construction traffic from the Clyde submarine base development has been completed at a cost of some £20 million. Within the Clyde submarine base other roadworks are included in the various construction projects of the development programme.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for (i) military presence at the Greenham common base, (ii) access to the base and (iii) any other matters of the decision on 25 February at Reading Crown court in the cases of Georgia Smith and Jean Hutchinson that the Greenham common bylaws were not applicable; what action he proposes in consequence of this ruling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The implications of the judgment will be considered in the light of the legal advice that I have requested.

Tactical Nuclear Capacity

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any sum has been included in his Department's long-term costings in respect of the modernisation and development of Britain's tactical nuclear capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not the practice of this or previous Administrations to provide details of the content of the long-term costings. No decisions have yet been taken on the modernisation of British tactical nuclear weapons.

HMS Valiant

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the refitting of HMS Valiant to be completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The refitting of HMS Valiant is currently expected to be completed in the latter half of this year.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident involving the repair of pipes leading from the nuclear reactor in HMS Valiant.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am glad to say that there has been no incident affecting nuclear safety on board HMS Valiant during her refit.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has renegotiated the price for the refitting of HMS Valiant.

Mr. Sainsbury: Because the refit of HMS Valiant commenced before the introduction of commercial management, it was not practicable to negotiate a fixed price contract at the outset. It has since been agreed that labour costs will be covered by incentive arrangements. Other elements, for example, materials and sub-contract costs, will be priced on the basis of actual ascertained costs. Any extra work under the contract will be covered by these arrangements.

Indonesia (Rapier Missiles)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of Her Majesty's armed forces are currently visiting Indonesia in connection with the sale of Rapier missiles, how long they are expected to remain there; and at what cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: A small British military advisory team is currently on a loan service posting in Indonesia in connection with the sale of Rapier missiles. It is currently planned for the team to return to the United Kingdom in January 1989. The cost is in confidence between the parties concerned.

RN Helicopter Flight (Lee-on-Solent)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of rescue sorties carried out by the Royal Navy helicopter flight at Lee-on-Solent in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of rescue sorties carried out by the Royal Navy helicopter flight at Lee-on-Solent since 1983 is as follows:

1983 155, 1984 121, 1985 125, 1986 119, 1987 136

Information on sorties prior to 1983 could be provided only with disproportionate effort.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue sorties were carried out by the Royal Navy helicopter flight at Lee-on-Solent in order to assist military personnel or ships in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The following rescue sorties were carried out by the Royal Navy helicopter flight at Lee-on-Solent in order to assist military personnel or ships since 1983.

1983 nil, 1984 nine, 1985 one, 1986 five, 1987 five.

Information on sorties prior to 1983 could be provided only with disproportionate effort.

Radioactive Incidents (Monitoring)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the meteorologists on the 45 sites to be part of the radioactive incident monitoring network will be required to sign a declaration under the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Sainsbury: All staff of the Meteorological Office, including those working at sites involved in the radioactive incident monitoring network, would be bound by the Official Secrets Act as a matter of course.

Submarine Hull-Mounted Sonar System

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent competition on the submarine hull-mounted sonar system.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has today announced the placing of a contract worth about £10 million with Plessey Naval Systems Limited for the development and manufacture of a new sonar for Royal Navy hunter-killer submarines. The equipment is to be known as Sonar2074 and will include new arrays and associated processing and display equipment.

The contract, which is firm-priced, was awarded to Plessey following a competition. The work will last about five years and will be carried out at the company's factories at Templecombe in Somerset and Newport, Gwent.

Sonar2074 will be retrofitted in three Trafalgar and Swiftsure class submarines and is being procured at around one third of the cost of the equipment which it replaces. The new processing and display equipment will also be considerably more compact than the existing systems, a major advantage in the confined space of a submarine.

The reduction in the cost of this sonar and its much smaller size owes much to the research work on computer technology and signal processing carried out at the Admiralty Research Establishment at Portland. This work is also being applied in the development of other new sonar systems for RN submarines and surface ships.

Good sales potential is envisaged for a suitably modified version of Sonar2074, particularly the compact processing and display sub-systems.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Medicines

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why applications made under article 3 of the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Special and Transitional Cases) Order 1971, as extended by article 3 of the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) Manufacture and Assembly Temporary Provisions Order 1972, are no longer being processed.

Mr. Newton: The Licensing Authority has for some time been increasingly concerned at certain problems created by the article 3 exemption system, mainly in relation to identifying the source of the products concerned. A review of the position has revealed serious legal doubts about the validity of these exemptions and as a result it is proposed to revoke article 3.

The views of interested parties on this proposal are being sought as required by section 129*(b)* of the Medicines Act 1968. In the meantime no further exemptions are currently being allowed. I have today placed in the Library a copy of a consultation letter which is being issued to all known holders of article 3 exemptions, to applicants for such exemptions and to professional and industrial organisations.

Cervical Cytology Laboratories

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was (i) the annual running cost, (ii) the staff complement and (iii) the number of cervical cytology smear results processed in the cervical cytology laboratories in (a) Warrington and (b) Macclesfield in the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: Such information as is available is set out in the table. Details of the annual running costs of laboratories are not held centrally and my hon. Friend may care to contact the district health authority chairmen for the information.

1986

	Macclesfield	Warrington
Number of cases examined	15,909	10,600
Of those examined number diagnosed as positive	172	98
Trained staff in post at 31 December 1986 (whole-time equivalent)	3·2	4·0

Source: DHSS form SBH140.

Notes:

1. A woman who was tested more than once was counted on each occasion, but where more than one smear was taken from the same patient at the same session, they were counted as one test.

2. Staffing levels relate to fully trained staff with a whole-time equivalent being calculated for staff employed part-time. The following staff are included in the figures: Pathologists and other medically qualified staff, medical laboratory scientific officers, scientific officers and laboratory cythology screeners. We do not hold details of staff complement.

London School of Prosthetics

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what would be the estimated cost of modernisation if the London school of prosthetics were to remain at Roehamption and Paddington;

(2) what would be the estimated cost involved in transferring the London school of prosthetics from Roehampton and Paddington to Salford.

Mr. Scott: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority to which my hon. Friend should address his questions.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the identifiable cost to public funds of his campaign to persuade benefit recipients to take payments through bank accounts.

Mr. Portillo: About £2 million.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of recipients of supplementary benefit heating allowances prior to April; and if he will list them by category of claim.

Mr. Portillo: The latest information from which the number of supplementary benefit claimants receiving weekly heating additions can be extracted shows that 2,829,000 claimants are receiving a heating addition. The number of heating additions in payments broken down by category of heating addition is as follows:

	Numbers (000s) Feb' 86 figures	Rate from July 1986 (£)
Basic rate (including age related)	1,189	2·20

	Numbers (000s) Feb 86 figures	Rate from July 1986 (£)

[1] In certain cases more than one heating addition may be payable to the claimant.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will amend the social fund manual to give effect to the undertaking given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 15 December 1987, Standing Committee E, Official Report, column 638, that, when a social fund officer arranges for an applicant to be interviewed following an application for a review, the applicant will be given a written explanation of the reasons for the social fund officer's decision before he attends the interview.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers' decisions will be notified by letter. Where payment is refused, or is awarded to a lesser extent than that claimed, the letter will always include the reasons for the decision. Applicants will therefore be aware of the reasons for the decision before the interview, and no amendment to the social fund manual is required to accomplish this.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people had their benefit reduced or suspended between April 1987 and February 1988 for either (a) refusing a youth training scheme place or (b) leaving a scheme early in (i) the Leeds, West constituency, (ii) the Leeds metropolitan district council area and (iii) Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is not available in the precise form requested since the boundaries of the Leeds, West constituency and the Leeds metropolitan district council area are not conterminous with the areas covered by the Department's local offices. However, the following information which is provisional, and therefore subject to amendment, may be of interest.

Number of cases in which Supplementary Benefit was reduced for refusal of or premature termination of a youth training scheme place: 8 April 1987 to 9 February 1988

Incapacity for Work

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will place in the Library a copy of the instructions and guidance issued to his officials, including adjudication officers, regarding the circumstances in which the question of a person's incapacity for work is to be referred to a medical practitioner under regulation 8 of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Current advice to adjudication officers on this is covered in part V of the insurance officer's guide and in IOG memos 462 and 463, copies of which are in the Library. From April 1988, this guidance will be in volume 8 of the adjudication officer's guide and copies will be placed in the Library.

Adjudication Officers' Guide

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will deposit additional copies of the available parts of the adjudication officers' guide in the Library for the use of hon. Members.

Mr. Portillo: The complete 10 volumes of the adjudication officer's guide will be published by HMSO before 11 April 1988. Three copies will then be placed in the Library in accordance with the usual practice.

Sickle Cell Anaemia and Thalassaemia

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by district the screening and counselling centres for sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia; how many counsellors work from each centre; and whether they are engaged full-time or part-time.

Mrs. Currie: It is for district health authorities to decide the resources to be devoted locally to these inherited blood disorders in the light of local needs and competing priorities. Detailed information about screening and counselling centres is not held centrally but I understand that there are counselling centres in the following districts:

Brent
Birmingham
City and Hackney
Haringey
Islington
Lambeth
Liverpool
Manchester
Newham
Nottingham
Southwark
Waltham Forest

Children in Care

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children are currently in institutional care.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available centrally in exactly the form requested. It is estimated that there were 16,900 children in care of local authorities in England who were in residential care at 31 March 1986.

Breast Cancer and Cervical Cancer

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost per head of breast cancer screening and cervical cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: Expenditure on cervical cancer screening is not separately identified in health authority accounts. It has been estimated that the average cost of taking and examining a cervical smear is about £10. It is estimated that, based on the economic appraisal in the Forrest report, the average revenue cost per woman screened by mammography for breast cancer is about £14 including, where necessary, the cost of assessment and diagnosis.

Measles

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of cases of measles recorded in England and Wales and the percentage of children vaccinated.

Mrs. Currie: The information is as follows:

	[1]1986
Notifications of measles[2]	82,061
Percentage of children[3] born in 1984 and immunised by the end of the second year after birth (measles)	71

Elderly People

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to what percentage of people (a) over 70 years and (b) over 80 years are able to do their own shopping, cooking, housework and personal care.

Mrs. Currie: The 1985 general household survey shows the following percentages of people aged 70 and over and 80 and over who can perform the tasks listed on their own:

	Aged 70 and over Per cent.	Aged 80 and over Per cent.
Cook a main meal	90	81
Do the household shopping	81	61
Wash small amount of clothing by hand	90	80
Brush hair or shave	98	96
Cut own toenails	65	46
Bath, shower or wash all over	89	78
Clean windows	76	55
Sweep floors	85	71
Do jobs involving climbing a stepladder or steps	62	39
Wash face and hands	99	98

The 1985 general household survey interviewed nearly 20,000 people aged 16 and over living in private households in Great Britain.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of people over the age of 70 years and over the age of 80 years (i) live at home, (ii) live with members of their family, (iii) live in sheltered accommodation and (iv) live in residential homes, institutions or hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: The information is not available precisely as requested but in the 1981 census the percentage of people in Great Britain who were not resident in private households (that is lived in hospitals, homes, communal establishments or other institutions) was 5·2 per cent. of those aged 70 and over and 12·2 per cent. of those aged 80 and over. The general household survey does not cover institutional populations but provides the following information about people resident in private households:

Great Britain, 1985

Percentages

Household type	Aged 70 and over	Aged 80 and over
Living alone or with spouse only	82	75
Living with spouse and others	5	4
Living with siblings or children	11	19
Other	2	2

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to what percentage of people over the age of (a) 70 years and (b) 80 years are (i) mentally fit and (ii) physically fit.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that we do not hold this information.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the projection for numbers of people who will be (a) over 80 years, (b) over 90 years and (c) over 100 years in five, 10, 20 and 25 years, respectively.

Mrs. Currie: The information available is shown in the table for the United Kingdom, using 1986 as the reference year.

United Kingdom

Age	Projected resident population at mid year[1] (in thousands) 1986	1991	1996	2006	2011

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures for 1987, 1977, 1967 and 1958 of the number of people living in the United Kingdom aged over 100 years, aged over 90 years and aged over 80 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information available for the years and age bands requested is shown in the table. Figures for mid-1986 are the latest available.

Under-fives Initiative

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the evaluation report by Willem van der Eyken on the under-fives initiative; when he expects to publish it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We expect to receive the final document shortly, and will make an announcement about publication and circulation when we have studied it.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has discussed the administration of the new benefit system with the Data Protection Registrar; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There has been discussion with the Data Protection Registrar to clarify the data protection requirements in connection with personal data systems administered by the Department, but the administration of the new benefit system has not been discussed specifically. The housing benefit scheme is administered by local authorities who are responsible for the confidentiality of personal data. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on Thursday 18 February at columns 695-96.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the population of pensionable age in Wales is dependent on means-tested benefits.

Mr. Portillo: It is estimated that some 20 per cent. of the population of pensionable age in Wales receive supplementary benefit. This carries with it entitlement to certificated housing benefit. Similar figures for standard housing benefit are not available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners in Wales are entitled to supplementary benefit but do not claim it; and what measures his Department is taking to eliminate such underclaiming.

Mr. Portillo: We will continue to promote take-up of supplementary benefit by issuing claim forms to all retirement pensioners, and by a range of other measures.

Take-up estimates are available only for Great Britain as a whole. A convenient summary of the overall position is provided on pages 272 and 273 of Cm. 288 (the 1988 public expenditure White Paper). These suggest that in 1983, 79 per cent. of available benefit was claimed by eligible pensioners. The indications are that the average amount unclaimed by pensioners is small, £3.40 per week, including some 60 per cent. entitled to less than £3. The 1983 take-up estimates are uncertain because of apparent deficiencies in the information obtained by the family expenditure survey from pensioner respondents.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioner households in Wales will receive a reduced amount of housing benefit with the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in April; and how many such households will lose their entitlement to housing benefit entirely.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available for Wales alone.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the names of the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines, giving the professional and business background of each member.

Mr. Newton: The names of members of the committee, their professional qualifications and the employment positions they currently hold are as follows:

Professor A. W. Asscher, BSc, MD, FRCP (Chairman), Dean, St. George's Hospital Medical School.

Dr. G. Booth, B. Pharm, PhD, FPS, MCPP, Senior Lecturer in Pharmacy Practice, University of Bradford and ex-President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain.

Professor A. M. Breckenridge, MD, MSC, FRCP, Professor of Clinical Pharmacology, University of Liverpool.

Professor J. G. Collee, MD, FRCP, FRCPath, Professor of Bacteriology, University of Edinburgh.

Professor P. H. Elworthy, B Pharm, PhD, DSc, MSC, CChem, MRSC, FPS, MCPP, Emeritus, Professor of Pharmacy, University of Manchester, Visiting Professor in Pharmaceutics at King's College, London and School of Pharmacy, London.

Professor A. T. Florence, PhD, DSc, CChem, FRSC, MPS, MCPP, Professor of Pharmaceutics, University of Strathclyde, Glasgow.

Professor M. W. Greaves, MD, PhD, FRCP, Professor of Clinical Dermatology, University of London.

Professor H. S. Jacobs, BA, MD, FRCP, Professor of Reproductive Endocrinology, Middlesex Hospital Medical School, London.

Dr. W. A. Jerrett, MB, BCh, FRCGP, General Practitioner, Glamorgan.

Professor M. J. S. Langman, BSc, MD, MBBS, FRCP, Professor of Internal Medicine, University of Birmingham.

Professor D. H. Lawson, MD, MB, ChB, FRCP(Ed), Consultant Physician in Clinical Pharmacology, Glasgow.

Mr. F. E. Loeffler, FRCS, FRCOG, Gynaecologist, London.

Professor J. O'D McGee, MD, PhD, FRCPath, MA, Professor of Morbid Anatomy, Oxford.

Professor A. E. M. McLean, BM, PhD, FRCPath, Professor of Toxicology, University College Hospital, London.

Dr. Elizabeth Mayne, MB, BCh, BAO, MRCP, FRCPath, Department of Haematology, University of Belfast.

Professor S. R. Meadow, MA, FRCP, DCh, Professor of Paediatrics and Child Health, Leeds University.

Professor S. A. Montgomery, MD, BSc, MB, BS, FRCPsych, DPM Eng, Professor of Psychiatry, St. Mary's Medical School, London.

Professor G. Nuki, MB, BS, FRCP(Ed), FRCP(Lond), MRCS, Professor of Rheumatology, University of Edinburgh.

Dr. B. L. Pentecost, MD, FRCP, Consultant Physician, Birmingham.

Professor M. D. Rawlins, MD, FRCP, BSc, Professor of Clinical Pharmacology, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Professor M. P. Vessey, MB, MD, FFCM, Professor of Social and Community Medicine, University of Oxford.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he lays down for the working of the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Newton: The Committee on Safety of Medicines works within the statutory framework set out in the Medicines (Committee on Safety of Medicines) Order 1970 (SI 1970, No. 1257), made under section 4 of the Medicines Act 1968. The committee's statutory purposes are giving advice with respect to safety, quality and efficacy, in relation to human use, of any substance or article (not being an instrument, apparatus or appliance) to which any provision of that Act is applicable; and to promoting the collection and investigation of information relating to adverse reactions, for the purpose of enabling such advice to be given.

Under paragraph 4 of schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968, the committee has power to regulate its own procedure. Committee members are appointed for their medical, scientific and pharmaceutical experience and expertise. Guidelines on safety, quality and efficacy are published by the United Kingdom licensing authority and the European Community for use by applicants for product licences; the resulting applications may be put to the committee for its advice. Members are bound both by section 118 of the 1968 Act, which broadly restricts the disclosures of information furnished to a person in pursuance of the Act, and also by the law on confidentiality. Members are required to follow guidelines on declaration of interests as such interests may preclude members from participating in committee proceedings in relation to a particular product.

The figures for 1987 are not yet available. Figures in this format for England alone are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Figures for hospital and community health services are not collected centrally. Figures are based on a sample of prescriptions of approximately 1 in 200 in England and Wales and 1 in 100 in Scotland.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many yellow card reports of suspected adverse reactions to medicines were submitted to the Committee on Safety of Medicines in each of the years 1978 to 1987 inclusive; and how many in each of these years were in respect of (a) benzodiazepines in general and (b) lorazepam in particular.

Mr. Newton: The table gives the figures requested. Reports of suspected adverse drug reactions do not necessarily imply a causal relationship.

Year	Total yellow card reports received	Total where suspected drug is a benzodiazepine including lorazepam	Total where suspected drug is lorazepam
1978	11,873	201	36
1979	10,840	218	29
1980	10,179	232	31
1981	13,032	166	24
1982	10,922	226	24
1983	12,689	274	35
1984	12,163	243	20
1985	12,652	179	29
1986	15,527	143	21
1987	16,431	100	16

Notes:

The second column gives the actual number of reports received by the CSM in the calendar year. The third and fourth columns are taken from computer records.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to the National Health Service of the prescribing of (a) benzodiazepines, and (b) lorazepam in each of the years 1978 to 1988 inclusive.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to ensure that general practitioners take action on the Committee on Safety of Medicine's advice in its "Current Problems" No. 21, on the danger of overprescribing benzodiazepines.

Mr. Newton: Doctors must exercise their professional judgment based on current knowledge in deciding how best to treat their patients. The problems of benzodiazepine therapy have been known for some time and the number of prescriptions for these drugs is falling. The advice contained in "Current Problems" No. 21 supported and added to advice doctors already had available from a variety of sources such as manufacturers' data sheets and articles in professional journals. In addition, the Department funds the distribution to doctors of independent publications including the British National Formulary, Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin and Prescribers' Journal which have all provided guidance on the prescribing and use of benzodiazepines. Doctors of the Department's regional medical service which monitors general practitioner prescribing will continue to take a specific interest in the prescribing of benzodiazepines.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many prescriptions for the tranquilliser lorazepam were issued in each of the years 1978 to 1987;

(2) how many prescriptions were made out for (a) all benzodiazepines, and (b) lorazepam in each of the years 1978 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Newton: The number of prescriptions for (a) all benzodiazepines and (b) lorazepam dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in each of the years 1978-1986 inclusive was as follows:

Millions

Number of prescriptions	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
All benzodiazepines	30·6	30·7	29·1	29·5	29·7	28·7	28·0	25·7	25·3
Lorazepam	1·8	2·1	2·4	2·9	3·5	3·5	3·2	3·1	3·1

Mr. Newton: The cost to the family practitioner services[1] in England of benzodiazepines and lorazepam for the calendar years 1985 and 1986[2] were as follows:

£ million

	Benzodiazepines	Lorazepam
1985	27·3	3·4
1986	28·2	2·7

Notes:

[1] Figures are not available for costs in the Hospital and Community Health Services, as Health Authority accounts only record total expenditure on drugs.

[2] The information requested is not available in the form requested prior to 1985, and is not yet available for 1987.

Long-Stay Patients

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much of the cost of all long-stay patients, respectively, for geriatric, mentally handicapped, mentally ill, and psychiatric patients, the National Health Service can claim back from social security;

(2) how much the National Health Service could claim back annually from social security if the same arrangements applied for claiming the cost of residence as apply in local authority residential homes and private residential homes;

(3) what would be the additional annual revenue to the National Health Service if patients whose incomes make them ineligible for social security payments were charged the cost of residence in long-stay hospitals.

Mr. Portillo: None. Social security is available only to individual claimants. The National Health Service, local authorities and independent residential care and nursing homes cannot claim any costs from social security. However, people in local authority and independent homes may be able to get help with charges from supplementary benefit. No data are available on which to base estimates of the amount of supplementary benefit which would be payable if health authorities were able to charge on the same basis as either local authorities or the independent sector.

I regret that no information is available centrally to identify the number of National Health Service patients in long-stay hospitals whose income would make them ineligible for income-related social security benefits.

Benefits (Disqualification)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider his proposals to extend the maximum disqualification period for benefits to six months.

Mr. Portillo: An order to amend section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1985 (which gives the power to disqualify a person for unemployment benefit) increasing the maximum period of disqualification from 13 to 26 weeks, was debated and approved by the House on 1 March.

Terrorism, Jerusalem (Compensation)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dependants of the victims of the terrorist outrage in Jerusalem, perpetrated on 22 July 1946 by the Irgun Zvai Leumi, are still in receipt of compensation from his Department; and what levels of compensation are paid.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of any.

Meningitis

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the recent increase in the incidence of meningitis.

Mrs. Currie: The country has been experiencing an upsurge in the number of cases of meningococcal infection similar to one which occurred in the mid-1970s. Notifications have been rising since 1984 and the indication are that there will be some increase this year over last year's figure of 1,090 cases of meningococcal meningitis and 158 deaths from meningococcal infection.

To ensure that doctors and health authorities were fully informed about the situation and were prepared to deal effectively with local outbreaks, Sir Donald Acheson the Government's Chief Medical Officer, wrote to all doctors last year and again early last month when he enclosed a copy of a leaflet produced for parents by Gloucester district health authority. He also sent regional medical officers a check list for management purposes and asked them to inform him of their regional plans to deal with the disease. These were discussed at a meeting held later in the month.

I have arranged for a copy of the letter to all doctors to be placed in the Library.

Young Persons (Housing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what advice he intends to give 16 and 17-year-olds who have left home but receive no income support about housing themselves from September onwards;

(2) how he proposes to determine the circumstances under which a 16 or 17-year-old may be justified in leaving home once income support has been withdrawn from under 18 year-olds.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 25 February 1988]: Regulations have yet to be prepared, but it is the Government's intention that 16 and 17-year-olds who are not required to be available for work—for example, the lone parent and the severely disabled—will be entitled to income support at all times. School leavers who have good reason for being away from home and who have registered for a job or a YTS place will be entitled to income support during the child benefit extension period—up to the end of the calendar year for summer school leavers and up to three months for others—whilst they are considering the job or youth training scheme opportunities that are available. The regulations will include those young people with no living parent or guardian, those who have recently been in local authority care, those placed away from home by a probation officer of social worker and those who cannot live at home because they would be threatened with physical or sexual abuse.

Those unemployed young people who wish to live away from home and who are not covered by the regulations will have no entitlement to income support unless the Secretary of State directs that, exceptionally, benefits should be paid on the ground of severe hardship. Someone who joins the young training scheme will be able to receive income support, if appropriate, to supplement his training allowance.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he proposes to make any exceptions to the withdrawal of income support for under 18-year-olds so that income support could be given to those resident in an approved scheme of rehabilitation, such as that provided by the Young Men's Christian Association; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many 16 and 17-year-olds he expects to be both living away from home and unable to pay rental and accommodation charges in September; what that number will be for the constituency of Stoke-on-Trent, North; and what advice he will give to the Young Men's Christian Association to enable it to continue to accommodate 16 and 17-year-olds until September in the knowledge that they will no longer be able to pay the charges when income supplement is withdrawn in September.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The Government do not intend to make any exceptions to its general rules on income support to cater specifically for 16 and 17-year-old residents of accommodation provided by the Young Men's Christian Association.

Some will be entitled to income support without time limit because they are incapable of work, whilst those who are fit for work, who are living away from home with good cause—for example, orphans and those who would be threatened with physical or sexual abuse—and who have registered for a job or a youth training scheme place will be entitled to benefit for a short period whilst they consider the job and youth training scheme opportunities that are available.

The guarantee of a youth training scheme place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one will be seen by the majority of young people as an opportunity to make a good start in life. Someone who joins the youth training scheme will be able to receive income support, if appropriate, to supplement his training allowance.

No estimates are available of the number of 16 and 17-year-olds who will be living away from home in September and who will be unable to pay rental or accommodation charges. We estimate, however, there are some 21,000 in the age group in Great Britain who are either boarders or householders; there are no comparable figures for the Stoke area.

Patient Expenditure

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average annual expenditure per patient in 1986-87 by the Pontefract district health authority.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 1 March 1988]: For 1986-87, hospital costing returns submitted by the Pontefract district health authority show average costs per patient treated as follows (average costs for the Yorkshire region are also included for comparative purposes).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Banbridge District Council

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he intends to take in view at Banbridge district council's decision to prevent further consultation between the town and country planning department and the district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) will continue to consult the Banbridge district council on all planning applications involving land within its administrative area. This will take the form of the presentation on a regular basis of a schedule of applications received. Schedules will indicate the preliminary opinion of the Department as to how each application should be determined. In accordance with established practice, if the Department does not receive the comments of the council within two weeks, a decision will be issued in accordance with the provisional opinion.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent on advertising the job training scheme; and how much that was per filled place since its inception.

Mr. Nicholls: Expenditure on advertising up to the end of January was some £8,370,000. This represents a cost of £115 per place filled since the start of the scheme in November 1986 up to December 1987, the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of entrants to the job training scheme in Barnsley have obtained a credit or qualification as a direct result of their time on the scheme since its inception.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Official Report, Tuesday 23 February, at column 127.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications there have been for the child care allowance on the new job training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of January 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there had been 13 applications for child care allowance on the new Job Training Scheme in the 10 pilot areas where this allowance is available.

Jobcentres (Docklands)

Mr. Leyton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Manpower Services Commission has for setting up jobcentre facilities in London docklands.

Mr. Lee: Responsibility for jobcentres now rests with Department of Employment's employment service. It has a network of 23 local offices in the docklands boroughs of which 11 offer jobcentre facilities. It is currently reviewing this network with a view to helping the largest possible number of local unemployed people find work.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Justice group on the industrial tribunal system; and if he will make a statement on any response he proposes to make.

Mr. Nicholls: I am considering, in conjunction with the presidents of the industrial tribunals, the recommendations made by Justice in its report on industrial tribunals published in December 1987.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment group, comprising the Department of Employment, the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service, the Health and Safety Executive, and the Manpower Services Commission has received a total of 102 subject access requests under the Data Protection Act. Prior to the subject access data of 11 November 1987, it was not possible to make any firm estimate of the number of requests which would be received. We have no plans at present to reconsider the subject access fees charged by the Department of Employment Group.

Community Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific provisions are being made to ensure that smaller voluntary organisations will be able to continue to sponsor places on the revised community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Following publication of the White Paper "Training for Employment" on 16 February 1988 the Manpower Services Commission is developing the detailed rules for the new adult training programme. There will be a variety of opportunities for voluntary organisations to participate and I refer the hon. Member to para 5.13 of the White Paper which states:

"The Government are very concerned that voluntary organisations and others which have an established role in the Community Programme should have the opportunity to make a major contribution to the new programme".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific proposals he is considering to ensure a smooth transition in funding to the proposed new community programme for voluntary sector projects and organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: Existing providers who become training managers in the new adult training programme will be funded for all their filled places under the arrangements set out in the White Paper "Training for Employment" published on 16 February 1988. To ensure a smooth transition the Manpower Services Commission's area managers will be talking in detail with their agents and independent sponsors about these arrangements, and the positive role we hope they will play in the new programme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific consideration he gives to regional variations in needs and opportunities in making allocations for project-based schemes under the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Community programme places are allocated to regions and areas in the light of both national priorities set out in planning guidance issued on an annual basis, and local priorities determined in consultation with area manpower boards. The following factors are taken into account when deciding on regional allocations:

1. The distribution of eligible unemployed people.
2. Current and past performance in achieving filled place targets.
3. The relative buoyancy of labour markets.
4. Flexibility to meet special needs which may arise during the year.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make an estimate of the proportion of those current community programme schemes which will not fall within the guidelines for eligibility under the proposals for the programme's reform.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission are currently developing the detailed guidelines and criteria for the new adult training programme. It is not possible, therefore, to estimate the number of current community programme schemes that will not meet the guidelines for the new programme. However, the new programme will provide at least 170,000 places for project-based training, and this should ensure that the experience of existing community programme agents and sponsors can continue to be harnessed.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he will be undertaking with organisations running existing community programmes and adult training schemes concerning the implementation of the new adult training scheme and other proposals contained in the recent White Paper from his Department.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission has decided to establish a task group representing employers, trade unions, local authorities, voluntary bodies and other organisations running existing community programme and adult training schemes to advise on the implementation of the new adult training programme. In the course of local planning, the Manpower Services Commission will also be consulting area manpower boards and potential providers of the new programme.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the entrants to the community programme on the 12 months to December 1987 were (a) to full-time places, (b) men, (c) single, (d) aged over 25 years, (e) unemployed for over 12 months and (f) were formerly benefit claimants.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest information available is that relating to the 12 months to the end of November 1987. This is given in the table.

	Number	per cent.
Total entrants	272,697
of whom
(a) Full-time	31,633	11·6
(b) Male	202,342	74·2
(c) Single	203,977	74·8
(d) Aged over 25 years	115,351	42·3
(e) Unemployed for over 12 months	216,794	79·5
(f) Formerly benefit claimants in direct receipt of benefit	263,153	96·5
(g) Formerly benefit claimants indirectly in receipt of benefit	5,858	2·1

Major Hazards

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the members of the Health and Safety Commission sub-committee on major hazards; and if he has set a timetable for its work.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on major hazards completed its work in 1984. The commission's standing advisory committee on dangerous substances subsequently set up a sub-committee on the major hazard aspects of the transport of dangerous substances. The current members of the sub-committee are:

Mr. A. J. Williams, Health and Safety Executive (Chairman);
Dr. D. Plester, Dr. I. Canadine, Mr. S. Hope and Mr. J. Middlemas (appointed after consultation with the Confederation of British Industry);
Mr. R. Coyle and Mr. D. Matthews (appointed after consultation with the Trades Union Congress);
Mr. W. Cooney and Mr. E. Johnson (appointed after consultation with local authority associations), Mr. P. Abbott, British Rail;
Dr. V. Marshall, an independent expert.

There is no set timetable for the work of the sub-committee. It will report as soon as possible, but the timing of final conclusions will depend upon the complexity of the problems revealed.

Work Accidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have suffered injuries or death in work accidents in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Scotland for each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) Official Report 16 December 1987, at column 578 in which I gave the available information for Great Britain. A breakdown of these figures for England, Wales and Scotland could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The position in Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have been brought in respect of work accidents for each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is set out in the table. Not all these cases arose from accidents at work.

Year	Number of prosecutions: information laid

Benefit

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people disqualified from unemployment benefit for each area office in the Glasgow area within the last year, giving the reasons for disqualification and the length of the period of disqualification.

Mr. Lee: The number of adjudication officers' decisions that disqualified claimants for receipt of unemployment benefit during the latest period for which figures are available (year ending 30 June 1987) are detailed in the table, broken down by reasons for disqualification. Figures are not available on an individual office basis and those given therefore represent the total number of disqualifications by adjudication officers in Glasgow. The figures do not cover disallowances of benefit, nor disqualification of those absent from Great Britain. No analysis is made of the length of the disqualification imposed, and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Year ending 30 June 1987

Leaving Voluntarily	8,716
Misconduct	3,113
Refusal of Suitable Employment	24
Neglect of a Reasonable Opportunity of Suitable Work	1
Refusal to Carry Out Written Recommendations	1
Refusal or Failure to Take a Reasonable Opportunity of Approved Training	22
Trade Dispute	4

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of people disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit within the last year have appealed against that disqualification in (a) Glasgow, (b) Scotland and (c) Britain as a whole;

(2) how many people disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit have appealed the decision; and what percentages of disqualifications this represents.

Mr. Lee: Separate records of the number of appeals against disqualifications of unemployment benefit are not kept, and such information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The table shows the numbers of appeals against all adverse decisions, including both disqualifications and disallowances within (a) Scotland and (b) Britain as a whole for the year ending December 1986. The Department has no figures for other areas available.

Great Britain
Total of disallowances and disqualifications	1,081,394
Total appeals	44,874 = 4·15 per cent.
Scotland
Total of disallowances and disqualifications	116,109
Total appeals	6,272 = 5·4 per cent.

Training Schemes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each of the Manpower Services Commission's areas in Greater London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, the Birmingham and Solihull Manpower Services Commission area and for Great Britain as a whole, what are the most recent monthly statistics for new job training schemes, for all those trainees who have left the scheme, how many (i) found work, (ii) failed to attend, (iii) went on to another course of training or education, (iv) completed the course, (v) left for sickness or (vi) went back on to unemployment and showing the total number of currently filled places.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 February 1988]: At 29 January 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, some 26,249 formerly unemployed people were participating in the new job training scheme. The area breakdown is set out in the table.

As for leavers from the scheme, a return from managing agents seeking information on the reasons for leaving was first requested in October 1987. Data from this return is known to be incomplete so far and will not be comparable between areas and managing agents in all places. The data does not provide reliable information about job entry rates, or other trainee destinations. This information will be gathered by an independent follow-up survey of all trainees which has now started. Early results are expected in the spring. Managing agents' returns will be considered in the light of that information.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each of the Manpower Services Commission's areas in Greater London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, the Birmingham and Solihull Manpower Services Commission area and for Great Britain as a whole, what are the most recent monthly statistics for new job training schemes, showing (a) entrants in the latest available period, (b) the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started, (c) a breakdown of entrants, showing how many were (i) male and (ii) female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disability.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The tables give the requested information about entrants to the new job training scheme.

WALES

Reception Classes

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many four-year-old children in each local education authority in Wales attend reception classes in primary schools; what percentage of the estimated four-year-old population in each local education authority area this represents; and what is the average pupil-to-teacher ratio in local education authority for these classes, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested. However, the number of four-year-olds attending primary schools as at January 1987 is as follows:

	Number of pupils	Pupils as a percentage of the estimated 4-year-old population
Clwyd	4,828	100·0
Dyfed	4,039	100·0
Gwent	5,418	98·5
Gwynedd	2,708	100·0
Mid Glamorgan	6,887	97·0
Powys	1,324	100·0
South Glamorgan	4,802	94·2
West Glamorgan	4,495	99·9

Education Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of children whose education is governed by statements under the provision of the Education Act 1981 as a proportion of the total school population of each local education authority in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information as at January 1987 is as follows:

	Number of statemented pupils	Proportion of total school population
Clwyd	1,208	1·8
Dyfed	478	0·9
Gwent	1,210	1·7
Gwynedd	765	2·0
Mid Glamorgan	3,244	3·4
Powys	206	1·1
South Glamorgan	1,219	1·9
West Glamorgan	1,884	3·3

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number and proportion of children whose education is governed by statements under the provision of the Education Act 1981 in maintained primary and secondary schools, in special schools, in each local education authority in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information as at January 1987 is as follows:

	Primary and secondary schools		Special schools[1]
	Number of statemented pupils	Proportion of pupils	Number of statemented pupils	Proportion of pupils
Clwyd	316	0·5	788	98·5
Dyfed	147	0·3	290	93·5
Gwent	597	0·9	476	100·0
Gwynedd	450	1·2	282	100·0
Mid Glamorgan	2,392	2·6	655	99·4
Powys	54	0·3	138	87·9
South Glamorgan	551	0·9	645	97·3
West Glamorgan	1,533	2·8	333	100·0

[1] Includes pupils in the process of assessment for statements. Pupils who were in special schools at the time of implementation of the Education Act 1981 were subject to transitional arrangements and not, in all cases, included by local education authorities in their statistical returns as fully statemented.

The number of statemented pupils include only those who are the responsibility of a given local education authority and are receiving education in that authority's area.

ENERGY

Coal Imports

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy from which countries Britain has imported coal in the last 12 months; and how many tonnes have been imported from each respective country at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal imports into the United Kingdom during 1987 were as shown in the following table:

Country of origin	'000 tonnes
Australia	3,441
USA	2,898
Poland	1,083
Netherlands	664
Canada	362
Colombia	297
FR of Germany	256
South Africa	221
Belgium/Luxembourg	192

Country of origin	'000 tonnes
China	146
Others[1]	220
Total	9,780

[1] 10 countries, each of which supplied less than 100,000 tonnes of coal to the United Kingdom in 1987.
Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to make his Department's leaflet entitled "Coal Mining Subsidence Damage—A Guide to Claimants Rights" widely known.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since the leaflet was published in May 1986 over 100,000 have been issued to prospective claimants through agencies such as the citizens' advice bureaux, libraries and local authorities, as well as the professional bodies and British Coal. My Department also deals direct with regular requests for replacements. I believe that the leaflet is well known in coal mining areas.

Electricity Supply Industry (Sale)

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department will be appointing outside consultants to advise on the sale of the electricity supply industry; if he will list the areas where he will be seeking outside advice and the names of the consultants who have applied to advise his Department; and when these appointments are likely to be made.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The consultants listed were appointed last year to provide advice on electricity privatisation:

Kleinwort Benson —preliminary financial advice
Touche Ross —regulatory and accounting advice
Slaughter and May —legal advice
Merz and McLellan—technical advice

The Department is considering the appointment of financial advisers for the next phase of electricity privatisation. Other appointments will be made in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Law Reform Act 1987

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if Her Majesty's Government have decided upon the commencement date for the Family Law Reform Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor will bring the Family Law Reform Act 1987 (which reforms the law relating to the consequences of birth outside marriage) into force on 4 April 1988 except for part II, sections 24 and 25, which are directly dependent on part II, and section 23 which deals with scientific tests. Before section 23 can be brought into force, detailed arrangements for the purpose of facilitating the introduction of testing by DNA profiling will need to be devised. The Lord Chancellor is considering with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary how this might best be done.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the credits made available to the Inland Revenue by his Department which were specified in his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 16 February, Official Report, columns 571-2, represent bookkeeping entries within central Government accounting not involving any payment of money.

Mr. Luce: These cases, and other acceptance in lieu transactions, involve payments to the Inland Revenue, not bookkeeping entries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufactured Goods and Services

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has a revised figure for the anticipated balance of trade in (a) manufactured goods and (b) services for the United Kingdom for the current year; and what was the figure for 1979.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend will be making a forecast for the current year at Budget time. In 1979 the balance of trade in manufactured goods showed a surplus of £2,698 million and services a surplus of £3,815 million.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of payments for the United Kingdom in 1988-89.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making a new forecast at Budget time.

Cash Limits

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give revised cash limits for 1987-88 which take account of the decision by some Departments not to seek supplementary provision to cover the carry forward allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme.

Mr. Major: Under the end-year flexibility scheme, announced in 1983, some 33 1987-88 cash limits were increased to allow for the carry forward of capital underspend in 1986-87—Official Report, 23 July 1987, columns 434-38. In the case of five voted cash limits, the relevant Departments have not sought parliamentary approval for the extra provision in a Supplementary Estimate. To keep the control figures in line with provision, the cash limits are accordingly being reduced; a list is shown in the following table.

Revisions to 1987-88 voted cash limits resulting from the carry forward of capital underspends in 1986-87 not being required

Class	Vote	Accounting department	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit £000	Decrease £000	Revised cash limit £000
V	5[1]	Department of Trade and Industry	International trade: export credit services, insurance of investment overseas (central services)	39,325	1,250	38,075
XI	5	Lord Chancellor's Department	Administration of justice: England and Wales	129,529	2,000	127,529
XII	3	Department of Education and Science	Universities, etc	1,714,201	95	1,714,106
XIX	13	Her Majesty's Treasury	Central management of the Civil Service: computers and telecommunications	18,084	293	17,791
XX	9[2]	Land Registry	Records, registrations and surveys	3	1	2
				—	3,639	—

[1] Capital expenditure on this vote is not classified as public expenditure.
[2] This was a token cash limit change to cover carryover of £97,000 taken in the form of increased appropriations-in-aid.

National Savings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the implications of a negative public sector borrowing requirement for the role of the national savings movement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the current role and objectives of the national savings movement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 March 1988]: There is no longer a voluntary national savings movement. The work is undertaken by the Department for National Savings. The Department's tasks are to contribute towards both the funding of Government borrowing and the refinancing of maturing stock through sales of a range of products to personal investors, and to continue to offer customers who have invested in national savings the best possible service within the resources available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Altnaheglish Reservoir

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the works recently completed at Altnaheglish reservoir.

Mr. Needham: The cost of the work was some £2·1 million, including professional fees.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail the principal works carried out to the Altnaheglish reservoir; by how much the height of the dam was increased; and by how much the storage capacity of the reservoir was increased in (a) gallons and (b) days supply.

Mr. Needham: The work at Altnaheglish included the strengthening of the dam by the construction of a series of terraces on the downstream side, the provision of a new spillway and the installation of new monitoring equipment.

The height of the dam has not been increased but the works have allowed the maximum water level to be raised some 5 m. This has increased the effective capacity of the reservoir by about 113 million gallons, which is equivalent to 23 days' consumption.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside of London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of 609 (24 per cent.) of the Department's 2,541 staff are employed at its Darlington office and a further 577 (23 per cent.) regionally based HMI and support staff are located at divisional and local offices throughout the country. Comparable detailed figures for the location of the 2,635 staff employed in 1979 are not available, but the proportions would be broadly similar.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 2 March at column 584. My Department occupies accommodation in eight buildings in the Greater London area ranging from its main HQ building at Elizabeth house to local offices for Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Up to the end of February 1988 my Department had received a total of eight requests. This figure was in line with our expectations. The fee charged by the Department, currently £8, will be reviewed towards the end of this year.

School Meals

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by local education authority (a) the amount of subsidy per child made by each local education authority in England and Wales for each school meal provided at the full price charged by the authority and (b) the charges made for school meals by local education authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Data relating to level of subsidy on school meals made by local education authorities are not collected centrally. The charges made for fixed-price school meals in LEAs in England are included in the Department's annual report on the school meals census, which is available in the Library of the House.

Matters relating to Wales are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated cost to local authorities of meeting, by 1 September 1991, the standards laid down in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981; whether he is making any special arrangements to meet those costs; and if he will make a statement on progress in meeting the provisional arrangements required by the regulations.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Table 16 of the survey of school buildings, published last November, presented the following national estimates of the cost of meeting statutory accommodation requirements and the main structural requirements most directly attributable to the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. Costs were shown in ranges because of the sampling error in grossing up from the survey data. The estimates must be treated with caution.

	Primary cost range £ million	Secondary cost range £ million
Statutory accommodation requirements (recreation area, playing fields teaching area, staff accommodation and other requirements)	240-450	150-300
Main structural requirements related to regulations (structure, roofs, walls, windows, heating and other essential services)	360-490	270-370

Notes:

1. The estimates relate to schools expected to remain on the same site, ie more than 80 per cent. of the sample.
2. Estimates were prepared by grossing up the sample to the total population of county and voluntary controlled schools. While the sample of 392 primary and 403 secondary schools is considered reasonably representative, the relative smallness of the sample means that the sampling error is considerable for many categories of cost.
3. The estimates are at November 1985 prices.

Since the survey was carried out in the early part of 1986, local authorities have undertaken a substantial number of projects to improve school buildings. The programme of capital expenditure which I announced in November last year should enable local education authorities and voluntary bodies to spend more than £750 million over the next three years on projects to improve school buildings, and authorities will no doubt make use of the flexibilities open to them—for example, through the use of capital receipts—to increase spending on improvements still further where they consider it appropriate to do so. Within the increased provision, I have allocated £55 million in 1988-89 specifically to help LEAs to tackle the accumulated deficiencies identified by the survey and to allow voluntary school governors to continue the programme of replacement and improvement begun last year. I have also increased provision for local authority spending on repairs and maintenance by about £120 million in 1988-89, some 40 per cent. above spending in 1985-86.

PRIME MINISTER

United States Aircraft and Nuclear Weaponry

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has given to (i) American senators who have recently visited Britain and (ii) representatives of the United States Administration about Her Majesty's Government's policy on accepting more United States aircraft and nuclear weaponry in Britain.

The Prime Minister: No decisions about NATO force adjustments have yet been taken. The United Kingdom, like its NATO allies, remains committed to preserving NATO's ability to respond effectively to aggression at whatever level it may occur, as was confirmed by the recent NATO summit.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act her office has received; what was her estimate of this number; whether she is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by her Department as a result; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office has received 22 subject access requests. Most of these have been from employees of the office who are not charged a fee. For other requests the standard fee of £10 is charged. The office did not expect a large number of requests and is not reconsidering the fee.

Royal College of Midwives

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter dated 4 February sent to her by the Newham branch of the Royal College of Midwives, together with any reply she has sent.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to give information on correspondence from third parties. I can, however, confirm that I have received such a letter and a reply will be sent in due course.

Official Inquiries

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all official inquiries initiated by Her Majesty's Government which were chaired by members of the House of Lords since 1981; and if she will give in each case the subject of the inquiry and its total cost to public funds.

The Prime Minister: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Northern Development Company

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what quantifiable evidence he has of the performance of the Northern Development Company.

Mr. Atkins: The Northern Development Company, to which my Department gives financial support, has recently published its corporate programme and budget for 1988-89. This document includes information on a number of output measures. More information will be available when the company publishes the annual report of its activities for the financial year 1987-88, which will be no later than September 1988.

Building Societies

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation amending the Financial Services Act to prohibit building societies from operating their own unit trusts.

Mr. Maude: No. The powers of building societies are defined under the Building Societies Act and not the Financial Services Act. My hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury announced on 2 February, at columns 537-39, certain extensions to these powers, including the power to manage unit trust schemes.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how much the Department of Trade and Industry will spend in the current financial year 1987-88 on advertising and promotion of the Department and its schemes;

(2) how much his Department spent in advertising and promotion in each financial year for 1978-79 to 1986-87;

(3) how much it is projected his Department will spend on advertising and promotion over the next three years.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 3 March 1988]: Information is not readily available for expenditure, other than centrally, nor for 1978-79, on advertising and promotion of my Department.

The figures which are available are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	0·85
1980-81	1·46
1981-82	2·20
1982-83	3·24
1983-84	2·72
1984-85	3·56
1985-86	2·09
1986-87	2·00
[1]1987-88	13·31

[1]Estimated.

Expenditure for the next three years has not yet been agreed. Its level will depend very much on the impact of present activities, which are being carefully and continuously monitored.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Gambling (Children)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he now proposes to seek to amend the legislation relating to local authorities powers to control slot machine gambling by children;

(2) what representation he has received regarding the law on local authorities' powers to control slot machine gambling by children;

(3) what surveys on slot machine gambling by children he has received since 1 July 1987, other than the recently published survey by the Spectrum Children's Trust of Taunton.

Mr. John Patten: We have received the results of a number of surveys or inquiries of that nature in this field. Some are based on the direct questioning of young people about their use of amusement machines. Others have taken the views and experience of persons and interests concerned, such as local authorities, licensing justices, the police and probation services, teachers and education authorities, those who provide the machines and other traders, individuals and organisations concerned with people with problems of gambling addiction, and research bodies. The sources of the surveys include:

The Association of Chief Officers of Probation; the Amusement Arcade Action Group; the Gordon House Association; the Association of Chief Police Officers of England, Wales and Northern Ireland; Parents of Young Gamblers; HJM Caterers Ltd.; Thomas Organisation Ltd; Birmid Leisure Ltd.; Wilson Leisure Ltd.; Stardust Leisure Ltd.; Countgrade Ltd.; Kendor Entertainments Ltd.; Showboat Holdings Ltd.; JCM Holdings (Yorkshire) Ltd.; Shipley and Sons; the Magistrates' Association; the Centre for Leisure Research; the National Council on Gambling; Mr. Neil Farmer; the Devon Branch of the Magistrates' Association; the National Housing and Town Planning Council; and the British Amusement Catering Trades Association.

In addition, we have received the results of research which the Home Office research unit commissioned of Carrick James Market Research Ltd. and the Susie Fisher Group, and the report of a programme of visits to amusement arcades by the inspectors of the Gaming Board. Other material sent in response to our review of the law on amusement arcades may take account of surveys which are not explicitly referred to.

In the course of the review we have received a range of representations about the powers of local authorities to grant or refuse permits for premises having amusement-with-prizes machines, or otherwise to control such premises. Some of these representations are to the effect that the current law is adequate, and that additional controls would limit unnecessarily the provision and use of the machines and premises where they are found. The focus of representations that the law should be amended concern the suggestion that young people may become addicted to playing the machines, and that this may lead to anti-social or criminal behaviour. The suggestion most frequently made in these representations is that access to places providing the machines or use of the machines themselves should be restricted to people aged over 16 or 18 years. It has been variously suggested that such a restriction should be imposed nationally, or be within the power of local authorities, or that of the licensing Justices.

We hope to be able to reach conclusions on our review of these issues in due course.

Motorways (Vehicle Removal)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by the Metropolitan police when approving businesses for the removal of vehicles from motorways.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that garages are selected for removal work on the basis of proximity to the motorway. Garages are approved only if they provide a 24-hour service, can deal with vehicles of any age or condition, and have secure storage facilities.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by the Metropolitan police when deciding which approved business to call when arranging the removal of vehicles from motorways.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police select the garage nearest to the motorway junction which will give quickest access to the incident. Where that garage cannot provide immediate service the next nearest will be selected.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the businesses approved, with date of approval, by the Metropolitan police for removal of vehicles from the M3 via junction 1 and from the M25 via junctions 13, 14 and 15.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided the following information:

Location	Vehicle type	Approved garage	Date of approval
M3, junction 1
Westbound, junction 1 to river and eastbound, junction 2 to junction 1	Heavy goods vehicles	1. National Rescue Group, Rescue House, Unit T151, Brooklands Industrial Park, Oyster Lane, Byfleet, Surrey	June 1984
		2. Radley Autos, Central Garage, High Street, Harmondsworth, Middlesex	July 1976
		3. Commercial Recovery and Repairs, 10 Ascot Road, Clockhouse Lane Estate, Bedfont, Middlesex	December 1969
Westbound, junction 1 to river, and eastbound, junction 2 to junction 1	Cars, motorcycles, etc.	1. Grimshaw and Wake Ltd., Oldfield Road, Hampton, Middlesex	February 1984
		2. Ashford Coachworks, Ashford Road, Ashford, Middlesex	September 1985
M25, junctions 13, 14 and 15
Northbound, junctions 13-15 and southbound, junctions 15-13	Heavy goods vehicles	1. National Rescue Group (see above)
		2. Radley Autos (see above)
Northbound, junctions 13-15	Cars, motorcycles, etc	1. Ashford Coachworks, Bell Weir Garage, Wraysbury, Middlesex	April 1987
		2. National Rescue Group (see above)
Southbound, junctions 15-13		1. Radley Autos (see above)
		2. Hounslow West Motors, 343 Staines Road, Hounslow, Middlesex	November 1970

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often during (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 each approved business was called by the Metropolitan police to remove vehicles from the M3 motorway via junction 1, and from the M25 motorway via junctions 13, 14 and 15.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prisons (Night Sanitation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison places it is anticipated will lack access to night sanitation by the end of 1999.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is anticipated that 14,500 places will lack access to night sanitation by the end of 1999. By then 12 establishments now without night sanitation should have facilities for all inmates, and a further nine establishments for some inmates.

Semi-automatic Rifles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he estimates will be the cost of the semi-automatic rifle compensation — buy back programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the debate on the money resolution in connection with the Firearms (Amendment) Bill on 1 March at columns 939-47.

Home Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the home defence exercise which is planned to take place in March or April to train Government staff in north-east England home defence region No. 2; what number and grades of officials from each Department will participate in the exercise; and which local government staff, public and private utility staff and staff from other agencies with designated war appointments will take part in the exercise.

Mr. John Patten: A limited exercise, called REGEX, is due to take place within home defence region No. 2 in April 1988. Its aim is to test the procedures for the operation of regional government headquarters in wartime. About 50 designated staff of various grades will be taking part, drawn from a number of Departments and public services, including the police and fire services and the armed forces.

Parole

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the past five years, how many life sentence prisoners convicted of murder held in British gaols have received parole in (a) the third, (b) the fourth, and (c) the fifth year of their sentence, indicating what minimum sentences had been recommended by courts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is given in the table. All these prisoners were released on licence following a favourable recommendation by the parole board and after consultation with the judiciary as required by section 61 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967. None had been the subject of a formal minimum recommendation under section 1(2) of the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965.

More detailed information about all life sentence prisoners is given annually in "Prison Statistics — England and Wales" table 1(f) of the latest issue, for 1986 (Cm. 210), a copy of which is in the Library.

Persons serving sentences for murder released on licence between 1983 and 1987 from prison department establishments in England and Wales having served five years or less under sentence in such establishments.

Time under sentence[1]	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Up to 2 years	—	—	—	—	—
Over 2, up to 3 years	—	—	—	—	1
Over 3, up to 4 years	1	—	—	—	—
Over 4, up to 5 years	—	3	1	1	1

[1] Excluding any time spent on remand in custody, in non-prison department establishments or following any subsequent recall.

Downing Street (Access)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority the Metropolitan police have established a permanent road block to prohibit free access to Downing street.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner has advised me that his officers restrict access to Downing street in pursuance of their common law duty to prevent crime and disorder.

Licensing Bill

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from English vineyard owners about the Licensing Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the report stage of the Licensing Bill, I have met representatives from the English Vineyard Association and we have received three letters from hon. Members representing vineyard owners in their constituencies, including one from my hon. Friend.

Local and Community Radio (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many new local and community radio stations are planned for Northern Ireland;

(2) what regulations will be introduced to cover the expansion of local and community radio in Northern Ireland so as to ensure (a) diversity, (b) balance of news and (c) balance of opinion.

Mr. Renton: It will be for the radio authority to decide how many licences should be awarded in Northern Ireland, having regard to the spectrum available and to criteria reflecting those in paragraph 7.23 of the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities". It will be a condition of all licences that news is presented with accuracy and impartiality.

IPEC '87

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he had as to the nations which would be represented at the IPEC '87 police and internal security equipment sales exhibition when he authorised participation by his Department; and what representations he intends to make to the exhibition organisers regarding the invitation list for the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The exhibition, which was organised by a private company, was open to the general public. I understand that IPEC 1988 is also being organised by a private company; the arrangements are a matter for them.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of (a) current cases and (b) cases in the past year involving allegations of abuse of the police national computer or any other police computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for the chief officer of the force concerned to investigate any reports of abuse of the police national computer or any other police computer. No reports on any such investigations have been received by the Home Office in the past year.

Electoral Registration Officers

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what clarification and guidance he issues to electoral registration officers in pursuance of their statutory obligation under section 53 of the Representation of the People Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Advice on the exercise of their responsibilities under the Representation of the People Acts and regulations is currently given to electoral registration officers in the Home Office RPA circular No. 296 of 20 November 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now list the other recent incidents referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 10 December 1987, Official Report, column 235, relating to firearms control.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The incidents referred to are as follows:

Plumstead on 9 July 1987
Wolverhampton on 6 October 1987
Bristol on 14 October 1987
Gunthorpe on 3 November 1987

Southall on 11 November 1987
Chard on 21 November 1987
Woolwich on 23 November 1987
Stowmarket on 26 November 1987

Independent Broadcasting Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make an announcement regarding a new chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Mr. Renton: An announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that no past or present member of the Conservative party will be appointed as the new chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Mr. Renton: No. The appointment will be made on the basis of personal distinction, experience and ability, not of political affiliation.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what anti-drug training has been given to Panamanian personnel in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Five Panamanian anti-drugs officers completed a course in narcotics detection at the Lancashire constabulary dog training school at Preston between April and June 1987.

TV-am

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what evidence he has about the extent of foreign shareholding in TV-am over the past three years;

(2) whether he has conducted an inquiry into the extent of foreign shareholding in TV-am over the past three years;

(3) what steps he has taken to monitor whether TV-am has been in breach of its responsibilities under the Broadcasting Act 1981 during the past three months with regard to the quality and extent of its news coverage.

Mr. Renton: It is for the IBA to secure that disqualified persons, including companies based or controlled from outside the European Community, do not become or continue as ITV contractors, and to judge contractors' adherence to their contracts in regard to programming. I understand that three shareholdings above 5 per cent. in TV-am may themselves have been controlled from outside the Community.

Microwave Video Distribution

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has conducted an inquiry into the feasibility and development of a microwave video distribution system.

Mr. Renton: A feasibility study into the technical and financial prospects for MVDS (Multipoint Video Distribution Systems) was commissioned by the Home Department and the Department of Trade and Industry as announced on 14 October 1987.

Television Franchises

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any evidence from (a) the Independent Broadcasting Authority, and (b) the Independent Television Association about the feasibility of auctioning independent television franchises in 1992.

Mr. Renton: The comments of the authority and the association on the report of the Peacock committee both express views about the recommendation that ITV contracts should be awarded by competitive tender.

Missing Cats

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to chief constables to the effect that records should be kept of cases of missing cats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Cats and Dogs (Experiments)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards are applied by universities to ensure that cats and dogs used for the purpose of experiments are owned by, or have been legally obtained by those who supply them: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Controls on the source of commonly used laboratory animals, including the specific provision that cats and dogs are obtained only from the designated breeding establishments at which they were bred, are contained in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. They will be brought into force in January 1990, as part of the phased programme of implementation of the provisions of the Act.

It has long been the practice of Home Office inspectors to encourage laboratories to obtain supplies of animals only from reputable and legal sources and to take particular care where cats and dogs are involved. This advice was reinforced recently in additional guidance issued to laboratories including those at universities.

Young Offenders (Custody)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 14-year-old males and 15-year-old females were sentenced to a period of custody by the courts in England and Wales during each year since 1982.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The information held centrally, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table.

Males aged 14 and females aged 15 given custodial sentences[1] England and Wales

Sex and age	Number
Males aged 14
1982	1,034
1983	919
1984	863
1985	830
1986	578
Females aged 15

Sex and age	Number
1982	16
1983	33
1984	32
1985	34
1986	15

[1] Detention centre order, borstal training (up to May 1983), youth custody (from May 1983) and detention under section 53 of Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Light Dues

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to which European Economic Community countries levy light dues on fishing vessels.

Mr. Gummer: Comparison with practices elsewhere in the European Community is not appropriate. Following the transfer of the cost of the Racal Decca navigator system to the general lighthouse fund, the Government decided that larger fishing vessels should make a contribution to the fund. Under these arrangements, fishing vessel owners are better off because the fishing vessel light dues are generally less than the hire charge made under the previous system.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: During the period 11 November 1987 to 29 February 1988, my Department has received 114 requests for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act. It had been estimated that during this period, in the order of 400 requests might be received. This estimate has been calculated from an assumed annual access rate of 0·1 per cent. of the estimated populations covered by the 40 registrations made by my Department. I am not at present reconsidering the subject access fee charged by my Department.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 29 December 1987, why in the light of the fact that his Department first became aware on 30 June 1986 of the high level of rainfall over west Yorkshire following the Chernobyl accident, no intensive monitoring of sheep for radioactivity was undertaken in the Skipton area until November 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As I said in my replies to the hon. Member on 29 January 1988, Official Report, column 421, and 10 February, Official Report, column 240, the significance of receipt of rainfall data from the Meteorological Office was superseded by the use of results of surveys of actual deposition and of monitoring. These did not indicate any need for intensive activity in Yorkshire. The activity that was undertaken in November 1987 was in response to local public concern following local newspaper reports. Although that exercise did result in the detection of marginally elevated levels in two sheep at one location on the moorland near Skipton, it also confirmed the earlier conclusion that there was no unacceptable risks to food supplies in west Yorkshire as a result of the Chernobyl fall-out.

Quarantine

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) for each year since 1980, how many prosecutions have been brought against (a) United Kingdom residents and (b) United Kingdom visitors for attempting to evade United Kingdom quarantine laws.

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report for each month over the last three years the number of animals in quarantine in the United Kingdom;

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 2 March 1988]: The information provided relates to the rabies quarantine controls. The details of prosecutions brought by the local authorities and notified to my Department are:

	Number of prosecutions	of which:
		British citizens	Foreign citizens	Airlines etc.
1980	75	13	45	17
1981	74	21	42	11
1982	52	10	32	10
1983	73	20	40	13
1984	29	5	23	1
1985	77	21	49	7
1986	75	20	51	4
1987	42	9	26	7

Information about the number of animals in quarantine in the United Kingdom each month over the last three years cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. However, during the last three years the following import licences have been issued for animals subject to the rabies quarantine requirements:

Number of import licences issued	1985	1986	1987
dogs	4,630	4,738	5,249
cats	2,527	2,329	2,927
other mammals	28,195	39,193	95,999

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what special measures have been proposed to ensure that animals cannot enter the United Kingdom either illegally or accidentally (a) while the Channel tunnel is being constructed and (b) when the Channel tunnel has been opened.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 2 March 1988]: Eurotunnel has agreed to take measures to prevent animals gaining access to this country through the Channel tunnel during the period of construction and also when it is in use. These include the use of sealed trains, the installation of physical barriers and grids at entry and exit points, regular inspections, rigorous cleaning programmes, the continuous deployment of baited traps in both tunnel and terminal areas and facilities to detain and inspect animals. Discussions on the details and specifications are still in progress. The Government will insist on diligent application of these safeguards to ensure that they are fully effective.

Customs and Excise officials will carry out checks, as they do at other ports of entry, to prevent the illegal importation of animals through the tunnel.

DEFENCE

Redundant Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has considered scuttling redundant nuclear submarines in order to dispose of them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of options for the disposal of reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines are under consideration. Disposal at sea is one of these.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce a decision on his Department's plans for disposing of the submarine HMS Dreadnought.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Valiant Class Submarines

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Royal Navy's Valiant class submarines to be phased out of service.

Mr. Sainsbury: The planned decommissioning dates of Royal Navy vessels are classified.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's progress on proposals for disposing of the Valiant class of submarines once they become redundant.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Airships

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretry of State for Defence whether his Department has commissioned any studies into the performance of airships as airborne early warning systems for the protection of the naval fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: This proposition has been evaluated.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take, following the recent judgment at Reading Crown court relating to RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The implications of the judgment will be considered in the light of the legal advice that I have requested. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as conclusions are reached.

Shackleton Aircraft (Crashes)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nature of all crashes involving Royal Air Force Shackleton aircraft since 1968; if he will indicate in each case if the aircraft was on anti-submarine patrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1968, there have been only two major accidents to Royal Air Force Shackleton aircraft. On 1 April 1968, an aircraft crashed on landing at RAF Ballykelly after a routine training sortie. On 19 April 1968, another Shackleton from RAF Ballykelly flew into the ground in Northern Ireland during an anti-submarine exercise.

Nuclear Weapons (Safety Devices)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use Her Majesty's Government make of electronic safety lock devices to deter the unathorised use of nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the details of the arrangements which exist to prevent any unauthorised use of nuclear weapons.

Buccaneer Aircraft

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents involving Buccaneer aircraft since 1977, together with the route being flown in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 January 1977 and 31 December 1979 there were six accidents to Royal Air Force Buccaneer aircraft, classified as major (category 4 or 5) accidents:

Date	Location
3 February 1977	Vokel, FRG
4 April 1977	Claerwen Reservoir, Wales
8 August 1977	Laarbruch, FRG
31 October 1977	Glomfjorden, Norway
21 June 1978	Nordholz, FRG
12 July 1979	Furstenau, FRG

Since 1 January 1977, there have also been 23 accidents classified as category 3 (repairable locally). It would not be possible to list these without disproportionate cost and effort. Nor would it be possible to identify the routes flown by all these aircraft before the accidents without disproportionate cost and effort. However, since 1980, there have been placed in the Library of the House summaries of the findings of RAF boards of inquiry into all major Buccaneer accidents.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of all accidents to nuclear-capable Tornado aircraft since 1983; and what was the risk to the public from each accident.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1983, 40 Royal Air Force Tornados have been involved in serious accidents. Of these, 25 were classified as category 3 (repairable locally). A further 15 Tornados suffered major or irreparable damage. All major accidents are listed in the appropriate Statement on Defence Estimates. In addition, since 1980, there have been placed in the Library of the House summaries of the findings of RAF boards of inquiry into all major RAF Tornado accidents. No civilians have ever been killed or injured as a result of an RAF Tornado accident.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nature of the 135 accidents to Royal Air Force Jaguar nuclear-capable aircraft between June 1975 and June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The detailed information requested by the hon. Member could not be produced in the time available without disproportionate cost and effort. Most of the Royal Air Force Jaguars involved in serious accidents during this period were repaired at local RAF stations, but 49 such aircraft suffered irreparable damage or were lost. Since 1980 summaries of the findings of RAF boards of inquiry into all major Jaguar accidents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Military Equipment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of United Kingdom military production is exported.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 26 February 1988]: No precise figures are available but it is estimated that 20 to 25 per cent. of United Kingdom production of identifiable military equipment in the years 1984 to 1986 was exported.

EMPLOYMENT

Deaf People

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are taken to ensure that communicators provided under the communication services for the deaf scheme are competent in communication skills with deaf people.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission requires that all communicators working with trainees meet the appropriate level of competence established by the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People and the Scottish Association of Interpreters for the Deaf.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost per trainee of providing communication support under the communication service for the deaf.

Mr. Cope: Information about the average cost of providing communication support is not readily available. However, communication support is provided for a maximum of 500 hours per trainee over a two-year YTS scheme. Managing agents are reimbursed for communicators at rates of £6·50, £8 or £12 per hour, according to their level of skill in communicating. Since the communication service for the deaf was introduced in April 1986, a total of 172 trainees have received communication support, at a total cost of £234,472 to date.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to publicise the communication service for the deaf.

Mr. Cope: The communication service for the deaf (CSD) is publicised to all YTS managing agents and referral agencies and to other interested parties by means of MSC codes of practice on special training needs and equal opportunities and also by articles in a number of periodicals. MSC and employment service staff also take every opportunity to promote CSD to training providers and deaf people. MSC officials are currently considering the need for any further publicity.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the statistics on wages councils' employment and compliance with wages council rates in 1987, in the same format used in the reply on 5 May 1987, Official Report, columns 334 to 340.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the tables.

Adult Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed adults will still be entitled to choose to study under the 21-hour rule after the adult training scheme is launched; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The introduction of the new adult training programme from September 1988 will not affect the position of people who choose to study under the DHSS's 21-hour rule.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether a decision to undertake to study under the 21-hour rule is treated as a positive outcome after a restart interview; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will include the option of studying under the 21-hour rule as one of the means of opportunities offered in the course of restart interviews.

Mr. Cope: So long as they remain available for work the option to pursue a course of study within the terms of the "21-hour rule" may be considered an appropriate way of helping unemployed people back into work. In such circumstances it would be regarded as a positive outcome of a restart interview.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people are currently studying under the 21-hour rule.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether individuals who join a job club are counted as unemployed in the unemployment figures.

Mr. Nicholls: Those people who are registered as unemployed when they join a job club remain on the register and are included in the unemployment figures.

Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, under the Government's proposals for training for the unemployed, how many (a) single persons and (b) married men are expected to receive (i) more and (ii) less than the present £67 per week average paid under the existing community programme; what percentages these are of the total; and if he will give a breakdown according to whether persons will gain or lose by multiples of £5 a week.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 1 March 1988]: I regret the information requested is not available as it has not been possible to estimate the numbers of trainees who will receive particular amounts in the new programme.

Participants in the new programme will be paid an allowance at the rates recommended by the Manpower Services Commission. These payments will not be subject to income tax or national insurance contributions. All participants will be better off than they would be if they remain unemployed. Many will also be better off than they would have been on the £67 average wage paid on the community programme; such wages are of course subject to deductions for income tax and national insurance contributions.

The new training programme will replace not only the community programme but all the Government's training programmes for unemployed adults. In the large majority of cases, payments to trainees on the new programme will be at least as high as those on the existing programmes.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads (Pedestrian Safety)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to improve the safety of pedestrians intending to cross trunk roads; whether he has consulted the Ramblers Association on such matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most appropriate means of securing pedestrians' safety will depend on the characteristics of the road concerned and the needs of all who use it. We are always happy to have the views of the Ramblers Association on any particular problem spots and on safety generally.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his meeting on 17 February with the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, and in the light of the proposal given by the United States Government to the British embassy in Washington on 19 February, when formal negotiations are to commence on the prospects for increased United States carrier access to Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have requested an early meeting with the United States Government. We await their reply.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to whether the definition of time zero in the "Net Safety Benefit Analysis" (Civil Aviation Authority Paper 87017) equations refer to the time of ignition, the time the aircraft contacted the ground or the time the evacuation could have started;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to the way in which it obtained an accurate indication of the time at which the first and last survivors evacuated the aircraft in each of the 20 accidents examined in detail in the "Net Safety Benefit Analysis" (Civil Aviation Authority Paper 87017);

(3) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to why the only improvement which is allowed to extend the time available for successful evacuation in the "Net Safety Benefit Analysis" (Civil Aviation Authority Paper 87017) equation is the installation of fire-blocking layers;

(4) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to why the "Net Safety Benefit Analysis" (Civil Aviation Authority Paper 87017) does not take into account the presence before flashover of hydrogen fluoride, hydrogen chloride and cyanide toxic fumes in the equations;

(5) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to the basis on which it aligned the time at which the last survivor exited the cabin to the time the cabin environment became non-survivable in the equations for the "Net Safety Benefit Analysis" (Civil Aviation Authority Paper 87017).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to the hon. Member.

Panama Canal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the number of British-owned ships using the Panama canal in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of United Kingdom flag vessels using the Panama canal over the five-year period from September 1981 to September 1986 is in the table below. British-owned vessels that do not fly the United Kingdom flag cannot be identified separately and are not included in the figures given below. The source of the information is the Panama Canal Commission's annual reports.

	Number
September 1981-September 1982	844
September 1982-September 1983	718

	Number
September 1983-September 1984	623
September 1984-September 1985	503
September 1985-September 1986	484

We continue to keep the situation concerning the canal under review in close consultation with British shipping interests.

Motorways

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with constructing and improving motorways in the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motorway developments continue to form a key element of the national road programme. They are large discrete projects and the progress of starts and completions is not necessarily a regular flow.

The connection of the M42 to the M5 for southbound traffic, opened in March 1987, was the most recent new section of motorway to be completed.

Extensive work is in progress. This includes widening six miles of the M25 between Chertsey and Staines to four lanes, and five miles of the M5 between Warndon and Rashwood to three lanes, as well as construction of the five-mile Portwood-Denton section of the Manchester motorway box and the systematic improvement of its older sections, including the installation of modern signalling. The Warwick section of the 59-mile extension of the M40 was started last summer and the first contract for the Banbury bypass section was let last month. We expect to start the Gaydon section, between the other two, in the summer.

Work will start shortly on new climbing lanes for slow heavy vehicles which will help to ease congestion on the M62, eastbound between junctions 21 and 22, and westbound between junctions 24 and 25.

We plan to start construction during the next 12 months of schemes to extend the M3 from Compton, south of Winchester to the M27, and to fill the 14-mile gap in the M20 between Maidstone and Ashford which will be the principal route to and from the Channel tunnel.

Motor Cycle Noise

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards the introduction of regulations under the Motor Cycle Noise Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is circulating for comment draft regulations to be made under this Act, for which my hon. Friend deserves much credit. The regulations will require all replacement motorcycle exhausts and silencers offered for sale to be marked to show that they are identical to the original equipment or that they conform to British Standard AU 193 or that they are not for use on public roads.

In view of the European Commission's recent proposals for a Community directive on replacement silencers for motorcycles we have made it clear that we shall amend the regulations to implement this directive as soon as it is adopted by the Council.

Those regulations will enable us to curb an important source of excessive motorcycle noise.

Dual Speed Invalid Carriage

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to consult on draft regulations to introduce a dual speed invalid carriage.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport has today issued a consultation document. The vehicle we hope to introduce is an additional class of "invalid carriage" that would be able to travel at a speed of up to 8 mph on the carriageway, with the restriction remaining at 4 mph on the footway. Copies of the consultation document are available from:

Lorry Weighings

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the records of lorry weighings which it is proposed to undertake under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Bill [Lords] also be used as a basis upon which the law relating to the overloading of lorries on the highway is enforced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The Department's consultative document No. 7, issued on 23 December 1987, proposed the individual weighing of all lorries before loading on to class II and II(A) ro-ro passenger ferries. This will be for the purpose of ferry loading and safety and will apply only to lorries joining outbound ferries. To enforce the lorry weight limits using this information it would be necessary to prove retrospectively in a court of law that a vehicle which had entered a port to join a ferry had travelled on the highway in an overloaded condition. Inbound vehicles checked at ferry ports and found to be overweight are prohibited from leaving until the overload is adjusted.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Central America

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the San Jose IV conference on Central America in Hamburg.

Mr. Eggar: The successful outcome of the San Jose conference is recorded in the economic and political declarations, copies of which I will place in the Library of the House as soon as possible. The conference was a valuable opportunity for the Twelve to discuss the peace process with the Central American and Contadora countries. The Community's support for peace is clearly shown by the commitment to take additional measures to assist the region.

European Foundation Treaty

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the aims of the European Foundation treaty; and what information he has on the Dutch refusal to ratify it.

Mr. Eggar: The aims of the European Foundation, which the 10 then members of the European Community agreed to establish in 1982, were to promote European consciousness by various means including cultural activity. The Dutch Government have recently announced that they have been unable to ratify the agreement because of opposition in their Upper House. Without ratification by all the signatories, the foundation cannot come into existence.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The diplomatic and aid wings together have so far received 26 requests for subject access, all from present or former members of staff: this figure is in line with forecasts of likely numbers of applications. There is no proposal to change the arrangements for charges set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 30 October 1987 at column 478.

Royal Navy Submarines (Scuttling)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have received any representations from the Irish Government concerning proposals for the scuttling of Royal Navy submarines in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Irish Government have made representations about the disposal of HMS Dreadnought. No decisions have yet been taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines. A number of options are being considered, including disposal at sea. But there is no question of disposal in the Irish sea.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of loan applications from Panama to international banking agencies upon which the United Kingdom is represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: It is for the management of the multilateral development banks in the first instance to consider and appraise such applications. It is our policy to consider loan proposals on their technical and economic merits in accordance with the articles of the organisations concerned.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests have been received from the Panamanian authorities for anti-terrorist training in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: As a matter of standard practice, any such request from a foreign Government would be treated as confidential.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects that Her Majesty's Government will acknowledge acting President Palma as the new head of state of Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We recognise states, not Governments, in accordance with common international doctrine. The question of acknowledgement does not therefore arise. The European Community issued a statement on 2 March expressing deep concern at recent developments in Panama and appealing to the present rulers of Panama to open the way for internal peace and democracy.

El Salvador

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will be sending observers to the forthcoming legislative and municipal elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We have accepted an invitation from the Salvadorean Government to observe the legislative and municipal elections in El Salvador on 20 March. Dr. David Browning, lecturer in geography at the university of Oxford has been appointed as the official Government observer. He will report his findings to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary.

SCOTLAND

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations took place on the decision to ban the sale and export of Skoal Bandits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have announced that they are proposing to prohibit the supply of certain types of oral tobacco product, but in accordance with the requirements of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, under which the regulations would be made, are first consulting those whose interests would appear to be substantially affected by the proposal. Those consulted have been given to 26 May to make representations. Only after those representations have been received and considered will the Government decide their course of action.

Cancer Screening

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what screening facilities are available in each health board area for the early detection of ovarian cancer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no proven screening test for ovarian cancer which can be applied to a particular population.

ENVIRONMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: By 1 March 1988 my Department — including PSA had received 381 subject access requests. No prior estimate of this number had been made and I have no plans to reconsider the level of the fee charged.

Water Bills

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington, Official Report, 9 February, columns 127-8, on what basis the national average figures for household bills for water supply for 1982-83 to 1987-88 have been calculated to produce a figure lower than both the English average and the Welsh figure.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of Wednesday 2 March at columns 583-6.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the leak inquiry in relation to the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: It is not the practice to comment on such matters.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of how much of the material for which Nirex is currently seeking a repository (a) has originated or (b) will originate (i) in the United Kingdom, (ii) in Scotland and (iii) outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 25 February 1988]: UK Nirex Ltd is responsible for identifying a suitable location for a deep underground repository for the disposal of low-level (LLW) and intermediate-level (ILW) radioactive wastes. I understand from UK Nirex that there are at present 41,800 cu m of ILW stored in the United Kingdom pending disposal of Nirex's repository. Ten per cent. of this ILW originated in Scotland and less than 3 per cent. from outside the United Kingdom. Some of the latter is returnable. Nirex expect to dispose of about 1 million cu m of LLW and about 0.3 million cu m of ILW in their repository by 2030. Eleven per cent. of the LLW and 10 per cent. of the ILW is expected to come from Scotland, and 1.4 per cent. of the ILW from outside the United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Trent RHA

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were employed by Trent regional health authority on adminstrative duties in each year since 1982.

Mr. Currie: The table sets out the information requested. It excludes staff employed by district health authorities. I understand that the sharp changes in numbers of staff in 1983, 1985 and 1986 are due to transfers of functions (and staff) between the region and its districts and vice versa. The NHS in the Trent region employs more than 75,000 people (whole-time equivalents).

Crewe DHA

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate in cost terms the expenditure of the Crewe district health authority for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Following is information derived from the annual accounts of the Crewe district health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982:

	Revenue Expenditure £000	Capital Expenditure £000
1982-83	30,337	2,436
1983-84	32,185	2,425
1984-85	34,193	3,063
1985-86	36,011	1,264
1986-87	38,619	922

Notes:
1. The figures for capital expenditure include sums in respect of schemes within the district recorded in the annual accounts of the Mersey regional health authority. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the latter authority for the region as a whole is excluded
2. Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health district formed part of the Cheshire area health authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.

Pensioners

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met representatives of pensioners' organisations; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Scott: I last met representatives of pensioners' organisations on 22 February at a conference, "Winter of Action on Cold Homes", when the discussion covered state provision for the elderly and other groups.

I expect to accompany my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister when she meets a delegation from the National Pensioners' Convention on 10 March.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply on 1 February, Official Report, column 488, showing planned social fund expenditure for 1989-90 and 1990-91, what is the planned gross outlay on loans, the amount set aside for contingencies, the total planned expenditure from the social fund and the cost of administration for each of those years, and for 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: The gross national budget for payments from the discretionary part of the social fund for 1988-89 was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 23 November 1987 at column 84. The salary costs (including employer's national insurance contributions) of the administration of the discretionary part of the social fund will be £37 million in 1988-89. Details of the gross budget, the level of the contingency reserve and staffing levels for future years will be considered in the light of experience.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what help will be given to claimants if, despite the best endeavours of the social fund offices, a local office budget becomes fully spent before the end of the year.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers will be expected to manage their budgets flexibly over the course of the year to meet the highest priority needs whenever they occur. A model profile of expected expenditure on a month by month basis has been drawn up at national level to assist in planning expenditure. Local office managers may adjust the national profile to reflect particular local factors. Monthly profiles are indicative only and will not be operated as fixed monthly budgets. A central contingency reserve of £2 million has been set aside to make provision for unforeseen and unforeseeable demands.

RPI (Error)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the total amount of payments now made following the error in the calculation of the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: Special payments should by now have been made to around 12 million people, some of whom will have received more than one payment. We estimate the amount disbursed to be about £98 million.

In-patients

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for each year since 1979 the average length of in-patient stay in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland;

(2) what was the average length of stay in acute hospitals for each year since 1979 in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mrs. Currie: The available information for England is given in the table. Statistics for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Teaching Hospitals

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much costs per patient in London teaching hospitals and provincial teaching hospitals exceed average costs per patient in non-teaching hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Costing returns submitted to the Department for major hospitals in teaching disricts show average costs per patient for 1986-87 as in the table, which includes national averages for these types of hospitals. Costs of hospitals administered by the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals are not included.

	In-patients		Out-patients		A and E patients
	Cost per in-patient day £	Cost per case £	Cost per attendance £	Cost per new case £	Cost per attendance £	Cost per new case £
Acute hospitals (over 300 beds): London teaching districts	133·91	1,138·93	37·86	174·32	22·80	27·82

Acute hospitals (over 300 beds): Provincial teaching districts	114·97	855·45	28·38	128·75	23·25	27·94
Mainly acute hospitals: Provincial teaching districts	90·43	813·13	29·36	137·46	19·69	25·28
Acute hospitals (over 300 beds): England	107·32	767·53	29·37	127·00	20·89	25·55
Mainly acute hospitals: England	85·92	763·79	26·05	111·20	19·76	24·84

Notes:
1. Costs for hospitals in London teaching districts will include London weighting staff costs.
2. Costs are not adjusted for variations in case-mix between hospitals. Teaching hospitals will tend to attract a different case-mix from non-teaching hospitals so that direct comparison may be misleading.

Free Milk

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the eligibility of playgroups, child-minders and nurseries to receive free milk.

Mrs. Currie: Children under five attending approved nursery schools and playgroups, or a registered childminder, are entitled to receive one third of a pint of free milk, or, in the case of children less than one year old, dried baby milk made up to provide one third of a pint, on each day of attendance. These arrangements will not be affected by the changes in social security provisions coming into effect in April.

Census Forms

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for the 1991 census forms to include a question asking if the respondent speaks a Celtic language; and asking him to identify that language.

Mrs. Currie: A question which would ascertain the number of people speaking a Celtic language is being considered, as are many other suggestions. However, no decisions have yet been taken on the content of the 1991 census; proposals will be published as a White Paper later this year.

Breast Cancer (Deaths)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of women who have died of breast cancer in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for the years 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table. Data for 1987 are not yet available.

Operating Theatre Sessions (Wakefield)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the number of operating theatre sessions cancelled between March and June 1986 owing to the unavailability of consultants in the Wakefield district health authority; which consultants were involved; what reasons were given for their unavailability; what action has been taken to prevent a recurrence; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Management of operating theatres is a matter for individual health authorities and the information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach the chairman of Wakefield health authority for the information he seeks.

Wakefield was one of the authorities mentioned in the recent Comptroller and Auditor General's report on the use of operating theatres which was the subject of a Public Accounts Committee hearing on 29 February. A copy of the report is in the Library; the minutes of evidence will be published in due course. I understand that since the NAO study the health authority has taken action designed to increase utilisation rates.

Brighton Health Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of the number of beds provided by Brighton health authority for each year since 1979, and the number of projected beds to be offered through Brighton health authority for each year until 1994.

Mrs. Currie: The information available is given in the table.

Information on projected bed levels in district health authorities is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Brighton health authority who may be able to provide this information.

The average daily number of available beds in Brighton health authority[1] each year since 31 December 1979 to 31 December 1986

Year	Average daily number of available beds
1979	1,896·2
1980	1,850·7
1981	1,769·5
1982	1,793·7
1983	1,802·8
1984	1,796·1
1985	1,704·2
1986	1,653·8

[1] Prior to 1982 the figures relate to Brighton health district which was part of the East Sussex area health authority.

During this period the throughput of patients treated per available bed rose from 16·7 to 25·8 and the total number of in-patients and day-patients treated rose from 33,806 to 46,023.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff were employed by the Brighton health authority in each of the following categories (a) medical, (b) nursing, (c) ancillary and (d) other support staffs.

Mrs. Currie: The figures shown in the table are the most recent available.

NHS staff in post Brighton health authority

At 30 September 1986	Whole time equivalents[1]
Medical and dental[2]	130
Nursing and midwifery[3]	2,340
Ancillary	760
Other support staff[4]	1,450
Total employed[2,3]	4,680

[1] Figures are independently rounded to nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.
[2] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff. Excludes consultants and senior registrars — these staff have their contracts with the regional health authority.
[3] Includes agency staff.
[4] Includes: professional and technical, works, maintenance, administrative and clerical, and ambulance staff.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide actual or projected figures of the level of revenue and capital expenditure by Brighton health authority, in each year from 1979 to 1994.

Mrs. Currie: The finance of Brighton health authority is a matter for the South East Thames regional health authority. However, I understand that the table provides the latest information derived from the annual accounts of the Brighton health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982.

	Revenue expenditure £000	Capital expenditure £000
1982-83	45,102	1,598
1983-84	49,133	3,283
1984-85	52,162	2,113
1985-86	55,475	2,139
1986-87	59,102	3,030

Notes
1. The figures for capital expenditure include sums in respect of schemes within the district recorded in the annual accounts of the South East Thames regional health authority. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the latter authority for the region as a whole is excluded.

2. Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health district formed part of the East Sussex area health authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.

3. Prior to 1 April 1985 Brighton health authority had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC) and the authority's expenditure for the years before that date includes elements relating to the FPC's administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

Information on future expenditure by Brighton health authority is not available.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate on a regional basis the number of myalgic encephalomyelitis sufferers; and how many of these are (a) women and (b) men.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the incidence of myalgic encephalomyelitis is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that myalgic encephalomyelitis is a recognised viral disease for National Health Service treatment.

Mrs. Currie: The National Health Service does recognise myalgic encephalomyelitis which can be a distressing and debilitating condition. However, there is not yet any generally agreed method of treatment, apart from rest.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make further resources available for medical research into the myalgic encephalomyelitis syndrome; and if he will list the current research activities being undertaken in medical establishments in both the private and public sector in this field, showing for how long research has been conducted.

Mrs. Currie: The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that although the council is not funding any research directly on myalgic encephalomyelitis, some of the work it is supporting on immune responses to muscle, nerve cells and related structures may be relevant to the understanding and treatment of the condition. The council is always willing to consider soundly-based scientific proposals for research in competition with other demands on its research funds.

Information on research not directly funded by Government agencies is not held centrally. However, I understand that since 1984 research on myalgic encephalomyelitis and related conditions has been carried out at St. Mary's medical school, London, and the regional virus laboratory, Ruchill hospital, Glasgow.

21-hour Rule

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will provide full details of the instructions given to local offices about how to interpret the 21-hour rule in individual cases.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance to adjudication officers on interpretation of the 21-hour rule is given in paragraphs 1287 to 1307 of the S manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

"Resourcing the National Health Service"

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will detail the alleged inaccuracies he has detected in the First Report of the Social Services Committee (H.C. 264-1) on "Resourcing the National Health Service"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I do not think it would be appropriate to anticipate the Government's formal response to the Select Committee, which we will of course be making in the usual way, by making a further statement at this stage. On a question of fact, however, I have already expressed my concern that the Committee's recommendation for an extra £95 million in respect of pay and price inflation in 1987-88 failed to take account of the additional £75 million announced by the Government on 16 December.

Benefit Disqualification

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the survey carried out by his Department entitled "Monitoring the Voluntary Unemployment Changes and the Extensions of the Period of Disqualification."

Mr. Portillo: I shall be placing a copy in the Library today.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the level of information and counselling provided by district health authorities to sufferers from sickle cell anaemia.

Mrs. Currie: Although we know of 12 NHS counselling centres in England, we cannot be sure we know of all screening and counselling services provided by DHAs.

The level of information and counselling provided by district health authorities is a matter for them to decide in the light of local needs and priorities.

Mental Nurses (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many registered mental nurses are employed in Northumberland health authority; what was the number in 1979; and what has been the percentage change.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 19 February 1988 c. 778]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply. The figures given referred to all nurses employed in the mental illness area of work.

The figures shown in the following table relate to all registered nurses employed in the mental illness area of work.

Remploy

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the last three years for which figures are available the amount of public subsidy given to Remploy; how this is calculated and structured; and whether any separate or designated subsidy is given to the Remploy surgical appliance division.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply.

The Government subsidy to Remploy for each of the last three years was as follows:

£ million

	Revenue subsidy	Capital loans	Total
1985-86	48·5	10·8	59·3
1986-87	47·9	9·2	57·1
1987-88	49·7	8·3	58·0

The level of subvention is agreed annually in negotiations between my Department and the company. The underlying principle is that the Government should meet that portion of the company's costs which cannot be covered by income generated through its trading activities. The company has been very successful in meeting the stringent financial targets agreed with the Government, and the level of Government revenue subsidy has declined by around £2 million in real terms over the last three years, while numbers of disabled workers employed have increased slightly.

There is no separate or designated subsidy for Remploy's surgical appliance division.

Single Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the date of the commissioner's hearing in the case referred to in his answers of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 445, and 1 February, Official Report, column 487, regarding payments for furniture where the claimant became the tenant or owner of an unfurnished home on the date of claim; when he expects to receive the decision; and what is the reason for the delay.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The hearing of the appeal in the case referred to took place before a commissioner on 15 October 1987. His decision was issued and sent to both parties on 26 February 1988. Decisions in these cases are matters for the commissioners in the exercise of their independent judicial function, and in 1987, 80 per cent. of decisions in oral hearings were issued within six weeks of the hearing date. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has asked for further information about the case referred to and will write to the hon. Member in due course.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 128

SESSION 1987–88

22nd February–4th March 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
